LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday, November 22, 1961, being the first day of the Third Session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of the Province of Ontario, for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable J. Keiller Mackay, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1961

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, having entered the House and, being seated upon the Throne, was then pleased to open the Session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. J. Keiller Mackay (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the legislative assembly of Ontario:

It is a great pleasure for me to welcome you to the Third Session of this Twenty-sixth Legislature. In extending to you this welcome I know that you would wish me to take cognizance of the retirement of the former Prime Minister who has given able and distinguished leadership to this House for the past 12 years and whose conscientious and unflagging efforts have made such a notable contribution to the economic well-being and development of this great province and its people. At the same time, I know you would wish to join in extending to the new Prime Minister and his associates our best wishes and prayers that they be guided in wisdom and righteousness in carrying out the heavy responsibilities they have assumed.

For the second consecutive year, the Legislature is commencing its session in the autumn in conformity with the pattern of last year. Hon. members will have ample opportunity to study, consider and discuss the government's financial and economic program, including the budget, the estimates of each department, new legislation and numerous other matters calculated to promote the growth and development of our province and the prosperity of our people.

As in past years, the government's program has been designed to achieve an economic climate conducive to industrial expansion and employment. The year 1961 has witnessed a strong resurgence of economic growth. The pace of economic activity has accelerated. One by one the major economic indicators have advanced to higher levels.

Ontario's gross provincial product has risen to an annual rate of $16 billion. The rate of unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis has declined since last February. Ontario's ratio of unemployment is well below the national average and substantially less than it has been in the last two years.

The manufacturing industries, which exercise such an important effect upon the health of the whole provincial, and, indeed, the national economy are now operating at record production levels. Despite the declining output of uranium and iron ore, the entire value of Ontario's mineral production will again approximate 1960's record of almost $1 billion. The output of our forest industries has increased. Despite a number of difficulties, housing construction is running well above that of last year. Agricultural output has risen. Exports have been increasing. An encouraging aspect of our economy is that public confidence has been well maintained, and that the broad economic picture suggests a continuance of growth and expansion throughout the coming year.

We cannot be complacent, however. The possible entry of the United Kingdom and other countries into the European economic community will introduce new stresses and strains. The price of progress must be unceasing attention to ways and means of improving quality and cutting costs.

The legislative, financial and economic program that will be presented to this House is the most comprehensive in our history. Among many other measures designed to promote the progress and economic well-being of our province, this program will include:

1. New methods to promote co-operation between industry, labour and government, and to increase production and employment;
2. New measures to expand agricultural and industrial research facilities;
3. A major increase in the province's assistance to education. Not only will grants to local school boards be increased, but larger contributions will be made to universities. Of great importance too will be the continued operation of the $200 million federal-provincial-municipal program to provide trade and technical school education for our growing industrial economy;

4. New measures to conserve and develop our natural resources;

5. An accelerated program of highways, parks and economic development in northern Ontario;

6. Measures to strengthen individual and family security;

7. Additional advances in mental health care and hospital services;

8. Action to improve the Emergency Measures Organization;

9. New federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements.

A comprehensive plan is being evolved to assist the economy in achieving a satisfactory rate of economic growth. My government is aware that there is no easy solution to our difficulties, or that it can provide some magic formula which, if taken in sufficient doses, would cause them to disappear. Since the task ahead requires the co-operation of all major groups in the economy, an advisory committee for economic development has been established, composed of men of wide experience in industry, labour and government. Among the sub-committees to be established under the new advisory committee will be one to study the special problems of northern Ontario.

In addition, legislation will be introduced to merge The Department of Economics and The Department of Commerce and Development under the title of The Department of Economics and Development. This will permit a closer integration of the work of The Department of Economics, which studies economic conditions and trends, with the work of The Department of Commerce and Development, which places special emphasis upon industrial promotion. Increased emphasis is to be placed upon industrial research, with the result that the work of the Ontario Research Foundation will be expanded.

Plans for the development of additional supplies of power and energy in all parts of the province will be placed before you. The 100,000 kilowatt thermal generating unit at the Thunder Bay station in Fort William is to be brought into service early in 1962. Progress is being made on the Lakeview thermal generating station, which is designed to supply 1,800,000 kilowatts of power. Hydro-electric power stations which have a total dependable capacity of 500,000 kilowatts are under construction, or are planned in the James Bay watershed. The capacity of these new power stations is sufficient to meet the electric power requirements of nearly all of Ontario's 1,650,000 homes. Of the two nuclear power stations now under construction, the plant at Rolphoton, near Des Joachims, will be brought into service next spring.

You will be asked to consider legislation providing for the consolidation of the northern Ontario hydro-electric power system, commonly known as the "northern Ontario properties," with the southern Ontario system. This will provide for the financial integration of all systems and permit a more economical development and operation of electric power plants throughout the whole province. The residents of northern Ontario will be ensured greater stability of supplies of power at a reasonable cost.

The Department of Energy Resources, with the full co-operation of industry, has been preparing a comprehensive set of rules and regulations for the guidance of all who are concerned with energy production and distribution. This work is nearing completion and the regulations will shortly be implemented. The Department has developed an expanded program to survey all provincial energy resources. During the coming year, a review of all fuel resources within the province will be undertaken. An examination into natural gas storage capacity is being made. Codes and regulations governing the natural gas industry will be reviewed to ensure that they are adequate and effective.

Legislation will be introduced to set up an Agricultural Research Institute to co-ordinate agricultural research in Ontario. Administrative changes to produce greater efficiency and economy will be introduced in connection with the Ontario Agricultural College, the Ontario Veterinary College and the MacDonald Institute at Guelph. The Co-operative Association Act will be introduced to provide means to assist agricultural co-operatives in the fields of marketing and transportation. You will be asked to amend The Livestock Products Act to provide for the making of regulations to permit bonding of livestock dealers. To simplify the procedures in connection with drainage, your approval will be sought for the consolidation of five related Acts.

The Department of Lands and Forests will expand its program of forest management, preservation of wild life and the maintenance and development of additional park areas. In addition to the growing number of provincially assisted parks in conservation areas, the provincial parks system now consists of 79 provincial parks. Seventeen new parks were brought into operation last year and many others are now under development or are being planned. More wilderness areas will be added to the 35 already established. You will be asked to provide increased funds for research in forest management, fish and wild life. The conservation functions of The Department of Commerce and Development are being transferred to The Department of Lands and Forests, so that the main conservation efforts of this government and its municipalities will be concentrated in one department.

In the field of mining, the province has entered into a number of joint projects with the government of Canada to provide airborne geophysical surveys for the mapping of the whole province. Paralleling this development will be an expansion of The Department of Mines' geological work to provide for increased field work and for more geological reports and maps. These surveys will provide additional information for prospectors and result in further mineral developments.

The program of matching grants to regionally-based organizations as an incentive to the development and promotion of local tourist attractions, which commenced in 1961, will be continued. The Department of Travel and Publicity will continue its program of establishing new and relocating old reception centres as new bridges and highways are constructed. It is intended to continue the search for some early Huron villages and to carry out excavations at historic sites, as well as to continue the program of commemorating historic events and places by means of plaques.

You will be asked to provide a substantial increase in assistance for education. The growth in the enrolment in our elementary and secondary schools continues to impose a heavy strain upon our resources, both financial and physical. Some indication of the dimensions of this problem may be obtained from last year's increase of more than 100,000 pupil places, constructed at a cost of $100 million. As the growth in enrolment shows no signs of abatement, expansion must continue.

Revisions of courses of study are under way in many subjects for both elementary and secondary schools. The major undertaking for next year is the development of new courses for kindergarten and grades one to six. New text-books in history, geography and science have been prepared.

Staffing the Ontario school system is requiring herculean efforts, but the results are gratifying. The number of teachers graduating from the provincial teachers' colleges is more than double that of just five years ago. None of this would have been possible without the expansion in our teachers' colleges. The sixth of the new buildings provided for teachers' colleges during the last six years is now under construction in Windsor. The other five recently built are located in Toronto, Hamilton, London, New Toronto and Port Arthur. The extension of facilities has gone hand-in-hand with the program to raise the standards of admission to these institutions.

The growing industrialization of our province and the need for special skills and greater adaptability in industry and business has pointed up the value of the institutes of technology and other trade and vocational schools. Under the new federal-provincial technical and vocational training agreement, the two senior levels of government assume the capital cost of the schools. As a result, a large number of local school boards are providing increased accommodation for the teaching of technical and business courses. New trade schools will be established in Toronto, Ottawa, London and Sault Ste. Marie, and a new institute of technology is planned for Kirkland Lake. A new institute of technology building will replace the present rented quarters in Ottawa. The Ryerson Institute of Technology will be completed to accommodate a total enrolment of about 4,000 pupils.

Amendments will be introduced to The Department of Education Act, The Schools Administration Act, The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act, The Public Schools Act, The Separate Schools Act, and The Public Libraries Act.

Mental and public health services and procedures are constantly being revised in keeping with scientific and professional progress. You will be asked to approve plans and vote monies for improvement to our mental hospitals. A unit of the Ontario hospital school at Orillia that has been demolished will be rebuilt. Two other wings will be replaced in the future. Residential wings will be set up in all Ontario hospitals as well as in the three new hospitals at Goderich, Owen Sound and Palmerston. Increased emphasis will be placed upon rehabilitation. A new rehabilitation branch has been established to provide in-hospital and post-hospital training and local vocational training for patients successfully treated in our mental and TB hospitals. The work of the new radiation protection laboratory, the first established by any province, will be accelerated. Efforts will continue to be made to encourage young men and women to enter the medical and nursing professions.

Enrolment in the Ontario Hospital Services Plan is continuing to rise. More than 5.8 million Ontario residents—more than 95 per cent of the population—are now free from worry over the financial hazards of hospitalization. This is an increase of 5.3 per cent over membership in the plan a year ago.

The report of the departmental committee set up to study physical fitness in this province will be made available to the hon. members during the course of the session. The physical fitness of our people, including not only our youth, but our post-school age population, is a matter of great concern to your government and the committee's report will be useful in setting out a basis for our future activities in this field. Action will be taken to make full use of the recent federal proposals.

My government welcomes the establishment by the federal government of the Royal Commission on Health Insurance. We will make technical assistance available and co-operate fully with the commission in the conduct of its enquiry.

In the field of welfare, the committee appointed to review Ontario's child welfare program will report upon the completion of its work. Legislation will be introduced to serve children who reside in charitable institutions operated by private organizations. Under new concepts of care and treatment, children with emotional problems will be able to receive the type of residential care and specialized attention that they require. Consideration will be given to the establishment of community children's villages to serve pre-delinquent children. A bill will be introduced to replace the present Charitable Institutions Act with respect to the care of adults. The rehabilitation program for handicapped persons is being widened to include those on the welfare rolls who need rehabilitation services.

The construction of new highways, the improvement of existing facilities and the provision of financial assistance to the municipalities for road and street construction will continue. The Department of Highways, working in close co-operation with other departments, is conducting extensive research into the means of financing highway and road construction. Municipal traffic studies will be encouraged by provincial technical assistance and grants of 75 per cent of the cost.

Plans are underway to construct new roads linking major airports to adjacent communities. The Rainy Lake causeway is scheduled for completion in 1962, and construction is proceeding at both ends of the Fort Frances-Atikokan highway. Additional work will be done on the trans-Canada highway and on new roads in northern Ontario. As part of the federal-provincial roads to resources program, forestry roads of a new type will be constructed by The Department of Highways in northern Ontario.

Additional appropriations will be required for 401 highway which is scheduled for completion in 1963. Rapid progress is being made on the construction of 403 highway, the Hamilton by-pass. Work will continue on the new controlled access 405 highway between the Homer Skyway and the new international bridge at Queenston, providing a more direct link between the Queen Elizabeth Way and New York State Thruway. Legislation will also be introduced to increase from 80 to 90 per cent the contribution of the province towards bridges and culverts on any connecting link in towns and villages having a population of more than 2,500, other than separated towns.

The Department of Transport will continue the development and implementation of policies and procedures to ensure the safe and orderly movement of highway traffic and to improve driving performance. The policy of re-examining selected driver groups will be expanded. Amendments to The Highway Traffic Act will be proposed to keep pace with new concepts of traffic demands and to further the cause of safety. An analysis of the two-year experience with the demerit point system indicates that it has been an outstanding success and has done much to encourage and improve proper driving attitudes. Legislation will be advanced to further increase its effectiveness and to eliminate apparent inequities in the present system. The successful operation of vehicle inspection lanes in the Metropolitan Toronto area has emphasized the significance of this safety activity and it is proposed to expand this service by making available mobile inspection units to provide inspection facilities in support of community safety programs throughout the province.

This problem of highway safety has also continued to receive attention from the other departments concerned and a Cabinet committee, consisting of the Attorney-General

(Hon. Mr. Roberts), and the Ministers of Highways (Hon. Mr. Goodfellow) and Transport (Hon. Mr. Rowntree), has been set up to provide for greater co-ordination of government activities in this field. A constant review is being made of the situation and studies are continually being carried out to effect improvements, by way of greater police protection on our highways, improved road construction, and more effective highway usage.

It is expected that a report of the select committee on automobile insurance will be submitted to the Legislature shortly. The committee set up to study expropriation procedures has nearly completed its work and it is expected that a report will be presented before the close of the session.

The Royal Commission on Industrial Safety has now presented its report and it has been made available to the hon. members of the Legislature and to the public. This report is under active study in The Department of Labour. Legislation will be introduced at this session in reference to many of the recommendations contained in the report.

Action is being taken to resolve management and labour problems in the construction industry. During the past year, a special Construction Industry Arbitration Board was appointed to adjudicate upon grievances arising in connection with the construction industry in Toronto. A Royal commissioner has also been appointed to report upon problems in the industry with a view to creating greater harmony and stability. It is anticipated that the commissioner's report will be completed and made available before the end of this session. The Department of Labour is also carrying on investigations and providing assistance wherever required.

Action will be taken to strengthen the government's legislation and administration in support of the maintenance of human rights irrespective of race, language, sex, colour or creed.

Hon. members have received copies of the Second Report of the Ontario Committee on Portable Pensions and a suggested draft of The Pension Benefits Act. The portable pensions committee is, at present, reviewing the draft bill and drafting regulations pursuant to it. You will be given an opportunity to study and review progress on this important matter.

The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship will require additional funds to conduct seminars for ethnic and community leaders. The Department has co-operated with The Department of Education in training teachers to teach English to newcomers.

The province's liquor legislation, including education, research, and control, is under review. Various bills relating to municipal affairs will be introduced in the Legislature, including amendments to The Assessment Act, The Local Improvement Act, The Municipal Act, The Ontario Municipal Board Act, and The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act. To accelerate the construction of the subway in Metropolitan Toronto and to increase employment, you will be asked to approve a $60 million loan to Metropolitan Toronto.

Continuing improvements will be made to the province's reform program. A new training school for girls at Lindsay will soon be in operation. A new training school for boys is under construction at Simcoe.

The state of international relations justifies the strengthening of our Emergency Measures Organization and the development of plans to co-ordinate and organize facilities and services in case of war. The details of the action to be taken will be outlined to you. The province's Emergency Measures Organization is being transferred to The Attorney-General's Department.

In the administration of justice, constant efforts are being made to meet changing situations. The government will introduce legislation providing for the creation of an Ontario Police Commission vested with comprehensive powers relating to the maintenance of law and order in Ontario.

A report recently prepared on county and district court jurisdiction and related matters will be tabled and will be the basis of a plan to provide better utilization of our judicial services at the county and district court levels. Plans are being drawn to make our civil courts more readily available to the public who have occasion to seek justice there. Appropriate legislation will be introduced to give effect to a number of the recommendations in the report.

You will be requested to approve legislation to enable the government to enter into the new tax-sharing arrangements which have been negotiated with the federal government to replace the existing arrangements due to expire on March 31, 1962. The new arrangements, under which the province will be free to impose, adjust and alter its tax rates in the major fields of direct taxation in accordance with its financial requirements, will provide a much greater measure of flexibility in the raising of provincial revenue. Not only will increased revenues accrue to the province from the individual income tax field without a corresponding increase in the burden of taxation, but the province will be afforded the opportunity of entering into a tax collection agreement under which the federal government will collect the tax.

Legislation amending The Corporations Act will be introduced to codify the Common Law with respect to the power of corporations to grant mortgages on property, and also to provide reciprocal legislation to make it possible for a corporation, incorporated under another jurisdiction in Canada, to amalgamate with an Ontario corporation. It is proposed to amend The Corporations' Information Act to provide the public with more up-to-date information with respect to changes in the affairs of corporations as they occur.

Plans will be presented to establish a committee of the Legislature to deal with the matter of redistribution. It is the intention of my government, through this procedure, to provide our people with complete and effective representation, based on the changes in our population pattern of the last few years.

The legislative and financial program that will be placed before you this session is designed to promote expansion and development and to improve the scope and efficiency of the province's social, welfare and economic services. It embraces all the departments and agencies of the government. It has been formulated with regard to both the needs of our province and its financial capacity to support the program.

I am confident that the hon. members will give their conscientious attention to the consideration of this program.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes, I have secured a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

(Reading dispensed with.)

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE REVISED STATUTES OF ONTARIO, 1960

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to Confirm the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1960".

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Attorney-General, that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to this House be taken into consideration tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that I have received during the recess of the House notification of vacancies which have occurred in the membership of the House by the reason of the death of James Anthony Maloney, member for the electoral district of Renfrew South; the death of Harry Corwin Nixon, member for the electoral district of Brant; and the death of Albert Wren, member for the electoral district of Kenora.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in connection with this report I would like to refer to the members who have passed away since the end of the last session. They will all be very greatly missed by us in the course of our deliberations over the next few months.

I would like first to recall that during the last session of this Legislature two of our members died: the Hon. Dr. William J. Dunlop, who was my predecessor in The Department of Education, which he served with great honour and distinction, and Mr. W. H. Collings who was liquor commissioner for the past several years and faithfully carried out the duties of that office.

James Anthony Maloney was first elected to the Legislature in a by-election in 1956 in Renfrew South. He had lived his whole lifetime in the historic county of Renfrew and came from a family with a political background on both sides of the house. Before being elected to the Legislature he played a large part in the public and professional life of his community. Upon entering the Legislature he took a keen interest in its affairs and played an influential part in the work of a number of its committees, notably the labour committee which presented its report several years ago. He became Minister of Mines in 1958 and did much to strengthen the work of this important department. As well as being assiduous in the work of his department, his advice was always sought in the Cabinet. He was a warm and colourful personality and had a wide circle of friends. Though an aggressive debater he was admired and liked by members of all parties. His passing has left a gap which will not be easy to fill.

The House has also to mourn the passing of a former Prime Minister of Ontario, Harry Corwin Nixon. Mr. Nixon had represented Brant County continuously in the Legislature for 42 years, having first been elected in 1919. In that period of time he was associated with three political parties, the United Farmers of Ontario, the Progressives and the Liberals, and his riding gave him continuous support. The length of his service in the Legislature is without parallel in the history of Ontario and it is very doubtful if it has been equalled in any Legislature in Canada. During his long years of service both in the Opposition and on the government side, he served this province ably and well. Although he held the Premiership for only three months he was Provincial Secretary both in the United Farmers of Ontario administration in 1919 and in the Liberal administration following 1934. In the last number of years he had given valued service in the Opposition and his comments were always listened to with keen attention both by his own party and by the government side of the House. Mr. Nixon was in many ways a quiet and almost self-effacing person but he did not lack warmth and feeling and among his attributes may be given those very important ones of a quiet sense of humour and balanced common-sense. He will be greatly missed by all hon. members of this House.

Most recently the House has heard of the death of Albert Wren, the Liberal Labour member for the riding of Kenora. He was first elected to the Legislature ten years ago in 1951. Since that time he has been a valued member of the Opposition and served as labour critic. He was always a keen critic in matters pertaining to this and other fields of legislative activity. He was always foremost where the interests of his riding were concerned and he was well liked by hon. members of all parties. Mr. Wren had a fine record of service in this community as well as in this House which will not be the same without him.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members of this Legislature will join in expressions of sympathy to the families of these three great and worthy public servants who have in their various ways played such great parts in the affairs of this province.

Mr. Speaker, before the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) speak, and before I move the adjournment of the House, and with your permission, I would like to express our deep appreciation to the former Prime Minister (Hon. L. M. Frost). His legislative career covers a long span of years, for he became a member of this Legislature in 1937 and subsequently in 1943 was appointed to the Cabinet.

He became Prime Minister on the 4th of May, 1949, in which position he served until the 8th of November, 1961. In that high office for over 12 years the government of this province was under his capable leadership. On the firm foundation he established we will build in the people's interests a superstructure in keeping with the growth and development which our expanding economy will require.

The Hon. Mr. Frost's common touch, his human quality, his love of people and his distinctive generosity will always be remembered by the people of Ontario who will cherish him and his wife in their hearts with affection that the passing of the years will not diminish.

Applause.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is my opportunity to join the hon. Prime Minister (Hon. Mr. Robarts) and to express the regrets of the hon. members of this side of the House in the loss that we have all experienced in the time that has elapsed since we last met.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has made reference to the fact that there are five vacancies, all caused by death in the course of the last several months. Two of the five died during our last session, and I would like now to refer to the passing of Mr. Maloney and Mr. Nixon and Mr. Wren.

Mr. Speaker, personal sacrifice is the cost of political life and progress is measured by sacrifice. These men were among us and were one of us. We are assembled in a parliamentary Legislature but there are certain opportunities when non-partisan respect can be eulogized and I think that this is one such occasion. I think we join in the common humanity that we feel in the passing of these three men. They were all three known to us intimately. They laboured here in this House. They worked with us, and effectively.

We know in Jim Maloney, Mr. Speaker, a man who loved life and who lived it zestfully. Life to Mr. Maloney was politics. Who can forget and who will ever forget the dramatic contribution that Mr. Maloney made incessantly and continually to this House and to its debates in the course of the last several years. Certainly, on my behalf and on behalf of those in this side of the House, we offer our sympathy to his family.

And then, Mr. Speaker, I would refer to

Mr. Wren. Albert Wren was a big man. He represented the biggest riding in Ontario stretching for I suppose for one-third of the area across northern Ontario. And all of us know the passion with which he served that area. He seemed to have a continual romance with northern Ontario and to be a spokesman for its people and its interests and its hopes and its expectations. And I think he served that purpose dramatically and I am sure you would want to join with me in expressions of sympathy to his family.

What to say of Harry Nixon? Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has eulogized Mr. Nixon very effectively and very well. He was a member of this House longer than any other person. I believe that he served in this House longer than any other man in Canada excepting Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Harry Nixon was a man among men. He had a sense of integrity and honesty and purpose, and I would mention particularly loyalty, because in our democratic parliamentary system loyalty too is an extraordinary virtue. These things he demonstrated in an extraordinary fashion and certainly here again you would join with me in expression of sympathy to his family.

Mr. Speaker, if I may turn to a more pleasant task that has been afforded by the introduction of the hon. Prime Minister to the subject and to the person of the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Frost).

Mr. Speaker, sitting as I do on this side of the House, it is an extraordinary thing to see and be present in the House when the hon. member for Victoria is not in charge of the House as such. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this formal occasion will permit me, maybe in an unguarded moment, to pay my compliments to this distinguished gentleman.

For 18 years the hon. member for Victoria has sat on the treasury benches. For 12 years he has led the House, a consummate political artist who liked to disguise himself as a country lawyer from Lindsay. The disguise was understandable but not misinterpreted. We felt, on this side of the House, that the hon. member exercised his extraordinary ability in a very effective way.

And surely on this occasion I would say that it is a pleasure for all of us and I am sure for all people in all parts of Ontario to know that the hon. member will continue in this House for some indefinite period. It will be for the hon. member himself to say for how long.

And then I would want to pay, on my behalf and on behalf of all, a tribute to his wife who has sat here constantly, in the years I have served, as a helper to him. He often made reference to his wife as his leader of the Opposition. We will understand together, Mrs. Frost, some of the problems of a leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, one other opportunity and I do it enthusiastically, is provided to me to congratulate the new Prime Minister. At a young age he is assuming great responsibility. He is to be congratulated for accepting this responsibility and shouldering the burden that it entails.

I must be guarded again, Mr. Speaker, in my congratulations, but I certainly say that it is a pleasure to have Mr. Robarts assume this responsibility and to congratulate him, and to tell him that we all hope and we all expect that wisdom and courage will be with him and stay with him in the guidance of his party and in this House, and in that we wish him well. I do so personally and on behalf of all hon. members on this side of the House.

Applause.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, this is a particularly sad occasion in one respect. Periodically we have had occasion as members of this House to pause and mourn the passing of one of our colleagues, but I think very seldom has it been our misfortune to have to mourn the passing of three within such a short period as the few months since last this Legislature was sitting, particularly when they were three such men as have now passed on.

Jim Maloney, above everything else, was a gallant fighter, and I venture to suggest that we on this side of the House are going to miss him even more than on the government side of the House. It will be a duller place without him.

As for Harry Nixon, I think it is perhaps a unique occasion, because as the hon. Prime Minister (Hon. Mr. Robarts) has indicated, this is the passing of a man who had a tenure of office in this Legislature longer than at any time throughout its whole history. He was a man of quiet dignity as befits a person who has held an office, the highest office in this province, and who maintained the confidence of his people back home throughout all of these 42 years. But I think all of us, in whichever section of the House we sit, will miss him as a personal friend.

As for Albert Wren, if there ever was a man who was a true son of the north I think Albert Wren was that person. He was attuned to its atmosphere and a vigorous spokesman for its problems and aspirations; certainly for all of us, it is a rather sobering thing to pause and take note of the fact that a man in his early 40's, as physically strong as Albert Wren, should suddenly be cut down in this fashion. It makes us all reflect on the course of this earthly life, its purpose and to what extent we are fulfilling it.

We shall miss all of these who have passed on and I would like to join with the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in extending our sympathy to the bereaved members of the families.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very pleasant thing to be able to change now and to offer a eulogy to a man who is living and I have no illusions that he is still very much alive.

I am not going to be unguarded in this moment, Mr. Speaker. I have sat in this House now for some six years and I will confess to you that I have found myself one half of the time fascinated and enthralled by the expert practices of the art of politics which the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Frost) has given us down through those years. It is my considered view he is in a class in Canadian politics with Sir John A. Macdonald and McKenzie King in that respect. It is rather a select group.

The other half of the time, Mr. Speaker, I have sat over here frustrated with trying to puncture the image that this country lawyer from Victoria has presented to the public and all the things behind it that we wanted revealed, but I would confess to him now that I and all the rest of us have failed, failed rather lamentably, as perhaps the election results are the best proof.

However, we will forget that; that is a closed chapter, and I would like to join with the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. Prime Minister in wishing the hon. member and his wife a very pleasant time in their years of relative retirement freed from some of the tensions that he has borne down through the years. What we have failed in achieving with him we shall now pick up with his successor.

However, Mr. Speaker, that again lies in the future and for the moment I would just like to say to the new hon. Prime Minister that we congratulate him for attaining this very high office and certainly I, as a fellow graduate of the Navy, welcome the fact that the senior service is achieving these high posts in this honoured Legislature.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend to the hon. Prime Minister my congratulations, but to tell him that I do so conscious of the fact that events have thrust upon me something that I never expected. I suddenly realized a couple of weeks ago that these events have now placed me in the position of being the senior in point of years and in point of tenure of leadership of the three leaders in the House.

I have wondered whether I should not powder my wig each morning, befitting such years. I assure the hon. Prime Minister I shall try to live up to them and at the same time fulfil the role of an Opposition critic.

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1961

The House met at 3:05 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to our Legislature and today we are honoured to have with us as visitors four members of the Manitoba Legislature who are here on the work of a select committee. The members of the Manitoba Legislature are in the Speaker's gallery—Harry Shewman, Douglas Watt, George Johnson and Stanley Roberts.

Presenting petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of Greater Oshawa's Community Chest, praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to give notice of meetings by publishing such notice in the newspaper.

Of the corporation of the village of Erie Beach praying that an Act may pass allowing it to be represented on the county council of the county of Kent.

Of the corporation of the city of Belleville, praying that an Act may pass amending The City of Belleville Act, 1948 to permit monies held by the Board of Governors of the Belleville General Hospital to be kept in a company registered under The Loan and Trust Corporations Act as well as in a chartered bank.

Of the corporation of the Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Incurables, Toronto, praying that an Act may pass changing its name to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Toronto.

Of the corporation of the town of Hearst praying that an Act be passed vesting certain lands to one Joseph David Levack.

Of the corporation of the town of Orillia praying that an Act may pass enabling it and the Orillia Water, Light and Power Commission to require owners of lots in subdivisions to assume and pay their respective equitable share of the costs of such improvements before being entitled to the benefit thereof or obtaining a permit to construct a building thereon.

Of the corporation of the village of Markham praying that an Act may pass confirming an agreement for the construction of a community centre building and arena, confirming a by-law relating thereto and authorizing the issue of debentures therefor.

Of the corporation of the county of Halton praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to receive from persons or for the credit of persons admitted to homes for the aged, etc., real and personal property and to administer such property.

Of the Metropolitan United Church, Toronto, praying that an Act may pass enlarging a trust to enable it to engage an organist who is a graduate of a Canadian institution entitled to grant degrees in music and who holds a fellowship in the Royal Canadian College of Organists.

Of the corporation of the city of St. Catharines praying that an Act may pass establishing St. Catharines Transit Commission, and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of Ontario Co-operative Credit Society praying that an Act may pass impeaching the authorized capital of the society.

Of the corporation of the township of Nepean praying that an Act may pass confirming debenture by-laws for school construction. Also the petition of Nepean township High School District Board, and Collegiate Institute Board of Ottawa, praying that an Act may pass confirming an agreement for the erection in the township of Nepean by the said township board of secondary schools to be operated by the said Ottawa Board.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing insurance for members of the city council travelling on business for the corporation and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move during the present session of the legislative assembly that provision be made for the taking and printing of reports, debates and speeches, and to that end, Mr. Speaker be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches and the necessary stenographers, at such rates of compensation as may be agreed to by him. Also that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amount of 1,600 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Speaker, Clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, to each hon. member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province as approved by Mr. Speaker, and the balance to be distributed by the Clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that is the usual motion, providing for Hansard, which has been followed in the last few years and I do not think there is any objection to it.

Mr. Speaker, I move that standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes:

1. Agriculture;
2. Conservation;
3. Education;
4. Energy;
5. Game and fish;
6. Government commissions;
7. Health and welfare;
8. On highways and highway safety;
9. Labour;
10. Lands and forests;
11. Legal bills;
12. Mining;
13. Municipal law;
14. Printing;
15. Private bills;
16. Privileges and elections;
17. Public accounts;
18. Standing orders;
19. Travel and publicity.

Which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as shall be referred to them by the House and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): You will recall that last year we had some considerable discussion about the re-organization of the committees. My recollection is that at that time it was agreed that we would continue with the numbers of standing committees, Mr. Speaker, you have just read out to us.

But there was an understanding, I believe, that certain re-organization of the several committees would be required in the future. And subsequent to that discussion in this House my recollection is that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett) headed a committee that considered the advisability of changing the terms of reference of the public accounts committee.

Mr. Speaker, my recollection of that latter meeting was that it was a very worthwhile meeting. The suggestion was made that the public accounts committee should be authorized to undertake more expansive investigation of the public accounts of the province than is permitted at the present time.

My observation at this time is simply this: if we agree to the motion in its current form, we are doing nothing more than perpetuating what we agreed last year was a system that had certain shortcomings, and I think that now is the opportune time to correct those shortcomings. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that before we put this motion that we give the House a full opportunity to voice some observations.

I think there is a genuine opinion on all sides of the House that a substantial improvement can be made in the formulation and organization of the committee. In particular I would hope that there would be hon. members of the House, including the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions who I thought spoke very intelligibly about the subject of the committee a year ago, to again offer the House observations made at that time.

My recollection of his observations, in a nutshell, is simply this—that he suggested that the public accounts committee be formed in the nature of a continuing committee, maybe a small committee, that would have wide powers to investigate the public accounts of the province.

We are all cognizant of the fact that under the present arrangement public accounts meets only when a specific problem is referred to that committee. It does not initiate any activity of its own authority. This I think is a serious shortcoming.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would ask you to invite the observations of the House. There will be others in the House who will want to make observations and maybe our several thoughts and observations will result in the hope and expectation that we had a year ago, that we could revise and re-organize the standing committee into a more effective vehicle to undertake the business of the House.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I just add one comment along the general line that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has advanced. I agree with him, but I do not think a great deal of discussion is necessary; what is needed is a decision by the government.

We have had, to put it very frankly, a degree of ambivalence in the government approach to the public accounts committee in the past. It has been regarded as a scandal committee on one hand, and then we move tentatively towards using this committee in somewhat the same way as it is used in other jurisdictions—to make a running survey of the accounts of various departments.

Last year I thought we had reached the point where we were going to adopt the latter practice but the comment of the then Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) suggested that we perhaps had not solidly reached that decision. The result was—I do not know if this necessarily follows—that the committee did not get into operation until the latter stages of the session and could not certainly do the job along that line.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the question is a pure and simple one. Does the government now feel that the public accounts committee is a committee that should do serious jobs beyond just investigating scandals when they are raised; and if the government does believe that such is the function of this public accounts committee, will it give assurance that the committee will get into operation forthwith rather than waiting till the middle of February or March 1?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the difficulty in this motion raised by both the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) seems to concern the public accounts committee only. I would be happy to delete the public accounts committee from this motion, which would permit us to get on with the organization of the other committees of the House.

I will look at this report, with which I am not completely familiar—the committee which the hon. leader of the Opposition says was chaired by the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett) during the last session—and I will bring back a motion to establish a public accounts committee at a later time—at which time any comment they might like to make can be made.

There are certain matters to do with the procedural arrangements of these committees which I think might be looked at. Last year, if you will remember, we reserved Wednesday for committee work. I do not know if that was completely successful in effect but I intend to look at the organization of the committee work and perhaps, with a little closer time-tabling, to ensure that the overlapping that has occurred in the past with hon. members sitting on several committees and being called to attend at several committees at the same time. . . . I intend to look at that. But I would be happy to delete the public accounts committee from this motion.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I personally would be willing to entertain the idea of the deletion on one condition—that the hon. Prime Minister gives us the assurance that this issue is going to be brought back to the House at the earliest possible date. Otherwise the net effect of his deletion is to frustrate the objective we have in mind—because he may not bring it back until the middle of February.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the thought crossed my mind that this point might be raised as I made my suggestion, but I did not think the hon. member would really think I would use this means of deferring the matter until some time next March. I can assure the hon. member that it will be brought back at the earliest possible moment, but I would like the time to look at it before I do so.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, I do not think our leader wanted to limit himself only to the public accounts committee. As I listened to his remarks I do not think he did.

There has been substantial criticism about the committee on commissions: the way it is operated, its ability to call witnesses, who will give answers, what answers they will give and in what form they will be given.

There has been substantial criticism in the House and in committees about the size of these committees—some of the committees running to 50 members—what sort of things come before the committee, efforts by various committees to inquire into departmental matters which do not come before the committees. And on a few occasions, Mr. Speaker, there have been unanimous decisions made in these committees which the government has ignored.

Surely the time is long overdue when a complete re-organization of the committee system by which this House operates should be undertaken. What more appropriate time than when we have a new Prime Minister?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, when I made my comments at the outset I envisaged a substantial discussion by hon. members opposite, because frankly my reference was not intended to be limited to public accounts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my intention at this time is not to frustrate the motion or anything of that sort. My intention is to bring out what I thought was a conviction in the minds of many hon. members of the House that the time is opportune to consider a re-organization of our committee set-up. To emphasize my point my recollection is that the very committee I spoke about a few moments ago discussed the advisability of whether we should incorporate some of the features of the American system, reduce the membership of the committees, determine the authority of the committees, their power to investigate and to call witnesses, and the like.

But specifically, Mr. Speaker, the point has been made by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) that we have been frustrated in conjunction with the committee on commissions. There, constantly, very important matters did come before the committee at inopportune times—times when other committees were meeting or times during which the full attention of the committee could not be given to the serious matter before it.

I think particularly of the reports of Hydro. My recollection is that the then chairman of Hydro came before the committee of commissions—and to his credit he was prepared to give us all the time we wanted—but it simply happened that the committee could only afford two hours and his preparation was the sort of preparation that would require more than two hours' presentation.

The result was that the committee on commissions did not have an effective, or any, opportunity to examine him, or to ask questions.

This was a frustration last year. We were prepared to put up with it, we were prepared to acknowledge it. But I thought there was a conviction that this year some considerable thought would be given to remedy that shortcoming and, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I would like some further discussion of this problem at this time. I am concerned that all we will do is pass the motion in an amended form and then we will go on to the next order of business and this matter will not be brought before the House until a year hence.

Now is the opportunity to do something about it. I do not think that anybody feels dogmatic about this subject or feels that there is only one answer.

It may well be that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) will want to make some observation. I am very serious about this. I ask the assistance, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. members opposite. They have all expressed thoughts publicly on this subject and surely now is the time to come together and co-ordinate these thoughts.

I will co-operate with any reasonable course that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) wishes to pursue in respect to the motion, but I am going to insist that we be given the assurance now that we know the direction in which we are going to go and that there will be an effective opportunity to re-organize the committee set-up. There is no point in passing the motion setting in motion the same procedure we have followed for years gone by in the knowledge that that procedure had real shortcomings. For the world of me I can see no point in proceeding to move the motion and pass the motion without the assurance that the shortcomings will be corrected.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, if I may, just before we vote on this. I have already said there are certain procedural questions I would like to look at concerning these committees and I would like to point out also that the procedure followed by the committees has been altered on many occasions in the 10 years I have been in the House.

There has been a constant effort to make the committees more effective and to make the work of the committees easier for the members who sit on them. So I really cannot subscribe to the point of view that we are doing the same old thing year after year because this of course is absolutely not so.

I am as interested as the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is in having effective results come out of these committees and I can assure him I will take steps to see that procedure is looked at with a view to making it more efficient, and in making participation by hon. members of the House easier. I can assure him there will be an opportunity given both for him to express his opinions and the other hon. members of this House who would like to do so; but in the meantime if we are to get on with the business of the House I think this motion should carry and we will adjust these things as we go along.

I have already said that there is some doubt in my mind personally as to whether the Wednesday was sufficient—when we had no sittings of the House on Wednesday—whether this actually accomplished what we set out to accomplish. All these things will be looked at and the whole matter will be considered. I will give the House my assurance on that point.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) when he is considering this question, will also consider the possibility of reducing the number of members on each and every committee. When I remember last year and in years previous various committees of the House that had 50, and as many as 60, members on them and then in order to get a quorum of eight or 10 people the Conservative whips had to chase around the building so that we could carry on the business.

I do not see any sense or reason to this at all. I strongly suggest that the hon. Prime Minister when looking into this question look over the possibility of reducing the number of members, at least cutting them in half, because there are too many, they are completely unwieldy. As a matter of fact I have found that the committees are so unwieldy that they have the appearance of being spoon fed by the government opposite. I feel that we could get a great deal more satisfaction and the committees would do much better work if the numbers were drastically reduced.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the mover of the motion be allowed to hold for the time being the appointment of committee No. 17 on public accounts?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I presume now that committee No. 17 will be standing orders, and 18 on travel and publicity moved along and tacked on the end of this particular committee.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I move that a select committee of 14 hon. members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient dispatch, lists of the hon. members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House. Such committee to be composed as follows:

Mr. Allan, Chairman; Messrs. Carruthers, Cowling, Edwards (Perth), Gordon, Guindon, Hall, Lawrence, Morin, Simonett, Thomas, Whicher, White and Whitney. A quorum of the said committee to consist of four members.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I move that tomorrow and each succeeding Friday for the present session this House will meet at 10:30 o'clock a.m. and that Rule 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it might apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to continue the adjournment at 1 o'clock—from 10:30 to 1 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the practice in the past has been that 1 o'clock is the target but it is not set out in the motion that the House must adjourn at 1 o'clock. We will proceed as we have in the past. Being one of the members to whom this has been a great boon over the years in my travelling back and forth to where I live, I know how convenient this motion is as far as many hon. members of the House are concerned. It will be our target to finish by 1 o'clock but we will not be tied down to that because there may be certain circumstances on certain occasions.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Brown) be appointed as chairman of the committee of the whole House for the present session.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

House in committee of the whole; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

Mr. K. Brown (Peterborough): Hon. members of the House, at this time I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and indeed all the hon. members of the House for placing their confidence in me and appointing me as Deputy Speaker of this House.

It is indeed a great honour for me to be the Deputy Speaker for this session and I would ask all the hon. members to give me their full co-operation. I assure you that I will endeavour to carry out my duties to the best of my ability. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

AN ACT TO EFFECT THE CONSOLIDATION OF ALL WORKS AND SYSTEMS OF THE HYDRO- ELECTRIC POWER COMMISSION OF ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Effect the Consolidation of all Works and Systems of The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill, it is related to the second bill that I want to introduce and if I may, I will give the explanation of both of these bills at the same time.

AN ACT TO AMEND THE POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Power Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, much of these two bills—all of the first bill and most of the second bill—which I have presented for the first reading deals with the consolidation financially of the three systems of Ontario Hydro. There are, however, two separate clauses in the second bill which do not deal with this matter and I would make reference to them first, if I may.

One is a procedural amendment only. There is some confusion, or there seems to be some confusion, as to the meaning of the word "building" in Section 1 of The Power Commission Act and this Act simply elaborates upon the meaning of that word to clarify it.

The second provision of the Act which deals with matters other than the financial consolidation of the three systems of Ontario Hydro, deals with the form of the appointment or election of Hydro commissioners in cities whose population exceeds 60,000 people. In townships the commissions are created and then under The Public Utilities Act the commissioners are elected regardless of the size of the township which has the commission. In the case of cities, however, there is a dividing line at 60,000. For cities of less than 60,000 the commissioners are elected; for cities over 60,000—unless there is a private bill affecting them—the commissioners are and have been appointed.

A problem is created when at the start of the year a municipality has less than 60,000 when they elect their commissioners and by the end of the year they have exceeded 60,000 in population. They should have, for the balance of the year presumably, been appointed. And since there might be some doubt as to the legality of the actions of the commission during the period when the population exceeded 60,000, this is an amendment to permit any city with a population in excess of 60,000 to either elect or appoint a commissioner.

Dealing however with the major weight of both these bills, Mr. Speaker, they are related to the financial consolidation of Ontario Hydro. Ontario Hydro is divided financially into three areas; for northwestern Ontario, for northeastern Ontario and southern Ontario systems.

Northwestern Ontario includes for purposes of convenience for this House the four ridings of Kenora, Rainy River, Fort William and Port Arthur. The area known as northeastern Ontario, for the purposes of Ontario Hydro, is all of northeastern Ontario north of a line carried westerly from Mattawa on the Ottawa River to Georgian Bay. The southern Ontario system is the balance of the province of Ontario. These three areas are the three financial areas which now remain and are administered by Ontario Hydro.

I have spoken in the House on a number of occasions and have presented to the House the explanation of how Hydro was born in 1906, how it is established legally and how in southern Ontario it is composed of approximately 350 municipalities and how part of southern Ontario which is not in one of these 350 municipalities is in an area called rural Ontario. But this whole area in southern Ontario is financially administered as one area and its equity is owned by the municipalities and the townships which form a part of it.

However, in the balance of the province of Ontario, which is north of the line drawn between Mattawa and the point on Georgian Bay, this is not so. In northern Ontario there are a number of municipalities, approximately a dozen or more, and they share the equity or ownership of the Hydro system north of this line and the balance of it is owned by the province of Ontario, this Legislature. But the whole of the area north of the line is administered by Ontario Hydro in trust for the municipalities in northern Ontario or the province of Ontario, as the case may be.

In the three areas of the province—and I have set this out in a memorandum which I prepared some months ago in anticipation of the fact that this matter might come before the House. I hope that the gentlemen of the House, Mr. Speaker, will take the time to read it, if they are concerned with this problem, because it is an important matter. I have tried to set out in this memorandum a little of the back history of Ontario Hydro, how its generation came about, how we transfer power generated in Niagara Falls and may carry it all the way into the area of the Ottawa Valley, and I suggested in the memorandum the problems that this involved in terms of accounting.

Fundamentally, the issue involved in these matters is this. The province has the three main areas, northwestern Ontario, northeastern Ontario and southern Ontario, which is the whole bottom of the province. The books are kept separately for each one of these three areas—that is to say, the costs of generation, of distribution, of transmission, sale and so forth are kept separate for each one of these three areas. This means, for example, in northwestern Ontario, where total consumption is something in the neighbourhood of 400,000 kilowatts, that if one or two paper machines—each of which uses about 30,000 kilowatts—goes out of operation, if two of them were to go out, this would be 60,000 kilowatts. More than 10 per cent of the consumption in the whole area!

This can have a very drastic effect upon the rate and the finances of northwestern Ontario, which I am citing as an example.

So that I may put it again, northwestern Ontario finances on its own. Its rates are determined by the cost of generation, distribution, transmission and so forth in northwestern Ontario only. Therefore, if in northwestern Ontario, for example, we were to have a situation where there was very little rainfall—which is quite possible—we will then have to provide power in northwestern Ontario in one of two ways. If there is no water in the river, power would have to be purchased either from bordering states or provinces such as Manitoba, or alternatively coal would have to be burned in the thermal plant. It may well be in the rest of the province—in northeastern Ontario and in southern Ontario—that there is plenty of water, plenty of water indeed, for all the power needs of the northwest, the northeast and the south. But the northwest and the northeast are not connected by a physical interconnection.

This memorandum which I have prepared—and also one which I sent, as I recall, some months ago, to every hon. member in the House—explains the financial problems of physically connecting the northwest and the northeast. I explained in these memoranda why it has not been done, how much it would cost, the limitations of the movement of power and the prospects of doing this in the future.

However, in relation to the northwest, just as an example, hon. members can see from what I have said that the northwest, being a very small system, is isolated. It has 400,000 kilowatt consumption approximately as opposed to the whole system of Ontario, which is over six million. Therefore, it is far less than 10 per cent of the whole system and if one small thing goes wrong it can affect very seriously the finances of the whole area of northwestern Ontario and can force an increase in rates simply because of the vulnerability of the system to the influences of the economics of the country or the fall of rain or other causes such as machines breaking down and going out of operation.

Therefore, the simple advantages to northwestern Ontario in this bill in the event of this whole system being one financially are, some of them, referred to in this memorandum on page 14. I have pointed out; quite apart from the vulnerability of the northwestern system, which is very vulnerable; I pointed out there are a number of inequities possible in creating power in one area, transmitting it for use into another and then moving it back again into the first area at a period when they may be short and the other area has more than it needs.

An example of this was at Des Joachims on the Ottawa River. This was a case of the water being or belonging to northeastern Ontario. Nevertheless, the plant was built and paid for by the southern Ontario system—using water in the north. It transports its power into the south and yet on occasion buys the power back again in the north simply because the power that it is transmitting into the south may not always be needed and it can be sold back to the north.

The problems involved in attributing the cost element in these transfers of power is immense and they become arbitrary and they become arguable. They become, perhaps, inequitable, so this is an additional problem involved. I would say to hon. members as I have on page 14 of this memorandum, that the advantages of amalgamating the systems financially into one system are these:

There will be a more just allocation of costs and benefits as between the present three systems; a lower rate in the future for all three systems, if possible, resulting from a more economic development of energy resources; a better balanced system more able to withstand economic swings and fluctuations of nature.

There will be a larger set of reserves for contingencies when the three systems are all put into one; there will be a more stable and predictable long range set of rates, which is a very important thing in terms of development of this province; and there will be an easier cost system to administer, coupled with economies which will follow from doing away with duplications.

It has been said, I have noticed, that this is going to involve the consumers of electricity in the province of Ontario in higher rates. This is not so. In fact the amount by which the rate or the costs will go down in the north, my recollection is that the estimate is somewhat in the neighbourhood of $5 in the northwest and around $2 in the northeast. This is a reduction of a factor in the cost of producing electricity which will be possible from the amalgamation of these systems.

Now this, hon. members, is perhaps not too clear an explanation. Anticipating my inabilities in this regard I prepared a memorandum and I have had it put on the desks of the hon. members. These bills will now be sent to the energy committee where we will call on officials from Hydro and all of the people from any area of this province who would like to make any comments on these bills, it being the intention of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that this matter should be fully discussed and fully understood. Like many things on which perhaps the facts are not known.

This is a simple matter which will contribute great benefits to the development of northern Ontario, and, in fact, for all of Ontario because it will make it possible to have more stable rates, to give longer term contracts to our large industrial customers and to avoid increases in rates in the future which could be avoided as a result of doing away with duplication arising in these systems. I would say to the hon. members of this House that when this has gone through the committee and comes back into the House to be discussed on second reading, I will go into the facts and figures and have some maps before the hon. members so that it will be a little easier to follow.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In view of the elaborate explanation that has been made—and I can appreciate it—on this occasion I am sure the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) will permit me to encroach on the normal rules and ask a question about this particular bill. My question, Mr. Speaker, is simply this:

The hon. Minister has suggested that the new legislation will assist bookkeeping and the scientific evaluation of rates. Am I correct when I suggest that at the present time the northwestern system is under the jurisdiction of the Legislature, the immediate jurisdiction of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is not correct in saying that. This was the point that I made originally that the north, north of the line between Mattawa and Georgian Bay, is jointly owned either: (A) by Ontario Hydro; or (B) by the municipality itself—in which case they are not under the jurisdiction of the Legislature. The rural part of the area in the northern Ontario properties, which are not owned by the municipalities, are in effect under the legislative jurisdiction of this Legislature. But the whole of the Hydro system is to a very large degree under the Legislature's jurisdiction for this reason, that if one looks at The Power Commission Act one can see the very extensive control this Legislature has over Ontario Hydro, in relation to certain powers, if it wishes to exercise an Order-in-Council.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) one or two questions.

The first thing, after the elaborate preparation he has made discussing this subject and endeavouring to sell it to the assembly, I would like to ask him if it is so good now, why was it not done previously? I cannot understand why—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I answer the question? The reason that it has not been done previously is that it has never needed to be done until now. This whole saving will accrue as a result of plants which we are now about to build on the Mattagami river in the north with a capacity of some 1,200,000 kilowatts and in conjunction with several plants that we are building at Lakeview and in conjunction with the two nuclear plants which are about to come into operation. But I would say to my hon. friend so it is perfectly clear, this is not the time to debate why this has not been done before. There is a perfectly simple answer which I gave while you were—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): It is all right for you to make such an elaborate and long winded statement on first reading.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I had a question I am sure the hon. Minister would answer.

Mr. Speaker: Actually, the time to ask the questions is on second reading and in committee, when the bill is before the House.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I agree with that too but in as much as the hon. Minister in his wisdom has decided that it would be a good thing to have steady costs for all the province of Ontario, has he given any consideration to the possibility of having equalized rates for all the customers of Ontario Hydro? As I understand it here, he is going to give equalized rates to the three systems. Surely this could be carried on; and perhaps equalized rates could be given to all the people of the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member has misunderstood this bill if he thinks that this bill is a bill designed to deal with equalization of rates. This is not what this bill deals with. Perhaps it would be as well, before the hon. member asks any more questions, if he read the memorandum which I put on his desk. I would be most happy to discuss it with him, and I will in the House when we come back.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I beg leave to present a copy of a report, together with a copy of the appendices and supplementary material of the Attorney-General's committee on enforcement of the law relating to gambling.

Mr. Speaker, I will give a very short explanatory statement on this report, as I imagine the House would like to have that.

The committee was appointed on July 5, 1961 and consisted of Professor J. D. Morton, chairman, of Osgoode Hall, Rolf Eng and counsel for the committee was Mr. M. L. Friedland. The committee was directed to consider the problems in enforcement of the law relating to gambling with reference to the problems in certain other jurisdictions.

When this report was requested by me it was with a view to getting as much information as possible, and I feel that the committee has done an excellent job in this regard.

It was made clear—the practice was obvious—that the law relating to gambling is contained in the federal statutes and of course any change in the law itself would have to be made by the federal authorities. It was felt, however, that a report at this time would be beneficial and would be of considerable aid in the event of discussions taking place with the federal authority on this subject.

I would refer to the set-up at the beginning. It is composed of several parts. Title No. 1, which is mostly historical and comparative, deals with foreign jurisdiction—the English experience, experience in Norway, Sweden and Ireland, experience in the state of New York, and conclusions drawn from experience in other jurisdictions.

Title 2 contains several chapters dealing particularly with our own province—the pattern of gambling in Ontario, illegal betting on horse races, illegal betting on other sporting events, gaming houses or gambling clubs, pool betting on sports, bingo and lotteries, the financial aspects of illegal gambling, and conclusions. Then there are a number of appendices and supplementary material attached.

The committee was concerned to discover whether gambling had ever been effectively prohibited or regulated, and if so at what price. In particular, they concentrated upon the results of ineffective attempts to regulate and control gambling. The committee was unable to point to any successful attempt, past or present, to completely prohibit all forms of gambling.

An examination of the experience in Great Britain, Republic of Ireland, Norway and Sweden, and the state of New York led the committee to conclude that it had not proved possible to enforce anti-gambling laws which appear to the public at large to involve unfair distinctions. In Great Britain and the European countries the committee found the tendency has been to legalize more and more forms of gambling under strict controls, in an attempt to produce a fair system which would command public support.

Some ten years ago when a committee was sitting there, out of which arose an Act last year in Great Britain, it found that a third of the adult population of Britain was involved in football pools, and that no less than some 7 million were using the coupon method, and some 4 million were betting off the track.

The committee felt that a clear distinction would be drawn between the experience in the United States and that in the European jurisdictions mentioned. In the European jurisdictions it did not appear that bookmakers, for example, were generally regarded as criminals. The committee points out that this is no doubt due to the fact that bookmakers in those jurisdictions were always permitted to carry on certain legal gambling activities.

In North America, on the other hand, it was found that bookmaking in all its forms has been illegal for many years. The evil of illegal gambling in North America appears in the committee's view to be the concentration of vast sums of money in the hands of criminals. In the United States it appears to the committee that this money is used to finance operations of a general criminal nature.

On the basis of the study of law in these other countries the committee concluded that regulation on a pattern similar to that of the criminal code has not proved workable elsewhere. While the committee did not investigate detailed gambling operations in Ontario, and makes no report of the exact extent to which illegal gambling flourishes, it concludes that there is considerable illegal gambling within the province.

It was of the opinion that enforcement of the exact law is extremely difficult if not impossible. It further noted the present law is based upon what may appear to be unfair distinctions between various types of gambling.

With these considerations in mind, and with the intention of avoiding very grave problems which have arisen in the United States, the committee has examined the existing law in Ontario with an eye to its fairness and enforceability. With a view to achieving that measure of fairness which would command the necessary public support for enforcement, the committee has recommended an extension in the legal outlets for gambling.

The suggested extensions include an off-track pari-mutuel betting system and a reshaping of the laws relating to some types of social clubs, some lotteries, and the operation of bingo games. And I repeat again, of course, that this is all within the criminal code provisions and therefore is a matter which must ultimately be dealt with by the federal authorities.

The committee says that where an extension of gambling is recommended—and this again would involve changes in the criminal code—strict control of such legal gambling might be maintained by what it terms a new provincial gambling control board. Bingo operators, for example, would be required to obtain a permit, and carnival operators a licence. There is, of course, at the local level a certain amount of this being done at the present time.

In order that an increase in legal betting on horse races shall not result in any dramatic increase in profits by the racing associations, the committee proposes that each particular association take be fixed by a public board.

With reference to the remaining gambling operations, the committee recommends strict enforcement and makes the following particular proposals, which I quote:

Realizing that the telephone is essential to a successful bookmaking operation, it proposes that the telephone company be authorized to discontinue or refuse service to a subscriber upon notification by the Attorney-General that he reasonably believes such telephone is being used for an unlawful purpose.

In view of the difficulties of detecting the physical whereabouts of back ends the committee recommends that the criminal code be amended to authorize the attachment of a device to a suspected subscriber's telephone on a warrant of the provincial Attorney-General. This device would not listen to or record conversations but would merely report the numbers dialed by the particular subscriber. Before automation this information might have been obtained from the records of the Bell Telephone Company by an ordinary search warrant.

A number of other proposals relating to enforcements are made. For example, the committee recommends the imposition of much heavier sentences on those convicted of illegal gambling.

Finally the committee is of the opinion that the problems involved in illegal gambling demand not the temporary scrutiny of an ad hoc Royal commission but continuous scrutiny by an independent body of a permanent nature.

The function of such a body, the committee stresses, would be to observe and investigate crime and law enforcement in Canada. It should, in the committee's view, form part of the machinery of the Dominion government; it should have power neither of administrative control or prosecution; it should operate by way of inquiry and public report, leaving it to those at present charged with the responsibility for legislation and law enforcement to withstand such impartial scrutiny.

I congratulate Professor Morton, who is in the wings today, and his associates for the businesslike, efficient manner in which they tackled this job and in a relatively short period of time came up with some definite views as contained in the comprehensive report which has today been tabled in the Legislature. A copy of this report will be well worth the study of anyone interested in the problems involved.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask one question of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). Will a copy of this report be made available individually to the hon. members?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will be very glad to see that a certain number of copies are put in the hands of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and in the hands of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards), and he can distribute them.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): This is a disgrace. The press has had this report for two and a half hours and the hon. Attorney-General (Hon. Mr. Roberts) sat there and briefed them, and now he suggests that this responsible body, that we, will have but two or three copies?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I did not say two or three copies. I will be glad to put in the hands of the hon. leader of the Opposition whatever number of copies he wants.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Every hon. member is entitled to a copy and we are entitled to an opportunity to debate this. Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is that this is one of the most serious things that has ever come before this Legislature and the hon. Attorney-

General (Hon. Mr. Roberts) is suggesting that this report does not suggest organized crime in Ontario? Why, it demonstrates that the very tie-in between New York and Ontario is—it comes right out of the pages. This report was designed and intended to talk about enforcement which is the hon. Minister's responsibility. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. Attorney-General owes it to this very Legislature now to tell us what he thinks about this report.

He has had it for two weeks. He has had an opportunity to think about it and he certainly must have opinions. Is this report acceptable? Does he believe and does he think that legalized gambling is the answer to this problem in Ontario?

Does he think that a Dominion bureau can do the job that constitutionally is required to be done by the province of Ontario? Does he think that this does the job of the New York State Crime Commission that constantly has the opportunity to investigate these problems? These are the things we want to know. And this brief statement certainly is not going to be accepted.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this report is tabled on the second day the House has been in session, to provide information for the benefit of the hon. members of the House. It is here for all the hon. members to see. It is not permitted for debate today as the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has simply given an explanation to the hon. members of what the report contains so the hon. members may make up their own minds as to whether they wish to pursue any further study of it.

As far as debating the report is concerned, the first point is of course that it is a report which was submitted by an independent body to the hon. Attorney-General and is not a document of this House, such as is a report of a select committee of the House. On the other hand, if you refer to the Speech from the Throne you will find that we do propose to introduce certain legislation dealing with the maintenance of law and order and at that time there will be an opportunity to debate the matters contained in this report. In the meantime the report is available for study by any hon. members of the House who wish to look at it.

If necessary, I would be prepared to consider the possibility of putting the report on the order paper to be debated, if this is what the House would wish. But it does seem to me that there will be other opportunities to debate these things during this session, and this report is submitted so that in those debates any hon. member taking part will be fully informed with all the information that we have been able to gather on this subject through the means of this committee.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to hear the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) say that it is not a document of the House. After all, this commission was set up by a Cabinet Minister, costs of the commission undoubtedly were paid by the province of Ontario. The government has seen fit to release this report to the press—and it was released to the press, I would presume, from reading one of the daily papers early in the day, because there is a story on the front page of one of the daily papers that says: BETTING PROBE ASKS NEW TEETH.

To read that story you presume the gentleman who wrote the article had some knowledge of what was in the report. It seems rather strange to me that a report, as important to the welfare of this province as this report seems to be, as the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has indicated it might be, should be placed in the hands of the press and not in the hands of the hon. members; and that the hon. Attorney-General gratuitously said he "will make a few copies available to the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Wentworth."

Surely it is a document that should be placed in the hands of every hon. member just as soon as possible. And surely it is a document that has the utmost importance in all of its aspects. And surely it is a document that should be fully and thoroughly discussed.

It is not an answer, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, to put a few words in the Speech from the Throne or to have the hon. Attorney-General say—being quoted in the paper today—that the commission (that is the commission referred to in the Throne Speech) will be able to meet any situation like the current gambling and crime controversy. The papers have been quoting the hon. Attorney-General correctly over the months: there is not any real controversy, there is not any real issue, there is nothing there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, surely this is something that has to be fully discussed; and the mechanics of it, the machinery to do it, starts with this report. It is completely ridiculous for the hon. Attorney-General to say he will make a couple of copies available.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in handling this kind of a report I am particularly complaining about the fact that some hon. members of the House walked into this House with copies of the report and had it in advance of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) making his statement.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It was a request made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, only one. That is okay, Mr. Speaker. If there is only one my point is made and I shall deal with that point. If the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is going to give copies of the report to the press, and other hon. members of the House are going to come in here with copies of that report in advance, I think there is an obligation on the hon. Attorney-General—if he wants to keep it confidential for the period it is in the hands of the press until he makes his statement in the House—that he place a copy confidentially in the hands of each of the leaders of the parties in the Opposition. He did not do that.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) would just let me say what I did do; I said it was for release after tabling in the Legislature on Thursday afternoon, November 23, so far as the press is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not the point I am raising. The point I am raising is that if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) released it to the press and other hon. members of the House came in here with a copy—I am not criticizing the press, I am not criticizing the other hon. members—I am criticizing the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am used to it.

Mr. MacDonald: I know the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is used to it and he will have to get used to it a great deal more—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

I would ask the hon. members of the Legislature to address the Speaker in their remarks and not directly across the Chamber as has been done.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have made my point and I hope that as a general proposition this can be considered in the future, not just with reference to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). If reports are going to be given out confidentially, if the hon. Minister does not want to distribute them and broadcast to all the hon. members of the House, I think each of the parties in the Opposition is entitled to equality of distribution, at least at the leadership level, until it becomes generally distributed.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, is this: I think it is ludicrous that it should be suggested we have only a few copies to distribute around, because there should be a copy to every hon. member of the House. Everybody should have an opportunity to study this because the net effect of this report is to pull the rug out from under the hon. Attorney-General on the basis of all his pronouncements for the last year.

He is talking out of both sides of his mouth, Mr. Speaker, and I will talk to you on this. He is saying to the people of this province—and he continues to say it in his inimitable way—there is no organized crime; whereas (a) he brings in a report which documents the existence of organized crime, and (b) he brings in announcements through the Throne Speech that there is going to be a bill to set up a police commission in this province to cope with organized crime.

When we have this sort of hugger-mugger approach on the part of the hon. Attorney-General, I think that everybody should have a copy of this. I even would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) that maybe it is better that we take this issue as an issue by itself and put it on the order paper and have a debate on it. Otherwise it is going to be running through all of the other debates in the Throne Speech.

I think it might be the tidiest procedure to have a debate dealing with this as quickly as possible and perhaps then the pent-up feelings of a lot of people in this province as well as this House, because of the procedure in this House of the hon. Attorney-General, can be coped with.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, may I raise with you, sir, a point relating to the privileges of this House. I speak as an hon. member of this House sent here to represent some 40,000 people.

It is not my intent to criticize the press. I feel a great many of us or most of us would hesitate very much before doing so. But I ask you, sir, as an hon. member of this House, for at least equal treatment with members of the press.

Some of us were about the government's business, or our participation in it, around nine o'clock this morning. I was in the corridor, sir, and it early became apparent that there was a big meeting of the press in the office of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). One would not need to be excited by much curiosity to make some inquiries what it was about. We were told, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Attorney-General, along with Professor Morton and his committee, were going to brief the press on the contents of what will be known in a day or so as the Morton report. One of the personnel of the office of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), sir, was dispatched at a reasonable time, around 11 o'clock, to inquire at the office of the hon. Attorney-General whether a copy of the report might be made available to us. He was refused. He was refused, sir.

At about 11.45 a.m. there was a great exodus of the members of the fourth estate proceeding in an easterly direction along the corridor, each one of them, sir, having a copy of the Morton report. The hon. Attorney-General, sir, did not deign to make available a copy of the report to the office of the hon. leader of the Opposition until approximately 2 o'clock.

Having made that preamble, let me again assert that it is not my desire to criticize the hon. members of the fourth estate who are friendly to all of us, but I ask, sir, that at least we get equal treatment. That is all.

I do not know what Professor Morton, if his language—and he is a very able and well respected academic person in the field of law, and I assume that he writes with the most articulate of English—I do not know if his report is in good prose using the best of the Queen's English. I do not know in the first place why it is necessary for Professor Morton to be asked to give the time to make further explanations to the members of the press. But, sir, I do not complain about that. All I ask is that if Professor Morton is asked to make explanations about his report to the members of the press, then perhaps the meeting could be arranged so that members of the Opposition party could also attend and have the benefit of explanation, dissertation, exposition, by the able Professor Morton. Perhaps in the future that can be done.

But, sir, I say, and I measure my words carefully, that I have always had the impression in the two years that I have sat in this House that the least important person in the House is the hon. member of the Opposition and many times I have, though I do not criticize them, I have envied the members of the fourth estate for the treatment they are given by this government. I say these words today, sir, when we have the era of a new broom on the other side, that these things that give us cause to complain may with the emergence of the new hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) be swept away so that we have no longer any source or need for rancour in our hearts. That we may go forward into the new era in a spirit of co-operation, and may I say, sir, and I do not exaggerate too much, a spirit of brotherly love.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if you would permit me to add one further word in the light of the information that has now been given to the House, I would just like to underline in specific terms my general comments. The hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is presumably responsible for dispensing justice and other things impartially. And what he did now, we discover, is to deliver a report to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) at 2 o'clock and we have none in connection with the New Democrats of this House, we have not one as yet.

Now, I know it is difficult in view of his past practices for the hon. Attorney-General to be impartial, but I would ask you to use your good offices to try to persuade him to treat not only us on this side of the House fairly along with the members of the fourth estate, but the parties on an equal basis too.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to take the hon. members of the House into confidence. I wish to make a statement to the House respecting the provision of services to the travelling public on 401 Highway.

The government has decided as a matter of policy to establish service facilities on Highway 401 which now extends continuously for 240 miles from London to 14 miles east of Belleville. While the details of this policy are still being worked on, plans are being prepared to establish service areas at six or seven selected points so that motorists can obtain the essential services required for their comfort and safety. The construction of these areas will be proceeded with as soon as possible and during the construction period it is planned to have temporary facilities available to provide the motorist with essential requirements.

The question of service areas has over the past year or so been receiving careful consideration by the government and The Department of Highways has been conducting studies to consider the many problems which had to be solved before an intelligent and satisfactory policy could be established. For instance, it has been necessary to consider the present and anticipated traffic volume from patterns to arrive at a conclusion which will provide the maximum service to the motoring public with the minimum effect on established business.

I feel that we now have the solution to most of these problems. Up until this year the lack of services on 401 has not been considered serious, but with the closing of the gap between constructed sections it is now felt that a start should be made on the establishment of these areas.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): In regard to this statement the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) has just made, according to an item which appeared in the London Free Press, The Department of Highways has recently established temporary safety patrols on this highway that takes care of this neglect on the part of The Department when the highways were originally planned. Would the hon. Minister tell us how many such patrols are being effected at the present time, where they are being effected and the approximate cost of those patrols?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I would be very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to secure the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) a question arising out of his remarks. Are these services going to be owned by the province of Ontario or are they going to be private?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is just a matter of detail that is being worked out.

Mr. Singer: Would the hon. Minister be prepared to announce how the detail is going to be worked out, because I think this is most important, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should have a full statement on this.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this now concludes the business of the House for today. Tomorrow will be taken up with routine proceedings. I believe there are some more bills that will be introduced and possibly a report of the striking committee and on Monday we will proceed with the moving and seconding of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4:35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1961

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery and in the west gallery the students from Peterborough teachers college.

I have been asked to announce that the striking committee will now meet at 12 noon on Monday and the amended notices will be on the desks of the members of that committee this morning.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the town of Oakville and the corporation of the township of Trafalgar praying that an Act may pass defining an area, in the new municipality created by the amalgamation of the township and the town, comprising all that part of the said new municipality lying south of the upper Middle Road; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Windsor praying that an Act may pass authorizing the inclusion on the board of governors of the Metropolitan General Hospital of a member appointed by the Essex County Council; and for other purposes.

Of the board of trustees of the Roman Catholic Separate Schools for the city of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass raising the membership of the board from nine to ten.

Of the corporations of the county of Essex, the town of Leamington and the Public Utilities Commission of the town of Leamington praying that an Act may pass to confirm an agreement for the supply of water and the furnishing of fire protection to the Sun Parlour Home for Senior Citizens.

Of the corporation of the Young Men's-Young Women's Christian Association of Cornwall praying that an Act may pass exempting its real property from municipal taxation except for local improvements.

Of the corporation of the township of Wicksteed authorizing certain school construction and debentures therefor.

Of the corporation of the town of Richmond Hill praying that an Act may pass re-constituting the council.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have four bills related to the same general matter and I would like to introduce them now if I may and if there are any questions I could speak to them all when I have finished with the fourth.

AN ACT TO AMALGAMATE THE DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND THE DEPARTMENT OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL RELATIONS AND THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amalgamate The Department of Economics and The Department of Federal and Provincial Relations and The Department of Commerce and Development.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO PARKS INTEGRATION BOARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Conservation Authorities Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE PARKS ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Parks Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, the first bill I introduced was a bill which I think even from its title is self-explanatory. We at the moment have a department which is usually called or referred to as The Department of Economics. Its full name actually is The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and, as hon. members are aware, there is a second department entitled The Department of Commerce and Development. Both of these departments are going to be amalgamated by this one bill and the undertakings of each integrated into the one department.

Attached or connected to this main bill are three others, and there may be several others, wherein in the past the Minister in charge of the department has been named as the Minister of Commerce and Development, such as in The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act, The Parks Assistance Act and The Conservation Authorities Act.

In the case of The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act we have simply substituted the name of the Minister of Economics and Development in place of the Minister of Commerce and Development; and in the case of The Conservation Authorities Act and The Parks Assistance Act, we simply provide that instead of a named Minister, the Minister shall be the member of the Executive Council designated by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to administer the Act.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I have some bills.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Provincial Parks Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, I might say the purpose of this bill is to add conservation officers to those persons who are presently entitled to the same authority as a member of the Ontario Provincial Police force while in a provincial park.

THE FOREST FIRES PREVENTION ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Forest Fires Prevention Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to permit the department to enter into agreement for forest fire protection and prevention and control with agencies represented by the government of Canada and other Crown agencies.

THE FORESTRY ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Forestry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: The purpose of this bill is to still further explain the meaning of the term "owner" within the Act at the present time.

THE FISH INSPECTION ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend The Fish Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment will authorize the making of regulations respecting the marketing of uninspected and sub-standard fish, and this is really legislation which is complementary to the work of the federal agricultural department with respect to the handling and inspection of fish.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I had risen before because I understood you to call the orders of the day, so with apologies to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) I have a question to direct to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan).

The question is—and he has already been provided with copies of that question—if, as reported in the press, the hon. Provincial Treasurer is to make some changes in the forms issued to the retail vendors in this province, would he seriously consider directing that these be printed in both French and English, realizing as he does that in northeastern Ontario, the Ottawa valley, and the border regions, there is a large percentage of the citizens resident in those areas who speak the French language and thus a great majority of the retail merchants are French-speaking?

I presume that in the administration of this retail sales branch that the hon. Provincial Treasurer wants as little acrimony as possible among the merchants and in my own section of northeastern Ontario, certainly the Ottawa valley and those regions that I spoke of, most of the merchants speak the French language.

I am sure some of these forms are rather difficult to comprehend even to those who understand English.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Has the member finished his question?

Mr. Troy: Well, I think some amplification—

Mr. Speaker: No, just the question.

Mr. Troy: Yes.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Nipissing, I may say in regard to the first part that the forms issued by the sales tax branch will be under constant review, as are all department forms, so that at the time of reprinting any improvements can be incorporated therein. I might indicate that while the use of modern business machinery is extremely helpful, it sometimes also restricts flexibility.

With regard to the second part of his question, that too will be kept in mind and as a matter of fact has been kept in mind. Some members of the present staff are bi-lingual and as additional staff—for instance, audit staff—is appointed, some of these certainly will be bilingual.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I have not asked that second question yet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would just like to point out since we are in the first part of the session, that when the members submit a question to the Speaker, they should give the question as submitted to the Speaker without any amplification.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, may not the questioner have an opportunity to present his question to the House? I have not asked this second part of the question yet, sir. The question was: Will he also see to it that he includes as soon as possible in the personnel of the field staffs in northern Ontario, those who have the qualification of being bilingual? In the North Bay region there is not one, and the bulk of the merchants in those smaller communities speak the French language.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The 53rd Annual Report of The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1960.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to say in relation to the report that the hon. Minister is now tabling, I believe this report has been distributed during the year to all hon. members, but I have sent for additional copies and I had hoped they would be here by now. If not they will be put on the hon. members' desks today and they will have them to look at if they care to do so.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that concludes the business of the House for today. On Monday we will commence the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:00 o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1961

The House met at 3:05 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery members of the Women's Liberal Association, Stouffville.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the audit office, The Department of Insurance, the office of the Lieutenant-Governor, the office of the Prime Minister and The Department of Travel and Publicity for the year ending March 31, 1963, and recommends them to the legislative assembly. Toronto, November 27, 1961.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation this is a procedure for tabling the estimates of these departments. This was done last year. It will now go on the order paper and can be called in the normal course of business.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) whether this referred to supplementary estimates or estimates for the ensuing year, and I understand it refers to estimates for the ensuing year.

I am sure you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that last year there was considerable discussion about this very matter. At that time several hon. members of the Opposition—I think both Opposition parties—took the position that we would agree, if you will, to the consideration of certain estimates before the budget presentation on condition that this would not become a fixed procedure in subsequent years.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that last year we were feeling our way with respect to a fall session, and, understandably, certain things were undertaken and done by way of experimentation. But I think the period of experimentation is over and I would suggest that it becomes obvious now that it is not a good thing to consider estimates of varying departments before the entire budget is before the House.

You will recall that last year we were consistently faced with this type of position; we had the estimates of a given department before us and observations were made in the light of those limited estimates with no knowledge of the overall picture. My recollection is that on several occasions we were reprimanded for not objecting, if you will, to the expenditures of certain sums of money in specific form when we criticized the budget in general at a later date.

Mr. Speaker, I must say for myself and for my party I certainly take objection to this procedure. I think it is faulty, I think it is going to create a terrible precedent. I think it violates common sense and I think that for the good order and conduct of this House it must be set aside. I recognize, as a result of the fact that fall sessions have now, I think, become an established thing, that it may be necessary to consider the advisability of speeding up the budget presentation in advance of its usual presentation in late February. Be that as it may, we are talking now about a procedure which is fundamentally illogical, that lacks common sense and that invariably is going to lead this House into certain errors. It is bound to, Mr. Speaker.

Now this is the observation I want to make at this juncture; and I make it in the most emphatic language I can because I think that it is erroneous, it is harmful to the good conduct of the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I remember the discussion on this point last year, it did not revolve around this particular procedure. As a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) said last year that he understood and had no objection to it.

He states the debate last year upon this point revolved around the question of overlapping of debates. The situation simply is this: we have a fall session and I want to deal with as many as possible of what might be termed routine matters, between now and the time we adjourn. If hon. members will notice, these departments to be dealt with are audit, insurance, Lieutenant-Governor, the Prime Minister and travel and publicity. In other words, they are not the large-spending departments of government, nor do they have—if I may put it this way—the importance that some of the larger departments have.

It appears to me as being in the interest of the efficiency of the House to introduce these now and to table them, so that they may be looked at and they will be introduced and dealt with in the ordinary course of business. Then, when we do get down to the budget and the major business of the government, these departments will be out of the way.

I do not think this caused any distress last year. I do not remember any particular discussion on the point after it was done. We have three weeks or so in which to get through as much of the business of the House as is possible and in order to be able to do that I wanted these items on the order paper.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak again, I disagree with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) when he says that last year I consented. I consented on a certain condition and the condition was essential to the consent. The condition simply was the realization that we were undertaking fall sessions for the first time and necessarily we would have to do some experimenting.

But the apparent logic and common sense of what the hon. Prime Minister is now saying is pricked, Mr. Speaker, when I remind you that last year we started in this relatively unobjectionable fashion but it was not long before we were considering major departments and my recollection is that we considered many major departments before the budget was actually presented.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the concern I have today. Surely, it seems to meet with fairness, if you will, of accommodation, to say, in effect, we are only going to consider several departments which are non-controversial in nature and why not hear the representation with respect to the budget of those several departments. But it will not be long before we will consider more important departments and then we will be told that this was all discussed at the beginning of the session and approval granted.

I want to make it emphatically clear that my objection last year was founded in the realization that we had to give and take because we were undertaking a new experiment in this House. That is not the case now.

Secondly, hon. members recall that last year there was much discussion about the fact that Ottawa, and what Ottawa might or might not do, would be relevant to this budgetary presentation. That is not the case now and I simply appeal, Mr. Speaker, for orderliness in this respect. Sure we have the business of this House, but why not proceed with the business that this House was called to undertake, the Throne Speech? The Speech from the Throne, the replies, and Mr. Speaker, there will be a good deal of legislation that can be conducted. I appeal directly to the hon. Prime Minister for the sake of order and the avoidance of a bad precedent.

The hon. Prime Minister will know as a lawyer that it is the precedent that causes bad law. By giving in now, we are going to be precluded, I am confident, from taking objection later on or next year. This is not a good procedure, it cannot be sound in logic or common sense. And because it cannot, because it fails those tests, I suggest that we should defer this particular motion at this time.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to that this whole thing is foreign.

Take, for instance . . . yes, foreign, to the operation of any governmental body at all. In the instance of a local town council or city, what happens is that they file the entire budget first so members can look it over. After that they discuss each of the departments.

Now it was clear, it was understood by every hon. member of the House, that one of the reasons that the government wanted to deal with this thing in a piecemeal fashion a year ago was because the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) at that time felt he was going to get something extraordinary from Ottawa. As a matter of fact what he wound up with is not even worth talking about. At that time it seemed to be a very important point. Instead of getting anything from Ottawa, what we wound up with actually was the establishment in this province of the sales tax.

I think the whole thing is wrong and I think we ought to go back to the old way of doing it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent this debate is going to continue and I must confess that I cannot get particularly excited about it.

I think we have a couple of problems here; we may have a problem inherent to the programme of last year, namely that there was an undue delay of the budget which resulted in us moving from departments not seriously affected by the budget to other bigger departments. This is where I think we got into the difficulty that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) quite rightly underlines. But if we are going to have the budget, as I hope it will be, very early in the new year, then it seems to me that there is no serious violation of the procedures and the rights of the Legislature to deal with these smaller departments, these smaller estimates, in the fall session.

However, I would just like to add in this connection one other thing, Mr. Speaker. One of the things I believe in the mind of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is that he wants to get something done in the fall session. Well, (a) I think we should proceed without delay to the Throne Debate and clear the thing off as much as possible, particularly if there is a hope that we are going to get the budget immediately upon the resumption of the House in the new year; and (b) I think it is time that this House should give some prior consideration to bills and resolutions on the order paper in the names of private hon. members instead of treating them in the wholly derogatory fashion that they normally have been treated in the past.

I am sorry the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) looks at me so reprimandingly—but what usually happened is that they came in between the hours of 10 and 12 on the last week of the session, with a few exceptions that prove the general rule. It seems to me that in the orderly consideration of the business of the House, we could have some of this in the fall session and have some of them voted on instead of dying on the order paper.

I must confess, to come back again, that if the hon. Prime Minister is going to bring the budget in, or see that the budget is brought in, early in the new year so that we do not move from the small departments into the big departments, then I cannot get excited about considering the estimates of two or three of the smaller departments in the fall.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that I can bring this debate to some degree of conclusion. The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, and you will know better than I, that the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor has now presented these estimates and there is not a thing we can do if we want to. But I take objection in principle.

Mr. Speaker: I fully realize what the hon. member has said, and the hon. member has spoken three times on this subject. I was about to rise and say that this matter would be better dealt with when the motion is before the House, "that the House move into committee of supply."

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the Sudbury High School District Board praying that an Act may pass authorizing the execution of an agreement with the Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge District High School Board relative to the operation and maintenance of schools outside the jurisdiction of the Sudbury Board; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass respecting charges for laying and repairing water service pipes from the main pipe to owners' premises.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, of course this is the motion that you made reference to just a few moments ago and I realize that I have had the opportunity now to speak on several different occasions.

I simply re-emphasize, Mr. Speaker, what I have said here before, that I think this procedure is wrong in principle and I think that there is ample opportunity to consider other business of the House between now and the time that we adjourn in the middle of December or whenever it be. I am confident that there is on the order paper now or will be within a matter of a very few days, sufficient business to occupy our full attention and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I simply reiterate and underscore what I have said and I hope that other hon. members will have the opportunity now to speak to this motion.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): I should like to ask a question of either the hon.

Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) or the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) with respect to this matter.

My question is, can either of these two hon. Ministers advise this House whether or not there is to be any change in the allotment of funds which will be expended in the forthcoming year? It seems to me that if there is to be a change either upward or downward in the allocation of funds that it very well could have an effect on the budgets which we are going to be asked to approve in the estimates which were suggested by the hon. Prime Minister.

It seems to me, sir, that it is absurd to consider, no matter how small, any of these estimates without some overall knowledge of the amount of money which is going to be expended by this government in the forthcoming year. I am sure that there is not any group of directors or shareholders which would approve expenditures of any department of any reasonable business without some realization of the overall money which is available to be expended. I would suggest to you, sir, that this thing is totally absurd, that it is almost an insult to the hon. members of the Opposition to be asked to again approve these various estimates in piecemeal without any idea of what the overall program is to be.

It might very well be that there might be a cut-back, perhaps this government might even decide to repeal its sales tax, I do not know. If this were to happen, Mr. Speaker, how in the name of reason can we go ahead and approve the individual estimates without any idea whatsoever of the overall program? I think it is ridiculous, I think it is wrong and I am very much opposed to this suggestion at this time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there have been several points raised in this debate—both in the part of it that is in order and the part that was out of order—but I can assure the hon. members of the House that the budget will be brought in at the earliest possible moment. It would be my wish that it be in just as early as we can conceivably get it ready when we meet after the Christmas and New Year's recess.

Secondly, I can only reiterate that the estimates being tabled here this afternoon are for departments that will not have a large effect on the overall financial picture of the government. That is why we have chosen these departments rather than the larger departments, because while theoretically the last comment might have some validity, practically the estimates of these departments will have very little, if any, effect on the overall financial picture of the government.

I will attempt to have a full picture before the House before the estimates of the major departments are brought in, because I understand exactly what the hon. members are speaking about and I will be sure they have that information before we discuss the estimates of the departments that are really going to have a large effect on the overall financial picture.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Will the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) give us his word that he will not call any other departments, other than the ones that have been mentioned today? Because from our experience of last year it went from three to four and then kept on going. I think perhaps we could accept them at face value if he said just these four departments were going to be called, but—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is preaching what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has just said.

Mr. Whicher: No, but if he gives his word that he will not call any more, it might help us out a bit.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. Why is it necessary to proceed under this pattern when for years and years we were able to proceed under the old system? I would like to know the reason.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I move that the House will tomorrow resolve itself into committee on ways and means.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I quite realize what is happening, that we are now on another motion. The first motion, I am sure, was left in abeyance to the extent that there were several here who wished to speak on it. I am not going to complain of that. But, Mr. Speaker, I am going to advise you right now that we feel sufficiently strongly about this to demonstrate our objection to it, and the only way we can do so is to vote against that, and we are doing that formally right now.

Mr. MacDonald: Much ado about nothing.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye".

All those opposed will please say "nay".

I declare the "ayes" and have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Amend the Farm Products Marketing Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to draw your attention and through you the attention of the hon. members of this House, to a statement which appears in paragraph 178, page 81, of the "Report of the committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the fluoridation of municipal water supplies". This reads as follows:

Although one witness, a qualified dentist and physician, stated that, 'We don't need to fill deciduous teeth', this seems to us to be contrary to good dental practice since a 'clean mouth' implies cared-for teeth.

The witness, who claims to have good reason to believe he is the one referred to in this paragraph, approached me after the close of the last session of the Legislature, asking that this be corrected publicly in such manner as to show that this statement in the report did not even convey the meaning of the statement he gave in evidence. His evidence, which is to be found on page 2213, lines 4, 5 and 6 of the transcribed evidence, shows very clearly that what he actually said differs greatly from the statement reported. The transcript of evidence reads as follows:

I would like to go on record as saying that it is not necessary to fill with fillings of durable nature deciduous teeth.

The witness is Dr. Samuel W. Leslie of Toronto—physician, surgeon and dental surgeon. I am quite sure this hon. House would have me bring this to public attention and express our regret that the report of Dr. Leslie's statement did not convey the same information he gave in his testimony.

At the time that this report was tabled, Dr. Leslie was in Europe, and as soon as he came back and read the report he contacted my office. I spoke to the chairman of the committee, the late Mr. Justice Morden, who expressed very great regret on his own behalf that the meaning of the doctor's testimony was not fully brought out in the report. Unfortunately, Mr. Justice Morden died before he contacted Dr. Leslie, as was his intention.

Dr. Leslie is very much concerned about this because this reported testimony of his has been very much misunderstood by his professional colleagues.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), copies of which have already been forwarded to you and to him. Incidence of loss of livestock from rabies still prevails in Nipissing.

Press reports indicate that 32 residents of the eastern district of the riding—that is the area of Eau Claire—who have had contacts with affected animals, have been given injections of serum.

As the hon. Minister has had, no doubt, representations from other districts, particularly Parry Sound, will the hon. Minister urge the Cabinet and council to restore to farmers who have lost stock through rabies since September 28, 1961, the compensation which was revoked by order-in-council as of that date?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member, for the advance notice of which I thank him, our department is examining the loss sustained by livestock producers in the province of Ontario, and when that information is compiled a matter of compensation for livestock lost to date through rabies will be presented to the Cabinet council for their decision.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question? Does the hon. Minister not know that the federal government has agreed that there will be no cut-off date whatever for compensation as far as they are concerned? Apparently they consider that rabies, like death and taxes, is with us and will be with us ad infinitum.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, we are aware that the federal government has not revoked the order-in-council under which compensation for rabies was paid. However, I think it is only fair to say that the action which was taken by The Department of Agriculture here in the province of Ontario was based on the fact that the experience in previous outbreaks of rabies throughout the province in years gone by has shown that rabies has not been something that carried on for very long. There has been a wave of it, it has come in cycles and then it has gone. This was what was anticipated to be the case at this time.

I think we all realize the fact that the wildlife population of this province has increased greatly in the matter of carriers of rabies. I am thinking about foxes, skunks and raccoons that have been known to be rabies carriers. This is true in southwestern Ontario particularly; we hardly see a fox any more. Before the outbreak of rabies there was quite a considerable number of foxes. Rabies is something that is apparently starting again in the north.

The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) has brought this to my attention privately. We have discussed it and I suggested to him then that we are looking at this thing from the standpoint that perhaps with the increased number of wildlife we have in the province that we are going to have to look at this matter on somewhat of a permanent basis.

I can assure the hon. member my sympathy lies entirely with the farmers who have sustained loss through rabies because it is one of those things the farmer really cannot protect himself against. I would feel as the federal government has not counteracted their order-in-council dealing with this legislation that we will have to look at it in somewhat the same light. Until the facts are known this is the stand that we are taking.

Mr. Troy: This is directed to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay).

Since the people of Ontario as well as the hon. members of this Legislature are anxious to ascertain if the Ontario Northland Railway terminal at Moosonee is feasible as a sea port, when will the hon. Minister release to this House the report of the hydrographic survey of the harbour at Moosonee which was prepared by the federal Department of Mines and Technical Surveys several months ago?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): I would say to the hon. member who asked the question—I thank him for giving me notice—that when I did receive notice of his question this morning I prepared a short memorandum in connection with this and I thought he might be interested in it.

The purpose of the investigation to which the hon. member referred—and there is a report, which I have here—the purpose of the investigation was to provide data for a study of the feasibility of constructing a harbour near Moosonee with deep-sea shipping facilities.

The study was requested by the hon. Minister of Planning and Development in 1959, of the federal government on the recommendation of the northern economic development committee. The federal Department of Public Works and not The Department of Mines as the hon. member has referred to it, set up the study methods and co-ordinated the work of the other federal departments participating. The following field surveys were conducted in 1959 and 1960—hydrographic, topographic, hydrometric and soil. The report was submitted to the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development on August 28, by the federal hon. Minister of Public Works.

Dredging and dyking requirements for two harbour sites were proposed, one at Moosonee and one six miles downstream at Sandy Island. The report states that the site at Sandy Island would be less costly to construct. Ninety-one thousand, two hundred dollars was spent of which the province of Ontario contributed $50,000.

The federal government agreed to complete at their own expense this year additional studies to confirm the existence of a new channel four to five feet deeper than the one now being used. This hydrographic study is expected to cost between $10,000 and $15,000. I spoke to the deputy Minister of Mines in Ottawa this morning, who advised me that this report has not yet been handed in to The Department of Public Works in Ottawa and until it has been—and it is now being worked on—there can be really no final report from the federal Department of Public Works in connection with it, because the Moose river has been found to be breaking through a new channel which, we believe, will be four to five feet deeper than its old channel, which will save a great deal of dredging.

In relation to the report to which the hon. member directed the House's attention: there are only ten copies of the report and of the books and charts that go with it, which we have received from The Department of Public Works. Copies were sent to the hon. Prime Minister's office, the Ontario Northland Railway, and The Department of Commerce and Development. Actually this report was not requested by this Legislature, nor was it initiated at its request and, therefore, this is not a report which would be tabled in this House. On the other hand, the report is available in my office and if the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), or any of the other hon. members of the House, would like to have a look at it I would be more than happy to make it available to them.

That is the state up to the moment. The next point is, what is now required? Following from this and the completion of the report which I hope to get from Ottawa within a short time—although they were unable to say exactly when it would be available—the next thing that will follow is an economic feasibility study of establishing a deep-sea harbour facility in the Moosonee area. Also, as an alternative or in addition to it, an approximate cost of establishing limited harbour facilities at one of two sites recommended in this report and on which there will be further data coming forward in the second report. This feasibility study, I should think, would take somewhere in the neighbourhood of three months to prepare and now that this report is available and as soon as I have the other report, I anticipate presenting it to the council for its decision as to whether a feasibility study would proceed and I should think that this likely would meet with its support.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio) begs leave to present the annual report of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1961.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wonder if I might ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a question with regard to the business of the House. It is in reference to two tag ends of the preliminary debate on the Morton report.

One, there was considerable discussion as to the availability of the report and I must say that since the debate, the wide range of interest that I have found to be the case has raised in my mind whether or not it would not be wise to have this report printed. This House has had reports of much less importance printed in the past and I would think that this is the kind of thing that should be available in sufficient quantities for everybody who wants it.

However, secondly, and more important to the business of the House, Mr. Speaker, is that we decide—and the hon. Prime Minister himself raised the question—whether or not this report will be put on the order paper to be dealt with in a specific debate, or whether it is going to be dealt with in bits and pieces throughout the Throne Speech debate. I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister has come to a conclusion as to which procedure he proposes to follow.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, the report, I believe, has been printed. I asked for enough copies to be made available for all the hon. members of the House. There may not have been—I know that at the time we discussed this, I believe that was on Thursday last, there were a relatively small number of copies of the report when you take into consideration there are 98 required here. But I asked for enough to be printed and if there is any demand for them we will produce them.

Secondly, I can only say what I said last Thursday, that this report really should only be tabled in the House for information as it is not a product of the House but is a product of a department of government. On the other hand, I did say that I felt there would be places where the implications of it can be discussed in legislation which will be before the House.

Now, if it proves that this is not a sufficient vehicle or form to have a free debate on the contents of the report in the House, then I would be happy to consider by motion of the whole House, I suppose, putting it on the order paper as an item of business and having it discussed, if this appears to be necessary. But it is my own opinion at this stage that it will not be necessary. If it is, I will arrange to do it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to take something under advisement.

I had prepared earlier today a question that I intended to ask of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and I have learned now that he is absent and will be absent for some time. Therefore I am going to direct the question to the hon. Prime Minister in the knowledge before I ask it that—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. Attorney-General will be here tomorrow.

Mr. Wintermeyer: If the hon. Prime Minister is not in a position to answer the question I would ask him to take it under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that the hon. member was advised that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) would be in the House tomorrow. He is unavoidably away today and the usual procedure has been to hold such questions until the hon. Minister is actually in the House. Now perhaps we can follow with this procedure which has been established.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter is of real urgency at this particular time. I would appeal directly to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) simply to take this under advisement. That is all I am asking, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The relative urgency of the question is the decision of the Speaker, and I do not like to cause a precedent by getting away from procedure which we have fairly well established.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on this occasion I am going to bow to your will, but I assure, Mr. Speaker, that there are occasions when I think an hon. member, any hon. member, has the right to draw a matter to public attention. The hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is not here today and I can see no objection whatsoever to the procedure I suggested. However, in view of your instruction and direction I will concur in your instruction on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order, consideration of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

Applause.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Hamilton (Renfrew North), that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor as follows:

To the Honourable J. Keiller Mackay, D.S.O., V.D., Q.C., D.C.L., LL.D., Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario.

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious Speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the first thing that everyone does when they are honoured by being asked to move the traditional motion I have just made, is to reach for the volumes containing the speeches given on similar occasions in previous years. I am no exception. I have closely studied the formalized oratory and tradition-bound phrases used from time immemorial by the movers of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. That I do not intend to copy my predecessors will not, I hope, be taken as any reflection on the worth of their words, but instead as an admission of my own inabilities.

I have never in my life been able to make a formal speech, repeating verbatim, phrases which already exist in logical form in a pre-released text and I am not going to start the practice today. This, therefore, is an apology in advance to you, Mr. Speaker, for a rambling effort, and a warning to any members of the press, who may hope to follow what has been prepared for them.

Of course the main duty of everyone in my position is to congratulate everyone else on the high position they have achieved, either since the last session of the House, or seemingly in the last 40 years of their life. I do not want to show disrespect for tradition, but my theme today will dwell on the changes and challenges which now confront us.

With a brand new administration guiding the affairs of the province, if I followed the usual format and individually dwelt, for at least 10 minutes, on the accomplishments, real or imagined, of every hon. member whose position or responsibility has altered because of the overall changes, we would be here well into a night session. Besides, I want to emphasize that because of these changes and challenges my feeling is that matters will have to be handled differently now, and how better can I emphasize this than by attempting to make a different-from-usual speech on this occasion?

Therefore, sir, I hope it will be understood by all, if I merely congratulate the new hon. Ministers of Labour (Mr. Warrender), Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), Highways (Mr. Goodfellow), Mines (Mr. Wardrope), and Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) on their assumption or change of portfolios. I hope I have not missed anybody there.

I am more than pleased on the elevation to the cabinet, of the new hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett), and of my good friend, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton).

We are all sorry to see good friends depart from the inner circle, but when we note the cessation of active departmental duties of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Daley), we want them to know that we are comforted in the realization that their long lifetime of sacrifice and public service promises to continue, although perhaps in less onerous positions.

The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), whom I have known for years before he entered this House, takes on extremely important duties as a member of the Water Resources Commission, a body second in importance in my opinion only to Ontario Hydro. We all admire the appointment as a solidly good one.

Every year, we gather in this historic chamber, 98 of us who have been chosen to represent our people, and every year our ranks are thinned by the passing of some of our colleagues. It is a sobering thought when we realize that during the life of the administration headed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), it has been necessary to hold 24 by-elections—with five others now pending—nearly all by reason of the deaths of sitting hon. members. No one should claim that the life of an Ontario politician is an easy one.

With the sudden death of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney), this House lost a friend who was a favourite of all. Jim Maloney had eloquence, Irish wit and a booming voice. I had always thought, as that crashing voice boomed out across this chamber, hurling verbal grapeshot against the ears of everyone opposite, that one of the advantages of being a back-bencher was that one sat behind, rather than in front of, Jim Maloney. He is already missed.

Harry Nixon's career established a record—42 years as the representative of the riding of Brant without a defeat even though he represented various political labels in this House. This record, awarded by the people who knew him best and trusted him, speaks more eloquently of the life, times, and character of this man than can any words of mine. He leaves behind an object lesson from which we can all learn, and something for which we can all strive.

Albert Wren is also with us no more. Here was a man of strong views who was a caustic critic whenever and wherever he deemed criticism to be deserved, and he did not confine it to his opponents. On occasion he was the stormy petrel of his own party when his sense of fair play and democracy was outraged. Mr. Speaker, we need more of that type.

My colleagues of all parties will join me, I know, in extending our condolences to the families and survivors of these three fine men. Their vacant places are a reminder of the fleeting nature of our existence and the need to give our best in the service of this province while there is yet time.

In offering to you, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations that you are again presiding over our deliberations, I would like to appeal to the other hon. members, and I include myself in this admonition, to make your official life here easier than we have done in the past. We have had scenes of rowdiness and rudeness in this chamber which have not been conducive to sensible deliberation of our province's affairs, nor have they added to the good reputation of any of us with those citizens who have taken the time to watch us in action.

In extending to you, Mr. Speaker, the greetings and good wishes from all my colleagues in the House, it is in the sure knowledge that your firmness and fairness and unfailing courtesy will quench the urgings in some of us to make more noise than sense, and that under your control and guidance, we will once more do credit to the traditions and rules of this House and the purposes for which we are here.

We are all also pleased and gratified that the jovial hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Brown) was chosen to be the deputy Speaker and Chairman of the committee of the whole House.

As my motion involves our Sovereign's representative, I would be remiss if I neglected to mention this province's affection for our Royal family.

The time-worn and tradition-laden phrase "Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects" is always used in these matters. I find those words totally inadequate as they do not express, to me at any rate, the warm, affectionate, and almost maternal feeling our people have when they see or speak about our Queen, and the Royal family. I hope that no further expression of loyalty and warm pride in our Queen and her family would be needed than our oft-repeated prayer of "God Save Our Queen."

In much the same spirit, I change now to speak of another ruler who is also regarded with affection, but perhaps not the same degree of loyalty is evident, at least, not from the hon. members opposite.

When the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost)—I am still not used to that phrase—announced that he was retiring from the premiership of this province, the news was received with a sense of shock by the people of Ontario.

This man has led them, and governed them—as their undoubted choice, and with their complete trust—with astuteness, with moderation, and with unselfish sacrifice, for 12½ years.

Twelve and a half years ago, Mr. Speaker, I was barely old enough to vote so that I can hardly conceive that this man, so sure, so steady, so right, was shouldering at that time—in the same sure, steadfast, and rightful way—the awesome and physically destroying responsibilities he was still shouldering just a few weeks ago.

It has been said that a man's life can sometimes be judged by the manner in which he takes leave of it. I don't think we can yet appreciate the toil and thought which must have gone into the transition to a new administration so that an orderly take-over by the new government would cause little disruption and no inconvenience to the public.

But aside from that aspect, contemplate with me the picture of a man, still perhaps at the height of his physical, mental, and political power, voluntarily and with no thought of higher position, stepping down from the limelight and the work which he enjoys and in which he so obviously thrives. It is an almost unique picture, Mr. Speaker, and could happen only with such a man, and only in a democracy, and even then, rarely.

We can only conclude that in taking this irrevocable and historic step, this man is showing that skill and judgment proved over the years, with the overriding and characteristic belief that he is acting in the best interests of the people of his loved province.

In the uncertain years that lie ahead I join, I hope, with every other hon. member of this House of every political affiliation, in hoping that his abilities and experience will not be lost to further public service.

On October 23-24-25 last, it was my pleasure and privilege—and an education in itself—to participate in the greatest political convention ever held in Ontario, when a new leader for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party was democratically chosen by representatives of all segments of our economic life and all geographic areas of our province. There is always a real rivalry for the top post in a healthy and growing concern, and this was no exception. I hope I never see the day when there is an acclamation for the leader of this party.

Seven candidates, all of them members of this honourable House, offered their services before the 7,000 persons who crowded into Varsity arena.

I do not need to relate the details which are fresh in the minds of all of us—although fresher to some of us, perhaps, than others. I hope that it is sufficient for me only to say once more, that I offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. member for London North (Mr. Robarts), who, on the eighth day of November last, became the Prime Minister of Ontario.

My belief is, that this relatively young man brings to this high office the qualities of mind and heart and soul and body which will establish him as one of the great Prime Ministers of this province. He is young enough to have the body, old enough to have the experience, capable enough to have the wisdom, and public spirited enough to know the sacrifices he, and his family, must make.

The fact that he comes from outside Toronto probably helps a lot too. The citizens of Ontario will be well served with the Robarts administration.

They will have to be. The changes form a mighty challenge to the future, and demand nothing else but our energetic best, no matter how insignificant our role in that future may be.

I have been speaking of change—change in this House, change in this government. These changes are but froth in the fermenting growth of the province, the nation, and the world around us.

This 1961 has been a census year in Canada. The figures will show what we all know; that there has been a great shift in population between rural regions and the urban communities. It will show the changed patterns of Ontario's life. The passing of time has changed Ontario, like the metamorphosis of an insect, into a great industrial community. We can yet determine, by our actions, whether we will turn into a colourful, active butterfly, or into a grey, grubby moth.

The 1961 census analysis has not yet been completed, but so dramatic has been the growth of Ontario since world war II that the special census of 1956 gave us the signposts of our development. Back in 1911, the distribution of Ontario's population was pretty well evenly balanced: about 1,200,000 rural, with about 1,300,000 urban. "Urban" in this context means everyone living in an organized city, town, or village, and "rural" means everyone else.

The peak of rural population came in 1941, with a rural census figure of about 1.5 millions. The urban figure had grown to 2½ millions.

By 1956 the rural population had slowly declined to 1½ millions, while the urban figure had exploded to over 4 millions.

We can rely too heavily on statistics, but there can be no doubt that figures such as these, soon to be supported in the 1961 census returns, reflect the dynamic change that cuts across the entire range of needs and demands, and challenges public policy as it stems from this parliament, the Legislature of Ontario.

The fact we must realize is that the Ontario individual of the second half of the 20th century will be, in general, a city dweller. whether we like it or not, this must force a change in politics, a change in social concepts, and a change in virtually every facet of government.

I personally welcome this trend and also our population increase. I feel it is our very real hope for the future in every way. Even though Canada is growing by about 400,000 persons every year I feel that this is one country in the world that could stand a real explosion of population. We should aim, as a matter of national policy, for a rate double that of the present growth, both by immigration and by qualifying for family allowances.

What a difference it would make right now, what a strong sane force we could be in world affairs, what a built-in market we would have, and what a more balanced nation we would be, if there were about half a billion of us.

There is no doubt in my mind that we some day will reach our goal, but the problem and challenges are already with us. Even in this stage of our development we have not met the practical problems of the clogging of our atmosphere with foul gases, the pollution of our streams with the sewage and offal from our factories and homes and streets, and the destruction of nature's greenery with the unimaginative substitution of asphalt parking lots.

We have not coped with these problems today: what will it be like in 20 years when Toronto is double the population it is now?

The challenge before the Legislature, now, not a few years from now, is to make plans for the complete remaking of our cities to establish urban living in terms of human dignity and good taste. Unfortunately, it is apparent that this requires government action to set the standards.

Our immediate problems also include a realization of these immense changes, and the challenge demands of us to put purpose, for example, in the lives of some of our older people who have retired into these massive concrete apartment houses 18 stories high, but who, with people all around them, really live in communal isolation.

They are fed, they are housed, they are clothed, yes. But they are dead, because our crowded busy cities roar away 18 floors beneath them.

The challenges confronting our handling of the younger people in the cities are even more pressing, because our modern day pace is destroying the souls and tastes of those who are our only potential. A system of government and representation and legislation geared to a far-off and never-to-return system of an agricultural province does not and will not fit today's needs.

Perhaps as both a lawyer and a politician I am overly aware of the challenges facing us because of our antiquated constitution. We forever pay tribute to the fathers of confederation, and, of course, because everyone does it, it must be right. But how could Sir John A. have foreseen the emergence of the welfare state, the unbelievable costs of defence, the swollen expenditures of education, and indeed the whole expanded role which the state plays today in the economy of the nation, the life of its citizens, and—more unbelievable to that man and the others with him in those days—even the use of its lands? We pay tribute to our constitution, forgetting that its obscurities and omissions have made our domestic politics into a continuing dog-fight that we call dominion-provincial relations, and too often have resulted in "passing the buck" so that a frustrated citizenry sees inaction replacing a logical apportionment of necessary responsibilities. It took us 80 years to make up our minds that we could interpret our own constitution, and only now, laboriously and slowly, are we evolving a plan for amending it.

Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, we are taking too long to do it. The time is over-ripe for a constitutional convention to completely revise the jurisdictions of our three, not just two, levels of government, and to more equitably divide the tax fields so that the government providing the service can itself pay for it.

A further challenge to us is the Commonwealth, a world system we helped to invent, and which we have neglected for a quarter of a century. It is now a multi-racial, multi-lingual group of countries in every stage of development and with almost every type of government. Social and political thinking in the majority of them now differ widely from our own. Any ideal we may have that parliamentary democracy, as we try to practise it, will be universal throughout the Commonwealth should unfortunately be discarded. They almost all are in need of our aid and assistance and whether we can afford it or not, to be a member in good standing and to make the Commonwealth mean something, will mean that we have to enlarge our help. This should not be the concern of the federal government alone. As well as being the right thing to do, I feel it would also be good business.

I do not want to be counted among those who feel that Britain's entry into the European common market will be an economic disaster for Canada. Firstly, we should recognize that to survive, Britain has to enter. This appears so inevitable to me that to argue against it is wasting both breath and time.

Certainly this entry will cause changes, and these challenges will hit us here in Ontario more than in any other area of Canada, I believe, because it could hit our secondary manufacturing, and Ontario has about 50 per cent of Canada's manufacturing total. But Britain cannot possibly enter at least until January, 1963. We have over a year to plan and change and take up the challenge. Some of the bleatings and breast-poundings of our manufacturers for years have been that we could not produce for Europe because there was no single market large enough, and this, coupled with Canada's own small domestic market forbade our producing and competing with American goods, or with the highly subsidized European goods. Already, in the last 12 months, Canada has increased her trade with the Inner Six group by about 41 per cent. Surely Britain's entry could mean an expansion of a single market for our secondary manufacturers' products, not a diminished demand.

We must always bear in mind, of course, that in most of the European market we will be competing with industries that are highly subsidized, especially by certain tax incentive plans that are unknown here. It may be that, for a few years at least, we will have to fight fire with fire. But as a nation we can and must do it, and if Ottawa fails to see the light, or takes a pessimistic attitude, this Legislature must never forget that we, too, levy tax on corporations, both directly and indirectly, and bold, newer plans may be called for.

It is an anomaly to me that while economic conditions improve, as they have been over the past year in this province, labour conditions have been deteriorating.

We saw a particularly violent strike last spring in the construction industry, now being probed by a Royal commission, which we all trust will come up with some solutions for the unique problems of that industry.

At the moment as well, the strike against the C.P.R. and the Royal York hotel is getting more bitter with every passing day. I wish to go on record, Mr. Speaker, as being in sympathy with the position of the strikers, particularly in regard to the job security issue, which I understand, was and is even more so now, the main issue in the dispute.

I believe that the hotel management attitude is almost like reading a history of the typical management attitude of 30 or 40 years ago, and I am sorry to see this type of conduct and attitude in what I thought was an enlightened day.

I must say however, that the tactics of the union executive have been nothing short of idiotic. I simply do not understand why they called a strike against one of our most entrenched and largest corporations, at a time of the year when unemployment is always at its greatest and consequently new help easy to obtain for a majority of jobs which are unskilled and do not need too much in the way of training. Certainly the strike has been almost broken, but that unfortunate result would not have happened, in my opinion, if the union had waited, say, until the third or fourth week of August to walk out.

In any event, they are out, and my purpose in even mentioning the strike here and now is to call "a pox on both their houses".

I represent part of the city of Toronto, and it is the people of the whole of the metro area who are now being hurt by the bull-headed attitude of both sides.

The convention business here in Toronto is extremely big business. It reaches into every aspect of the service industries and affects indirectly, thousands of incomes in this area and across this province. Since the Royal York strike began last spring, I am told that at least 18 large sized conventions have held their meetings elsewhere than that hotel. And these are only groups who already were booked into the place. There is no reliable estimate of business that has been driven either out of the hotel itself or out of Toronto and the province and the country which was not previously booked into the Royal York, or into Toronto as a whole.

But that has to do only with the past. The future is more worrisome, as some of these really large conventions make their plans for five and six years hence. If this strike continues very much longer, the reputation will be made and we will have a hard time ever living it down, especially in regard to the very large, and very lucrative, labour and service club conventions.

The Royal York management should realize that that hotel is the mainstay of the convention business for this whole province. Very few corporations have ever been as publicly assisted by Canada's and Ontario's taxpayers as has the C.P.R. and as a matter of fact, thanks to the discriminatory generosity of this Legislature, the people of Toronto, still assist that particular hotel through tax concessions unavailable to any other Toronto hotel.

Perhaps merely waiting for both sides voluntarily to get together is unrealistic. Perhaps, although regrettably, because the public is now being hurt more than the participants, compulsion is necessary.

These are only some of the changes and the resulting challenges in this rapidly changing province.

I feel that matters from here on in demand different methods, different solutions. For these reasons I am particularly glad to welcome a new administration under a man for whom I have every regard and respect.

St. George riding is honoured that its representative has been given this position and this place to make its voice and his opinions heard.

Applause.

Mr. M. Hamilton (Renfrew North): I appreciate greatly the opportunity of seconding the motion of the hon. member for Toronto St. George (Mr. Lawrence) for the adoption of the address graciously presented by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. It is an honour to me personally and to the people of Renfrew North whom I have the privilege to represent in this House.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, may I express to you my thanks for the courtesy you have extended to my colleagues and me during the last session of this assembly. You were always able to draw from your long experience in this House and from the example of your distinguished predecessors to enable you to guide our deliberations with firmness and efficiency.

In these dangerous and trying times which afflict the troubled world, the members of our democratic parliament espouse many causes, they advance many remedies.

In many instances the hon. members opposed to the government of the day are not averse to advancing their views with an energy which creates an atmosphere in which your impartial rulings are necessary to bring decorum to this honourable body. You will, I know, continue to guide our deliberations with firmness and impartiality.

I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Toronto St. George in expressing my regrets at the passing of a number of our colleagues.

During the last session of this House we were saddened by the loss of Dr. William Dunlop and William Collings. Both were members who had served our province with distinction in important posts. They have left their mark in our history.

In recent weeks the uncertainties of life have been brought home to me through the sudden death of my good friend and neighbour James A. Maloney. As you know, the late Minister of Mines represented the riding of Renfrew South, hence he was not only a colleague of this House but an immediate neighbour of mine. On many occasions we co-operated in matters affecting the people of both North and South Renfrew. I shall miss him greatly indeed.

In his profession no one was better known or more highly regarded throughout eastern Ontario than was James Maloney. He was the most able counsellor with a profound knowledge of the law and of court procedure. As you can judge, his gifts of oratory were not lost on the many juries to whom he appealed in the course of his legal career.

As has been mentioned by the hon. member for Toronto St. George, he brought to his House his Irish wit, his skill in debate, and a great deal of courage. As an administrator of an important department he saw Ontario's mineral production pass the billion dollar mark per year. In this field and in the field of labour relations his work was outstanding and it indeed typifies his great ability. Again I say his genial presence will be greatly missed.

In my brief period of service in this assembly I came to know and respect the hon. member for Brant, the late Harry Nixon. Our late friend became more than a member of this assembly, he was a fixture, yes, an institution. He entered this assembly in 1919 as has been said earlier, before some of us were born. The people of his riding elected him in one contest after another so that altogether he served in this House for 42 years as a member of the Legislature. He served in opposition as a Minister and very briefly as a Prime Minister. His very sudden and tragic death was a shock to all of us. It was doubly a shock, I am sure, to his veteran colleagues, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), who had for so many years served with our departed friend.

I refer also with much respect to the passing of Albert Wren who represented the great northern riding of Kenora. Our friend was a young man who one would have thought would have had many years of life and service ahead of him. He served honourably in world war II. He was a warm advocate especially of the claims and the aspirations of the north. He was a strong critic on occasion of the administration, and indeed of his own party when he found reasons to disagree.

The passing of these distinguished members is a loss to this House. My colleagues, as has been stated by the hon. member for Toronto St. George, will wish to join with me in expressing our sorrow and our sympathies to the families who have realized this great sorrow.

The hon. member for Toronto St. George has already expressed in well chosen words our assurances of loyalty to the Crown and our devotion to our British heritage of democracy. We rejoice in the birth of a son and heir to the Earl of Snowdon, Viscount Linley of Nymann and Her Royal Highness Princess Margaret. We are happy at the success of the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and her distinguished husband, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, to the Republic of Ghana. There were great fears as to the safety of Her Majesty in visiting this member of the Commonwealth; fears which happily were ill-founded. The great African continent enters into its era of self-government. It is important to the western world that we do everything possible to foster friendly relations with its huge population. It is most desirable that they enter and remain as one more bulwark of the forces of freedom.

As this House assembled to receive the address of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario we were once more vividly reminded that we are living in an era of change. World conditions have changed, unhappily often for the worse. Conditions have changed in the federal sphere and like other democratic nations we have had to build a huge military, naval and air establishment. Here in Ontario the growth factor has been nothing short of phenomenal in the last couple of decades, and in this assembly change is all about us.

I have already referred to the passing of a number of familiar faces. Today it is with an effort that I find myself referring to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) when for so long we referred to him as the hon. Prime Minister. My colleague from Toronto St. George has already referred to this hon. member and his long record of unexcelled service. The hon. member for Victoria has served altogether a period of some 24 years as a member of this assembly. For 18 years he has held Cabinet posts and for 12½ years he has occupied the high post of Prime Minister. His decision to pass along the heavy burdens of office to other hands came as a shock to this House and to the people of Ontario. Our newspapers from coast to coast, and indeed in the United States, referred in glowing terms to his great record of accomplishment and with regret as to his departure.

At the recent leadership convention of the Progressive Conservative Party which has already been mentioned this afternoon, it was a privilege and an honour to the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Guindon) to introduce the retiring Prime Minister of Ontario to a gathering of, it has been said, more than 7,000 party members who crowded Varsity arena. I cannot in a few words do credit to the record of accomplishment left by the hon. member for Victoria. That record will be permanently inscribed in the history books of Ontario long after all of us have passed on.

The sound management of provincial affairs has been an important factor in attracting 50 per cent of Canada's immigrants to this province. We have had a population increase of 1.5 million persons in this last decade. This has involved a tremendous responsibility in the provisions of facilities, housing, hospitals, hydro power, highways, schools, indeed every possible facility that could be imagined. Here the problems have been met, not always as completely as we might have liked—yet solutions are always in sight.

We have seen eastern Canada transformed from a rather neglected hinterland into what is becoming rightfully called the golden triangle of this province. Our water powers on the Ottawa have been developed, the St. Lawrence project is in full operation—and please remember, given cheap and adequate power, given adequate natural resources and given a suitable labour force, then you have a setting in which industry will expand and will flourish. And that is the setting which we have in eastern Ontario today, thanks largely to the vision and drive of him to whom we now refer as the hon. member for Victoria.

The trans-Ontario highway is nearing its completion. The trans-Canada highway is open for traffic all across our province. Highway 17, that great artery starting at the Quebec border, and running through the Ottawa valley and thence to Sault Ste. Marie, is either rebuilt or in the process of renovation. Great international and interprovincial bridges are spanning our rivers. New schools, new universities, are dotting our landscape. A great plan of hospital insurance covers 95 per cent of our people. It protects them from the distress, the crushing financial burdens, the penalties associated with prolonged illness.

The list is a long one, far too long for me to recite. As the hon. member for Glengarry remarked the other day in respect to the career of the hon. member for Victoria, if you require a monument look about you.

I do not know what the plans for the hon. member may be, but I am well assured that he will continue his life of service in this province. Already he has been honoured by his appointment as a member of the board of governors of the University of Toronto. The management of that great institution of higher learning will benefit from his broad experience and his sage advice.

Perhaps the university authorities will find in him an exceptionally able ambassador on approaching this government for additional funds to enable them to pursue their work. I am sure that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) would give such an ambassador a respectful hearing. I say, Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member for Victoria all happiness, all prosperity, good health, long life and every blessing, as he moves into another sphere of service.

As has been previously remarked, our recent leadership convention saw assembled a democratic body of 1,780 delegates, their primary task to choose a new leader for the Progressive Conservative Party of this province. The proceedings were observed by many, many more guests and well-wishers, surely an outstanding gathering of its kind in Ontario history.

I congratulate once again the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on his success at the convention I have mentioned. He won high office in a clean and honest contest. Today he serves as Prime Minister of Canada's greatest province, backed by those who battled it out for high honours in such recent days. He has the united support of those of us who sit with him, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that he has the good will of all of the people of Ontario.

His career as a student, as a lawyer, as a municipal councillor, as a private member of this Legislature, as a member of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and latterly as Minister of Education has been a steady upward climb. In world war II it was the same; he joined the Royal Canadian Navy as an ordinary seaman, he soon won commissioned rank and had the honour of being mentioned in despatches. If his career to this date is any index to the future he will fulfill the duties of his high office with honour, efficiency and distinction.

It is plain from even the most cursory glance at the address from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario that we are faced with an extremely important program. The address of His Honour comprises not only a tremendous record of accomplishment, it indicates also a carefully designed and far-seeing approach to the problems of the future. I cannot pretend to speak of the details of this historic document but there are a few points which I should like to stress.

The operation of hydro-electric enterprise is of special interest to those of us in eastern Ontario. As I have mentioned, the water powers on the Ottawa River have been developed by Hydro during the life of this government. The same applies to the St. Lawrence. Back in the days of another government, the then head of the Hydro enterprise said he looked for a decrease in the consumption of electricity, then a steady modest increase.

Also back in those distant days an hon. Minister in another government made a nine-hour speech in this chamber, detailing the woes of Hydro and begging the people to tell him what to do with unwanted power. Let us see what happened.

In 1943 in round figures Hydro's dependable peak capacity was 2,470,000 horsepower; in 1950 it had risen to 3,660,000 horsepower; by 1960 it had risen to 8,750,000 horsepower. At the end of 1961 the figures will be 9,400,000 horsepower. Taking into account new development coming into production, such as that at Fort William, the Lakeview development west of Toronto and the automatic-electric plant at Kincardine; it is already seen that this government has had to plan to increase Hydro's capacity five or six times.

About 95 per cent of Ontario's farm and hamlet dwellers now have hydro power and there is no more useful utility around the farm, I may assure hon. members.

Again, Hydro is reaching out in more sparsely settled areas by concessions made in recent years whereby fewer customers per mile are necessary than formerly were required. The magnitude of some of these developments is nothing short of astonishing. The St. Lawrence development feeds 1,100,000 horsepower into the Hydro system. The Lakeview station will supply 1,350,000 horsepower. Up on the St. James Bay watershed plants are in progress for construction to develop 375,000 horsepower.

Early next spring we shall see in production the Rolphton atomic-electric plant, a pilot plant to produce around 20,000 kilowatts. The use of atomic-electric power will, however, go on a commercial basis when the Douglas Point plant is completed a few years hence. This will produce 150,000 horsepower and will rate as one of the great Canadian experiments in the atomic-electric field.

It should be recorded that the change-over to 60-cycle current in Ontario has been fully completed without dislocation to industry and very little inconvenience to our householders.

Again, the Hydro experiments in the transmission of power over very long distances and at extremely high voltages are breaking new ground and point to the development of water power located in the very far north.

Altogether the management of the Hydro system reflects a great credit on this government. A very large measure of praise is due to the first Vice-Chairman and hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay). His work in a highly technical field has been one of the utmost value and his numerous writings on the subject of energy in its manifold forms has done much to enlighten us all on subjects which ordinarily have not been presented in a way the layman understands.

In the part of Ontario which I have the honour to represent the subject of highways is always a live one, along with the development of parks and tourists areas, more notably in Algonquin Park. We have some very valuable timberland along with tourist possibilities in the northwest section of Algonquin Park in the Ignace Lake, Grand Lake region. Some work has been done by The Department of Lands and Forests to provide adequate access to this area and about 18 miles of road are to be put into shape here by The Department of Highways on behalf of The Department of Lands and Forests—nine miles of this distance will be undertaken this year.

Highway 17 has been rebuilt from Haley station to Meach station about 10 miles east of our town of Pembroke; again in the Pembroke-Point Alexander district a continuous 37 mile distance has been reconstructed. I should also mention the Ottawa thruway is now open in part, which is a new and most important link on Highway 17. Highway 62, for 15 miles south Combermere to Barry's Bay is a fine new road of much local importance featured by a modern bridge over the Madawaska at Combermere. A 10-mile road from Barry's Bay to Wilno on Highway 60 has also been completed. Highway 60, previously ending in the village of Eganville in my riding, has now been extended for 18 miles to Northcote at Highway 17 via the village of Douglas—a much needed local improvement.

Along the Ottawa River, 14 miles of municipal road are being treated as a municipal development road and will be brought up to a modern standard. This road, now in poor condition, runs from Sand Point in McNab township to MacKenzie's Mill in Horton township in the riding of Renfrew South. It runs through a highly scenic territory with excellent tourist possibilities and may one day be incorporated as a part of Highway 29.

In 1962, a section of Highway 60 Wilno to Killaloe will be rebuilt, a distance of 12 miles. This will give a first-class thruway from Eganville to Combermere crossing three municipalities.

In the northwest section of my riding, expenditures of approximately $275,000 a year are being made by The Department of Lands and Forests on park improvements. The general effect is, as I have said, to open up tourist and camping areas hitherto almost inaccessible in Ontario's greatest provincial park.

As His Honour remarked in his address to this assembly, we now have 79 provincial parks and camping areas fully serviced as in contrast with about six of a few years ago.

More and more, our own people, along with thousands of tourists, are making the fullest use of camping areas. They acquire a taste for outdoor life, they learn to rough it a bit and their vacation funds must go much further. Muskoka, Parry Sound, the far northwest, long have become not only well established but often overcrowded as vacation spots. In the Ottawa valley there is still plenty of scope for an expanded tourist trade in all its branches and we appreciate the efforts of this government to see that this part of Ontario comes into its own.

One of Canada's most important military centres is at Petawawa camp. Here we have about 6,000 members of the Canadian armed forces with some 3,700 women, wives and dependants of the members of the military staff. Some of the men are there for training, others are members of the permanent staff. Here is a closely knit, orderly community of fine young men and women of whom we can all be proud.

Again, we have at Deep River a community of almost 7,000, mostly made up of young people, very many of them preoccupied with problems related to the vast field of atomic research. In the main, it is their work that makes possible the construction of such large enterprises as the new atomic energy plant now coming into being at Douglas Point.

Both the communities I have mentioned are interested in or are beneficiaries of the vast facilities provided by the province or with provincial aid. The people here are interested in education, hospitalization, highways, public works of all types. Their work is specialized, but none the less they are bright and ambitious young citizens of my community intensely interested in their respective tasks and constituting communities of which every Canadian should be proud.

Education is a subject well to the fore wherever we go around Ontario. In an earlier day, education was, may I say, desirable. Today it is a stern necessity. I could say a word about universities—just four in number when this government took office, but 12 as they exist today. I should like to talk about the magnificent work of the Ryerson institute in Toronto with its 2,500 students. Most have noted, I think, that this great college is now being housed in new and modern quarters in keeping with the fine work it is doing.

However, it is with our public and secondary schools that most of us are personally and intimately concerned. There our children get their start. To support them the tax collector digs deep into our pockets.

Now, just where would we be without the aid which is extended by this government?

Comparisons quickly lose their meaning in these days, for in the last 20 years we have achieved, shall I say, a normal century's progress. However, this comparison is worth noting. Back in 1944, that is 17 years ago, provincial education grants for Renfrew North were in round figures $88,000. Last year, 1960, they were over $1,600,000—in a word, we have here an 18-fold increase and the story is the same all across Ontario. This government today is pouring over a quarter billion dollars a year into education and the amount increases year by year. The most any previous government ever expended in any year in this cause was $13 million; such figures speak for themselves.

As the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) travels across the province he proposes new universities. He proposes to have the province take over nearly all of the costs of primary and secondary education. It would mean of course the abolition of local boards or reducing them to a state of helplessness.

But there is one side of the question that the hon. leader of the Opposition does not touch and that is: where will he get the money? He will never have a better chance than right here in this assembly to spell out his plans in detail.

It is all very well for members on the other side of the House to complain about treatment of the municipalities. Let me say, that since this government took office provincial grants to municipalities have increased by 20 times and they are still going up. I do not think the senior government is doing too badly when it paid out about 50 per cent of all its revenues to assist our local municipal governments.

His Honour in his address instanced that places had to be found for an extra 100,000 pupils in Ontario schools last year and the trend will continue in the same direction. New construction to provide school space costs $100 million—a sum equal to the whole provincial budget of a few years ago. Revision of study courses is under way, new text books are in preparation, progress is a departmental watchword under the able direction of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts).

As His Honour pointed out, the output of qualified teachers from our teachers' colleges is double that of five years ago. Teachers' colleges have been expanded and five have recently been built or located respectively in Toronto, Hamilton, London, New Toronto and Port Arthur, and another is under way presently at Windsor. In a word, teacher shortage has become something of the past.

The launching of new trade schools is a vast forward step in this age of technology and automation. These schools, as was pointed out by His Honour, will be located at Toronto, Ottawa, London and Sault Ste. Marie; Kirkland Lake will be the site of a new institute of technology, a similar building will be erected in Ottawa to replace the present rented quarters.

Of special interest to my riding is a new vocational school at Pembroke. This will also serve, I am sure, the high school district of Eganville, Cobden and Deep River. In the east we now have Carleton University and the University of Ottawa. Here in Toronto, York University is successfully launched.

It will among other things take off the pressure that is now presently existing on the University of Toronto. We have another university located at Sudbury, another in Windsor, another at Waterloo and I believe another to be located at the Lakehead. We shall await the story of education with interest, as the hon. Minister details his proposals to this assembly.

My congratulations go to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for his great and forward looking programs in many fields. Eastern Ontario has not been neglected as was often the case in bygone years. Vast improvements and extensions have been made at the mental hospital establishments at Kingston and at Brockville. The hospital and school at Smiths Falls cares for some 2,500 mentally defective patients in quarters which are a credit to Ontario. This project was launched, it is interesting to recall, by the Conservative government of 30 years ago. The project was abandoned when another government took office and it was revived immediately the Conservative government once again was elected to this Legislature.

We have another similar institution at Cedar Springs near Chatham. This week it will house about 1,200 patients, mostly of the mentally defective type. Older sections of the great hospital and school at Orillia are being demolished to make way for larger, more modern accommodation.

Of course, I must give the former government at least some credit for providing care for the mental defectives. They actually built a frame cottage at Orillia to house 60 patients to meet a waiting list of more than 2,500. There the cottage stands today beside Highway No. 11, a monument to a government long since passed away and never noted for its humanitarian practices.

It is good to know that in erecting new mental hospitals at Goderich, Owen Sound and Palmerston, humanitarian practices will prevail in that conventional institutional plans will give way to modern comfort. Rehabilitation will be the watchword along with modern scientific care. The rehabilitation plans to which His Honour referred will be watched, I am sure, with interest.

Of very special interest to many of my constituents is the establishment of a new radiation protection laboratory, the first of its kind to be established in any province. Very many of the people with whom I am associated are engaged in work related to the development of atomic energy.

Turning for a moment to the subject of agriculture, I am sure that plans to integrate more closely that fine work of the Ontario Agricultural College, the Ontario Veterinary College and MacDonald Institute will meet with the general approval of all of our farm people.

I must congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) on his recent appointment to a most important Cabinet post. He entered this House by way of a by-election, again receiving the approval of his constituents in the general election of 1959. He was not long in establishing himself as a well-informed member of this assembly, nor was he long in attaining Cabinet rank as an hon. Minister without Portfolio. His career as a successful farmer, his long connection with various farm bodies and his participation in municipal affairs, especially in the educational field, all told well for his success in one of the most important departments of this government.

While I am on the subject I should also like to extend my good wishes to the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton). He too is familiar with the agricultural community of Ontario and indeed all across Canada. He, as hon. members know, dealt in very high quality seed products which gave him a very close connection with the farmers of this province. His elevation to the post of hon. Minister without Portfolio, I am sure, points to his being allotted even greater responsibility within the foreseeable future.

For a good many years the important tobacco industry was fairly well confined to the Lake Erie district. Tobacco growing has spread into Oxford and Brant, up to Owen Sound and down to Northumberland, to mention only a few areas participating in this $100 million a year crop. Now one of our local farmers near Beachburg, Ontario, in my riding, is successfully growing tobacco. He is launching a branch of agriculture new to us, but which I am sure has interesting future possibilities in Renfrew County.

Reverting again for a moment to the subject of highways, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that we in Renfrew County are not unmindful of what has been done for us. Back in 1943, which is about 18 years ago, there was spent on King's highways in Renfrew North, $183,000 as a total. In 1959 the sum was $2.1 million and again in 1960 $1,704,000 were spent in my riding. Municipal roads subsidies jumped from $57,000 in 1943 to $419,000 in 1959 and $542,000 in 1960.

Such figures not only speak for themselves, but the vast improvements in our highways and municipal roads speak in an even more convincing voice.

The adjacent riding, Renfrew South, is to the credit of my late friend, Jim Maloney. In that area expenditures were made on King's highways in 1959, to a total of $1,476,000; and again in 1960 it rose to $2.5 million.

Subsidies to the municipalities rose in the same comparison. This means more roads, better roads and the local tax bill, Mr. Speaker, fell within more moderate bounds.

We have had two distinguished hon. Ministers of Highways from eastern Ontario; the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Cass) gave unexcelled leadership in this great and vast department. He now takes over the responsible post of hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Here his knowledge of the province, his experience gained in the past few years as an hon. Minister of the Crown, guarantees for him a further opportunity for outstanding service.

The new hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) whom I catalogue as an eastern rather than a western man, needs no recommendation from me. He has enjoyed a wide experience, a real apprenticeship in the municipal field, as hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and hon. Minister of Public Welfare, coupled in latter years with his experience as hon. Minister of Agriculture.

He has gained a vast experience into the inner workings of government. His patience, his affability and his courtesy are known to all of us and I am sure that we wish him well in the performance of a new duty.

It is a pleasure to congratulate the hon. member for Toronto St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) on a promotion into a high and responsible and sometimes trying position. As chief commissioner of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario he will add to the record established by the late William H. Collings, to whom I have already referred. He always has sound opinions and the ability to express them.

I shall add a word as to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender). In the municipal field in his native city and as hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs he acquired a reputation for hard work plus native ability. He too has our good wishes in approaching his task.

I have already spoken briefly of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) who is also the first Vice Chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission and who now will also head the new Department of Economics and Development. This latter department merges the work of The Department of Commerce and Development, Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and has been mentioned earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Toronto St. George (Mr. Lawrence).

Naturally, as an easterner I regret the pending departure of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). I am glad, however, that he will be with us for the remainder of this term of parliament; also that his sound advice and counsel will be available to the government and that he remains as an hon. Minister without Portfolio.

Nothing but good wishes will go to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Daley) in giving up his heavy duties as hon. Minister of Labour after a total of 18 years as head of a difficult department. It is good that he too is remaining as an hon. Minister without Portfolio. His affable presence is something we should not like to miss and I think there will be general agreement that he has done an excellent job for Ontario in his many years of heavy responsibility.

Our good and genial friend, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) will find himself at home in the Mines portfolio. His administrative ability and his warm humanitarian principles have left a mark on The Department of Reform Institutions which will not soon be erased.

In the formation of his Cabinet the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has honoured eastern Ontario by the appointment of the hon. member for Ottawa South, the now Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett). The hon. Minister is well known to us for his modesty, his quiet efficiency, and his success in his own business. He will carry on,

I am sure, in the best traditions of his predecessors.

While the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) relinquishes his portfolio, he takes up, as the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) has pointed out, specific duties with the Ontario Water Resources Commission and will continue to be of tremendous service to the people of Ontario.

In this great province we have experienced a boom. We have likewise passed through some trying post-boom days with little damage to our economy. As His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor remarked in his address, our gross provincial product has now passed an astonishing $60 billion per year. Such an impressive figure is, shall I say, incomprehensible to the ordinary mind.

Our population has passed the 6.5 million mark. Our unemployment ratio is below the national average. Our secondary industries, the great backbone of the employment situation, are in healthy condition.

Our forest industries, likewise, are healthy and expanding. Provision is being made for the expansion of industrial research.

Our stock markets, rightly, or wrongly, continue to predict a great era of prosperity, expansion and development.

Agricultural research is to be consolidated. Advance legislation to rural co-operatives has been promised.

Much attention will be given to the development of parks, wilderness areas, protection and propagation of fish and wildlife and all other facets of the problems of the north. Transfer of conservation responsibility to The Department of Lands and Forests is, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, a most logical step.

It will be remembered that a provincial police commission is proposed to be established; also that attention will be given to highway traffic laws with special reference to legislation related to the demerit point system.

Mr. Speaker, we are now to address ourselves to two important tasks: first, we shall have the opportunity to review a record of what I consider excellent government; secondly, we shall devote our efforts to dealing with an advanced program of proposed legislation. These tasks I am sure we shall approach with our thoughts directed to the task of making this a still better province in which to live.

We are free from the oppressions of dictatorship, we have an abundance of the great things of life, we have governments which are concerned primarily with the welfare of the people rather than the individual with a lust for power. Let us preserve our great heritage of freedom and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I second the motion of the hon. member for St. George for the adoption of the address graciously presented to us by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Applause.

Mr. Wintermeyer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow we will go on with the second readings on the order paper. There will be introduction of certain legislation, but we will take it in the order it presently stands. There will be no estimates called. On Wednesday we will go on with the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5:10 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1961

The House met at 3:10 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from Walsh Public School, Simcoe and Lynedoch Public School, Delhi, in the west gallery. We also have with us today, sitting on the floor to the Speaker's left, the Hon. John Pickersgill and the Hon. Paul Hellyer. Also, on the right, Mr. Clayton Hodgson, M.P. for Victoria.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the city of London praying that an Act may pass refunding certain taxes on the premises of London Little Theatre; and for other purposes.

Of the Ontario Registered Music Teachers' Association praying that an Act may pass providing for a head office for the association and increasing the council to not more than fifteen.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. C. T. Rollins, from the select committee appointed to prepare the lists of hon. members to compose the standing committees of the House, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that the standing committees ordered by the House be composed as follows:

Committee on agriculture—Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Carruthers, Chapple, Connell, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Letherby, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Myers, McNeil, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Reaume, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Troy, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on conservation—Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Carruthers, Davis, Evans, Gisborn, Gordon, Hall, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morin, McNeil, Newman, Oliver, Parry, Reaume, Root, Rowntree, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Troy, White—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on education—Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Chapple Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Gould, Guindon, Hamilton, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morin, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Parry, Phillips, Price, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Thompson, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, White, Wintermeyer—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on energy—Messrs. Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Davis, Gomme, Guindon, Hamilton, Haskett, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Myers, McNeil, Oliver, Phillips, Reaume, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Stewart, Thomas, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on game and fish—Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Beckett, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gordon, Guindon, Hamilton, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, New-

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Your committee recommends that the practice of the last two sessions of devoting Wednesday afternoons to the work of committees when necessary, be continued.

Your committee also recommends that the standing committees on conservation, game and fish, and lands and forests be combined and that your committee meet again to consolidate these three committees into one, of not more than fifty members.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first recommendation of the committee providing for a sitting on Wednesday afternoons, that is perfectly agreeable. It has worked in previous years and so we will follow that procedure this year.

I have spoken to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) concerning the recommendation that the committee on lands and forests and the committee on conservation and the committee on game and fish are to be combined. He suggests to me that the game and fish committee might be kept separate because of the number of delegations which come in, particularly to deal with that one subject, and the great number of organizations they represent throughout the province.

I am going to suggest that the lands and forests and conservation committees be combined, but that at least for this year we leave the game and fish committee separate to deal with the many delegations that come to see it and see it alone. Perhaps another year—if it appears it can be combined with ease—we can do so.

In connection with the general organization of these committees, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning—I believe there is a notice on all the hon. members' desks—we will have a meeting of all the hon. members of the House and we will organize all these committees in one session, so to speak. This is simply a small innovation in order to get this organizational work done a little more quickly.

Instead of calling the individual committees to meet at individual times, throughout the day, all will assemble in one place at the same time. The committee members who are on individual committees will be there and we can deal with the appointment of chairmen, and the organization of the committees all at one time. That should be cleared up very quickly.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): What time?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just a moment. I have not seen the notice myself.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Would the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) permit a question while this information is being accumulated?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is it my understanding that committee meetings will take up all of tomorrow and we will not have a formal session of the Legislature in the afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker. We have made arrangements to go on with the Throne Speech debate tomorrow afternoon and we will proceed at 3.00 o'clock. In previous years we have not given up our Wednesday to committee meetings until such time as we had the business of the House organized. There was a flow of work going in to these committees and, of course, there will be no work for the committees to do tomorrow because we have very few bills ready for consideration. Therefore, when the work of the House is flowing to the point where these committees can function and have work to do then we will dispense with the Wednesday sittings here. This can be settled probably the beginning of next week when we will see how the flow of business is.

The committee members will meet tomorrow morning at ten o'clock in committee room No. 1, but there will be notices on the desks of the hon. members later this afternoon.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to request that a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture be convened for 10.00 a.m. on Thursday, December 7, for the purpose of hearing recommendations of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and any others who may be interested, relative to an agricultural machinery Act in the province of Ontario. I am pleased to advise the hon. members of the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that I met with the president and executive members of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture on the afternoon of Thursday, November 16 and at that time they made certain representations to me regarding an agricultural machinery Act. For the information of this House I might say that the following principles were suggested by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture as ones which might be considered for such an Act.

First, to provide for the availability of repair parts and service to purchasers of farm machinery in Ontario. Second, to provide for the control and sale of farm machinery and parts in Ontario. Third, to provide for testing of farm machinery offered for sale in the province of Ontario. Fourth, to provide for the publishings of reports of tests conducted on farm machinery offered for sale in Ontario, including new machines that may be offered for sale some time in the future. And fifth, to provide for an inspection service to carry out the purpose and intent of an agricultural machinery Act. Sixth, to provide for an agricultural machinery board.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that this may be a slight departure from normal procedure, to invite our committee to do this at the moment, but it is felt that it would be in the best interests of Ontario agriculture to allow the members of the standing committee to give the fullest possible consideration to the problems of farm machinery sales and service in the province of Ontario that are facing our farmers—because of the increasing mechanization that we have in the province today.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) a question? If he is getting witnesses to come before the committee, has he thought of getting one to come down from Saskatchewan where such an Act has been in effect for about 14 years? They would have quite a backlog of experience that would be a useful guide.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) whether it is the government's intention to introduce any legislation this session in connection with this proposal?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would say that we feel that this is such an important matter that we would like to deal with it before the standing committee on agriculture, that we might explore all the possibilities of this Act. If the standing committee on agriculture sees fit that this is something essential to the farm people of the province, we would be guided in drafting an Act that would meet the needs of the farmers today.

Mr. MacDonald: The government will not take the lead?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this point, it seems to me that this would be a good place to have this matter discussed and to see as a result of the deliberations of this committee and hon. members of the House what might be done.

It might very well be that a bill could be introduced; or what I also had in the back of my mind was if it proved to be a matter of some complication and was going to require a good deal of study, out of the meetings of the standing committee of this House could very well come a select committee of the Legislature to study the whole proposition and see whether and what form any proposed legislation might take.

This is precisely what we intend to do with this problem. It seems to me it would provide a very effective way of studying the whole question and coming up with the right answer.

Mr. Speaker: Are the members in agreement with the Prime Minister's amendment, as it were, to keep the game and fish committee separate from the main lands and forests committee? Are the members in agreement on that?

Mr. C. T. Rollins (Hastings East) moves the adoption of the report.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Reports.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moved that a standing committee on public accounts be appointed for the present session, which said committee shall be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as shall be referred to it by the House and to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This motion arises out of a discussion we had here last Thursday afternoon. On checking into the matter I find, and perhaps my face is a little red in this because I happen to be a member of this committee but I had forgotten just how far we had gone with it, that there is a select committee concerning the problems of government which is reviewing the Gordon report on the organization of government.

In the proceedings of that committee we have dealt with the question of the public accounts committee quite fully, but there were certain points that were being discussed there. I remember the discussion, for instance, when Mr. Watson Sellar the former Auditor General, came down from Ottawa. The hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) was there at the time, as was the hon. leader of the New Party group (Mr. MacDonald) and at that point the question was debated and argued as to who the chairman should be, the idea being advanced that he might be a member of the Opposition. The question was also discussed as to whether it might be wise for Ontario to follow the procedure that is followed in England where all proceedings of this committee are held in camera to prevent the possibility of any use of this committee, shall we say, for political purposes, and in order to ensure that the committee would function as a true body of examination of the functions of government.

The point I am making simply is that all these points were considered by this select committee and as yet no final recommendation has been made to the House. I noticed that in April of last year when the public accounts committee met, a motion was passed that the problem be referred back to that select committee and that no action would be taken until the select committee brought in its report.

In order to expedite the work of the select committee I propose to move another motion as soon as this one has been carried permitting that select committee to sit during the Christmas recess. I hope that if the committee sits after we rise for the Christmas recess we might get a final report from the committee by the time we reconvene. Then we would be able to adjust this committee according to the results that come out of the select committee.

In the meantime, I would propose to set up the public accounts committee so that it can function as it has in the past if anything is referred to it from here, with the idea that when we do have the final conclusions of the select committee we would be in a position to make what changes the House deems necessary in the public accounts committee.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, with the observations that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has made I do not think many of us are going to find a whole lot of fault. We are all cognizant of the fact that there has been preliminary discussion about using the public accounts committee for something other than what it has been used for in the past.

However, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government give consideration to the advisability of following the procedures he has suggested that a member of the Opposition act as chairman for the time being; and secondly, I would ask the hon. Prime Minister and this government to give consideration to the possibility of permitting the public accounts committee to sit even now, starting immediately, at a time when the House is not as busy as it will be in a few weeks, and start on consideration of some of the subjects that were discussed last April. I think it was April when we discussed the terms of reference, if you will, of the so-called public accounts committee.

My recollection is that there was at that time a genuine interest in certain things as interest charges and debenture issues and the like, all of which were very complicated, but such things as the hon. members of the committee felt would be beneficial to all hon. members in the consideration of the overall financial picture of the province. I would recommend seriously, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister consider the advisability of bringing before that committee, the public accounts committee, at an early date, those officials of The Treasury Department who it was intended should appear before that committee last year, if the opportunity had been given by the extension of time and facility, and who did not appear and give the information that was originally intended.

I think that this committee could serve a real purpose in helping to organize itself, in helping to find a purpose for itself by starting with just such a problem as was discussed by the committee last year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to do that. As a matter of fact that is what I had in mind in establishing the committee this year in the form it was in last year so that we could carry out those plans that were made last year. But I think we are all now envisaging a broader function for this committee than even that and this will arise out of the report of the select committee.

I realize that there is a great desire on the part of the Opposition to have the chairman of this committee appointed from the Opposition. I am, frankly, personally much more interested to see what the reaction will be to having this committee meet in camera. I do not think it really matters, personally I do not think it matters, who the chairman is as long as he is a good one. But I do think the committee would function a lot better and we will get certainly a great deal more value from this committee if it meets in camera so that nobody is going to be pilloried and everybody can keep to the point. However, these are just matters that I mention.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the select committee on administrative and executive problems of government be authorized to sit during the Christmas-New Year adjournment of this session and that the same allowances for expenses to the chairman and members thereof be payable for such meetings as are provided by Section 65 of The Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1960, Chapter 208, for meetings held during the interval between sessions.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before you carry that! May I ask with regard to the work of this committee that if there are going to be meetings held, that the date for these meetings be set at the earliest possible occasion? I need not inform the House that there is a matter of considerable preoccupation once this House adjourns until January 18, and some of us may find it difficult to be in two places at the same time.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in view of his statements in reference to the committee; is it essential in his judgment that the committee finalize its work before the Legislature meets again in January?

Personally, I always felt that there was lots of work that this committee could still do, very effective work. If it is the feeling of the government that this committee should finalize its work, I think a lot of what it could do will not be done. I can understand my hon. friend's thought when he says that it should be finalized, that part of the committee's work that deals with the public accounts committee, but I would hate to go away with the idea that we are obligated to finish in its entirety the committee's work before the session resumes.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, no. I would leave it to the good sense of the chairman and the committee. I realize there is a lot of territory for that committee to cover in addition to the question of the public accounts committee. Perhaps the committee might decide in its wisdom to bring in an interim report covering the public accounts committee only. All I am trying to do is set up the machinery to deal with this one item as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE BAILIFFS ACT, 1960-61

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Bailiffs Act 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Attorney-General explain this and the other bills that he has—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I will follow the practice that is more or less accepted here of making a short explanation of each of these bills, even though the general principle, of course, does not get discussed until second reading.

This bill is an attempt to clarify the wording, as there appears to have been some misunderstanding amongst the bailiffs as to wording of Section 4 of The Bailiffs Act which was enacted last year. It really contains no change in principle. The amendment removes any possibility that the creditors referred to include those of the guarantor of a bond and it allows the refunding of a guarantor of a bond that has been realized paid by the guarantor.

THE CORONERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Coroners Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides that in addition to the fee for a post-mortem examination by a pathologist, if he employs an assistant an additional fee of $10 may be paid.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill brings an amendment to section 3 of The Crown Attorneys Act and is applicable to metropolitan Toronto and county of York. The effect of the amendment is that there will be a Crown Attorney, a deputy Crown Attorney and such assistant Crown Attorneys as may from time to time be required.

At the present time in the county of York and metropolitan Toronto there is a Crown Attorney and all others are assistant Crown Attorneys. There are quite a large number of them as the staff grows with the growth of population. This will give to the second-in-command the status of a deputy Crown Attorney.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill is complementary to one that I will introduce in a moment, but as I have them alphabetically arranged this one happened to come first. It transfers section 6 of The Legitimation Act to The Devolution of Estates Act, as the section deals with the devolution of property, not legitimacy. That will be a little more apparent when I introduce the other bill.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Division Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this proposed amendment is the product of some experience in dealing with consolidation orders in the division courts since they were first introduced in 1950. Consolidation orders by which a debtor may apply to the judge of a court for the consolidation of unsatisfied judgments are an advantage to deserving debtors but have in some cases been abused as a means of delaying garnishees and encouraging further debt. Recommendations contained in these amendments are made to protect the deserving debtor, yet make it difficult for the debtor who has no intention of paying his debts to hide behind the consolidation order. Two main points are that consolidation order procedures will only apply where there are more than two unsatisfied judgments instead of where there are two or more as at present, and the effect of the amendment is to abolish ex parte consolidation applications for consolidation orders.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that last year the bill was passed to give certain authority to police under The Police Act in relation to emergencies. This now is a bill authorizing appropriate steps to be taken for the efficient functioning of municipal fire departments in the event of an emergency as defined. It is in line with the EMO operations and work that is going on in the event of a major emergency developing.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for larger panels being selected of jurors than is presently the case. The purpose of the amendment is in part because of growth, and in part also because of the desire to encourage women to serve as jurors recognizing at the same time that they can, of their own volition, be excused at their own request, that therefore the number available for the panels should be sufficient to allow for these contingencies. In the county of York at the present time the total number is 625; this amendment will raise it to 800. In the county of Wentworth at the present time the total number is 270; this would raise it to 350. In other counties the total number is 180, that is the maximum number, and this would raise it to 225. It is felt that these maximums will allow for ample numbers of jurors.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled The Legitimacy Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to: first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill is based on the model uniform Act recommended by the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada and has already been enacted in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. It will replace the present Legitimacy Act.

In the main it is a study by experts who have produced the document, the experts being headed by the dean of Osgoode law school and a sub-committee. It fills, I think, a very necessary position in our welfare legislation at the present time. It provides for devolution of property in relation to this problem, the position and status of a child born of a voidable marriage, and the position and status of a child born of a void marriage.

THE MASTER AND SERVANT ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Master and Servant Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to strengthen the Act by providing a more effective means of preventing employers leaving an area without first paying off their workmen. It applies to areas where itinerant labour is used and sometimes itinerant employers come in at harvest time and so forth on a sub-contract basis. These people can be summoned to police court, but in some cases they can get across the line and be away from the authorities altogether by the time of the hearing. This permits arrest in certain cases where that type of escape is anticipated.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Mechanics' Lien Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this is a recommendation by the senior master to expedite the payment of money out of court and the surrender of bonds for such money as has been paid into or bonds deposited in court under The Mechanics' Lien Act.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill makes provision for the establishment of an Ontario Police Commission composed of three persons appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. It is the intention to make this commission as strong, as impartial and as qualified for its work as possible.

As stated in the Speech from the Throne, the expanding growth and economy of the province has brought many attendant problems in the administration of justice and law enforcement. With the anticipated continuing growth and expansion such a commission should play a very important role.

There have been indications that organized crime may be infiltrating into some parts of Canada from the United States, where they have been plagued with it for a long time. Every effort should be made to prevent any attempt to develop that sort of thing in this country and particularly in the fair province of Ontario. This bill should help substantially to meet any offensive of that nature.

There has been a very considerable enlargement and growth in the Ontario Provincial Police both in personnel and in duties in recent years and the end is certainly not yet in sight. The imposition at the top of our police organization in the province of an Ontario Police Commission such as is contemplated by this bill will, I am sure, constantly improve the ways and means of dealing with all the problems of law enforcement and the suppression of crime.

I look to this commission to initiate studies and plans to keep our police always in the forefront of this work. I have used the term braintrust. Certainly I think it will bring to bear on the subject a keenness of intellect, knowledge of the problems and alertness to deal with them which will be in keeping with the times in which we live.

This bill gives to the Ontario Police Commission wide powers to investigate, inquire into, and report upon any matter relating to the maintenance of law and order in Ontario. It will have all the powers and authority that may be conferred upon a person appointed under The Public Inquiries Act.

In addition to those very wide powers, it will also have general supervisory powers within the limits of the bill in connection with the administration of any police force, the police needs of any municipality, and the conduct of any member of the police in Ontario. In particular it will have the direction and control of the Ontario Provincial Police Force; and the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police Force will, subject to the direction of the Ontario Police Commission, have the general control and administration of the force and the employees connected therewith.

Where a municipality may request assistance of the provincial police, the commissioner may, with the approval of the Ontario Police Commission, provide such assistance as he deems necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this bill an extremely important one. On second reading, it will be debated and I will have more to say at that time.

THE RECIPROCAL ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, these amendments will remove the difficulties that now exist in some cases as to what is, and what is not, a court of superior jurisdiction and will enable the appropriate court in Ontario to be chosen in each case. This will facilitate the processing in Ontario of maintenance orders made by court in jurisdictions with which Ontario has reciprocal arrangements.

REGULATIONS OF ONTARIO, 1960

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Confirm The Revised Regulations of Ontario, 1960.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill confirms revised regulations of Ontario, 1960. The regulations and amendments made while the revised regulations were being prepared were also revised and republished in a special issue of the Ontario Gazette. These regulations are confirmed also.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this amendment will provide for the time of service of a re-issued summons being changed from 15 days to 21 days.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, at present a trustee is not chargeable for breach of trust by reason only of lending on insufficient security where the amount of the loan does not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the property. This percentage of the value of the property is increased to two-thirds of the value.

Subsection 2 provides that a trustee is not chargeable with breach of trust only by reason of lending on mortgage security insured under The National Housing Act even though the amount of the loan exceeds two-thirds of the value of the property.

THE DENTISTRY ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Dentistry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to correct two printers' errors.

THE SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to clarify the authority of the department to maintain and operate clinics in sanatoria for consumptives.

THE AIR POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Air Pollution Control Act.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this amendment will provide for the appointment of a committee to be known as the air pollution advisory committee. Its duty and function will be to consider and report upon air pollution matters to the Minister.

THE CANCER ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Cancer Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to add two members to the board of the Cancer Institute. It is provided in the Act that a member from each of the teaching hospitals must sit on this board, and, since Wellesley Hospital has now become an independent hospital and a teaching hospital, this will provide for the appointment of a member on the institute board to represent Wellesley Hospital. The second will be an additional member to represent the University of Toronto.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Department of Education Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the registration and inspection of private schools in the province.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Schools Administration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains several amendments which I will go through. The first defines a county judge for the purposes of The Public School Act and The Separate School Act. The present definition applies only to The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Acts.

The second is an amendment to one of the sections of the present Act which provides, where a child has been ordered to attend school, that he goes back to school five days after so ordered by a judge. We are removing the five days, so that he goes back immediately.

The third deals with when a child is convicted of truancy. Under the present section of the Act he must be charged under The Training Schools Act which has a fixed penalty of two years in a training school. This is a very rigid penalty, and it is so rigid that the judges sometimes fail to enforce it. What we are doing is giving to the judges in this case the benefit of the provisions of The Juvenile Delinquents Act, which contains a much greater variety of action which the judge may take in order to help the child rather than to just punish him.

The next section provides for the appointment of a school administrator by school boards where the average daily attendance is 1,000 or more.

The next section deals with the date upon which first meetings of newly elected boards are to be held.

The final section is a small section which was omitted at the time of the reprint of the statutes in 1960.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question for the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), a question which I hope the Attorney-General has received. I sent it in yesterday in his absence.

The question relates simply to the problem of organized crime. In specific language, I asked yesterday whether or not the hon. Attorney-General will reconsider his position in respect to the appointment of a Royal commission to investigate organized crime in Ontario in view of the brutal murder in New York state two days ago of Mr. Alberto Agueci.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I take it the question is in Hansard already?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, no.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The question, as I have it here is in substance what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has just said. Perhaps I had better read it though.

In view of the gangland murder in New York of a Canadian citizen by the name of Agueci, is the Attorney-General prepared now to recommend a Royal commission on the investigation of organized crime in Ontario?

That was the question as sent over to me.

My answer: where a crime of this nature is committed the first thing to be done is to obtain the facts and endeavour to solve it. When the facts are available—well, nobody better than some of my hon. friends across there know that there is a great distinction between suspicion and fact. . . .

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Tempers are pretty short this year.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. members that it is almost useless to ask a question of an hon. Minister and then not give the hon. Minister or any other member of the House a chance to reply.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not worry too much about these people. When the facts are available then the authorities in the jurisdiction where the crime was said to have taken place no doubt will take appropriate action. In this case, if any inquiry is needed at all in our jurisdiction it would have to be in view of the international aspect at the national level. If it has to do with narcotics no doubt the R.C.M.P. will be looking closely into all angles, and my answer is, No.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) cognizant of the fact that the administration of justice by virtue of our Constitution is the exclusive jurisdiction of the Attorney-General?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I need to get into a school lesson at this time. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has surely got a better question than that by way of supplement.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to rise on a question of personal privilege arising out of an intemperate personal attack launched upon me as an individual, and to a lesser extent on my group, by the hon. member for Toronto St. George (Mr. Lawrence) in a speech given last night.

I may say that a report of his speech appears in substantially the same terms in the Globe and Mail of this morning and in the Toronto Daily Star of this afternoon. An account of it also appears in the Toronto Telegram but the specific canards directed towards me were not included in the Toronto Telegram story.

I think it should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman made quite an extensive speech in this House yesterday. He did not see fit to mention in this House, where he could be called to account, any of the matters which he raised or is reported to have raised in his speech last night. Instead he ran out to a spot where it was more difficult to keep track of him.

My first impulse, on reading the account of his speech, was to pay no attention to it because of its obvious irresponsibility. However, there are contained within it certain specific allegations which it seems to me, if not answered by myself, might be construed as having been assented to. I therefore wish to have the record straight on at least some of the more important points.

First of all, the hon. gentleman alleged that my campaign in the last election was paid for and that therefore I am beholden to "certain monied and vested interests"—as he called them—which he describes under the very vague heading of "union bosses." Mr. Speaker, I think that it is appropriate and in order for me to put on the record just what did happen with regard to the financing of my election campaign in Woodbine.

In that constituency in my campaign, slightly more than $2,000 was spent on my behalf, of which $400 was contributed to our provincial organization and the balance spent in the constituency.

The hon. gentleman, if he had been interested in facts, could have discovered these facts quite easily. The only contribution in excess of $100 to that campaign was one made by myself in the amount of $300.

There was one contribution from the political education committee of the Toronto and District Labour Council in the amount of $100. All other contributions were made by individuals, and the vast majority of them were in the range of $5 to $25.

If there is any doubt in the mind of any hon. member about any of the facts that I have cited, I would suggest that the committee on privileges and elections be called together and that I be permitted to have the treasurer of my association, who was also my official agent, bring the books of the association before that committee and be examined under oath with regard to those books and all related matters. And if this procedure is to be adopted, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) might see fit to do the same thing with respect to his own campaign.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it was alleged—

Mr. MacDonald: Of course, this is a laughing matter to the hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: For a gentleman who spent $60,000 on a leadership campaign—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the member if it is a point of privilege to state his point of privilege.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would seem it is impossible for me to make myself clearer when specific allegations which are downright lies are made with respect to me. If that is not a question of privilege then I fail to understand the term.

The report goes on at great length. I will not by any means deal with all of it, but there is one other point in it that I would like to deal with and that is the—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Are you admitting the rest is true?

Mr. Bryden: The rest of it is beneath contempt; I would suggest that the kind of gutter language used by the hon. gentleman could not be used in this House, and I presume that is why he sneaked out of this House in order to use it.

The other point that I wish to refer to is the allegation that I and my associates should resign because the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation under whose banner we ran in the last election has now been merged into a larger party called the New Democratic Party and that we now carry on under that banner.

Mr. Speaker, this suggestion comes most inappropriately from a gentleman who belongs to a party which in the last 25 years has been known successively as the Liberal Conservative Party, The National Conservative Party, and the Progressive Conservative Party. If he has any precedents, as he claims, to back up his fatuous proposition he will perhaps be prepared to submit them for consideration to this House.

However, I will advise the hon. member that the people of my constituency—and this no doubt may come as a surprise to him as he considers his own personal situation—but in my constituency the people are fully informed as to what I stand for and what my position is on issues as they arise. I make it my business to make sure of that both through communications I send to them and by personal calls upon them.

I object, and I submit that, notwithstanding the levity shown by hon. members on the other side of the House who apparently have no conception of decency, such expressions as “the craven and cringing attitude” of an hon. member are most inappropriate for one hon. member to use with respect to another member in this House, especially when they are based on no facts whatsoever but on only his own feverish imagination.

This resort to unfounded personal vilification is an indication of the growing sense of desperation of the Tory party in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Since this is one of the first points of privilege this session, I would point out to the hon. members that I have allowed a lot of latitude in this particular case but will not do so in the future. The hon. member states his case and sits down and does it as briefly as possible.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I merely say that I was speaking to the hon. member for York South, (Mr. MacDonald) the leader of the party of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), at great length this morning. I was over speaking to give the hon. member himself an opportunity to speak to me, just before the session opened; nothing was forthcoming about the matter that he has now brought before the House—

Mr. Bryden: I am not afraid to speak in this House as the hon. member is.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, one of the points in my speech last night was the lack of courtesy of these hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence: May I merely say that it is usual, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lawrence: —it is usual in these matters—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. member that we see here a result of lengthy explanations. The hon. member merely had to state that the allegations were untrue and so on, and resume his speech, and not to make a speech of a vitriolic nature, because we cannot settle points of order that way.

I have stated that on points of privilege we be as brief as possible. We will now pass on to the next order.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): I shall try not to make it lengthy, Mr. Speaker.

Before the orders of the day, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), notice of which he has already been given.

My question, sir, is this: is the hon. Minister aware of the failure of the Ontario Municipal Board to reach and render a decision in the dispute which has been referred to the board in the matter of transportation of 11 school children attending the Stirling School in Hamilton? These children have been absent from classes since the beginning of the present term and the dispute will not be settled by the parents and the board of education for the city of Hamilton until this decision is forthcoming. Would the hon. Minister give his assurance that he will order the board to make an immediate decision in order that these children will not suffer from the lack of instructions due to their absence from classes?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I do wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice, affording me that courtesy which has always been his practice in the past. I would like to say in answer to his first question that I was not, until I received this question, aware of the situation he mentions, and I am still, after careful investigation, not aware of any such circumstances as he points out. I would also say that I, in my short time as a Minister of the Crown, have found that there was neither desire nor authority in a Minister of the Crown to order an autonomous body set up to administer the laws and regulations of this province. I do not propose to exercise such authority and I do not believe that I have it.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member that on or about September 8 of this year a petition was sent to the Municipal Board from certain persons in this area asking that some action be taken. It was not a proper or formal application to the board, but the board did send one of its members over to investigate the circumstances and on his return on or about November 13 a letter was written to the people who had preferred the petition asking whether they wished to prefer a formal application to the board which could perhaps be acted upon by the board. As yet there has been no answer to that.

So my answer also to the first question, Mr. Speaker, must be that there is no application pending before the board with respect to these matters.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a supplementary question? Does this matter differ from the ruling of the Ontario Municipal Board in an earlier case with the Hamilton Board of Education where a member of the board did order transportation for the students there?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I might say that the original order in that case was made following supplementary application on the annexation order which was made. The annexation order in question here was made in 1959.

We have had the records searched and nothing was said at that time with respect to this particular matter. And apart from what the Municipal Board may say, if it is properly brought before them, I doubt very much the propriety of any board or tribunal requiring local authorities, two years after an annexation, to deal with such matters as these—which are obviously the responsibility of the local educational authorities and the local council.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to address a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) a copy of which he has had for a couple of days now.

In quashing the Fromovitz divorce recently, as reported in the papers of November 22, Mr. Justice Spence stated he believed that private investigators Jack Antura and Lucas Adelhard had given perjured evidence. In view of His Honour's observations and the hon. Attorney-General's vigour in seeking to put a stop to rigged divorce evidence, will the hon. Attorney-General indicate to the House whether his department is contemplating perjury action against the private investigators?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I was almost going to say the way that question was couched it would look as if my hon. friend expected me to give him a favourable answer. In any event, I will put the answer very factually.

A transcript of the evidence has been ordered. Mr. Elliot Pepper, Q.C., participated as Queen's Proctor in the second trial at the invitation of the trial judge, and his full report together with the transcripts of both trials, will be forwarded to the Crown Attorney of the county of York to consider the laying of charges.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), a copy of which has been provided to you and him, sir, in the following form:

In view of the death yesterday of Luigi Trevisiol in a fall on a construction job, being the latest of a series of deaths occurring on construction work in Metro Toronto during the past year, will the hon. Minister indicate when adequate regulations will be adopted and enforced to ensure safe working conditions on construction work in Ontario?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on receiving notice of this question I did look into the matter and I have here a report of Mr. R. F. French, who is the inspector for the Toronto Department of Buildings. I think I should read this because it is very illuminating.

The location of the tragedy, the accident, was 199 Roehampton Avenue. The superintendent was one Peter Friberg, the brick foreman Feareno Orsoleni, and the deceased Luigi Trevisiol. The inspector says:

I have made an inspection of the above property. A permit was issued under the above file number—that is 64888—to build an 11-storey apartment building. On Monday, November 27, 1961, at approximately 3:30 p.m., a bricklayer fell to his death from the ninth floor of the building.

This man, Luigi Trevisiol, was engaged in laying brick in the southwest corner of the building near a projecting balcony approximately five feet by 15 feet in size. Guard rails and kick planks were in evidence here prior to this accident. However, the above foreman, Feareno Orsoleni has informed me that the short kick plank and guard rail on the balcony at the east end were removed in order to string a line in preparation for the first course of brick work east of the balcony doorway. Luigi Trevisiol walked backward in setting this line and fell nine storeys to his death.

This job has ample protection throughout the building as guard rails and kick planks and steel cables are in evidence on all floors that are not enclosed in masonry.

The brick work is being carried on by the O. and M. Construction Company.

In addition, I looked into the background of the deceased, the late Mr. Trevisiol, and I find that he was employed by the O. and M. Construction Company at $3.05 an hour as a bricklayer. One of his employers, a Merio Minetell, reports that the deceased was a good bricklayer. He had been employed with this company for eight months and he had worked on this particular job since the bricklaying started.

It is interesting to note that he fell from the ninth floor and he had worked on all the lower floors under identical circumstances. No reason can be given for the accident, I am told. It was put down as a sheer accident, a misadventure. To answer the latter part of the hon. member's question, may I say that it is going to be extremely difficult to draw adequate regulations to cover such situations as these where men, who are apparently competent in their chosen trade, walk backward off a balcony. On the other hand, every effort will be made, I assure him, to draw regulations—if we can so do—and statutes to cover these situations.

I have talked to experts in this field and they tell me it is extremely difficult, as it is with many situations in our society, to draw regulations and statutes to cover every eventuality. However, arising out of the McAndrew report we shall do our best to devise something which we hope will adequately cover the situation.

Mr. Bryden: Just a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to mention that the death of Mr. Trevisiol was by no means the only one that has occurred on construction in this city. Whether this was a sheer accident I am not prepared to say, but many of the others were certainly not. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) if he does not think that with human life at stake a greater sense of urgency is required than he has indicated in his previous answer.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I will answer the question at a later time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question, I know that the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) must feel very deeply about the number of accidents that have happened, particularly in construction work. Apart from drawing up regulations has he plans, as a new hon. Minister, to see that these regulations not only will be enforced but will be interpreted to the men on the job?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is a pretty broad question, Mr. Speaker. I hope to be able to devise some regulations which will be adequate. So far as having them enforced and having someone enforcing them, I cannot say. The fact is, if one examines these many thousands of situations across the province, one will realize that in order to have these perfectly supervised we would have to have an inspector for probably every workman who was on the job.

However, I am concerned about these losses of life in the construction industry and in other parts of the industry in Ontario, and we shall try to do the best we can to devise something which will help to meet the situation.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a supplementary question to that? Has the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) read the report on safety, and has he read the part that says:

The commission recommends that with the large influx of employees not conversant with English, it is desirable that brochures describing the legislation administered and services provided by the department be printed in French, Italian and Ukrainian.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I have read the whole McAndrew report several times, Mr. Speaker, and I am quite . . .

Mr. Thompson: And has he made up his mind to follow through on this?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I have made up my mind about several things which will be presented to the House in due course.

Mr. Thompson: That is an improvement.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Thanks very much. I knew the hon. member's question was loaded.

Mr. Thompson: It was not loaded.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted in the House this afternoon to take note of the death, quite unexpectedly, of a young Ontario man, who had made a great name for himself in music internationally—James Milligan, who at 33 years of age died suddenly yesterday in Switzerland.

Jim Milligan, who was a bass-baritone singer, studied at the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto and in 1955 won the Grand Award at the International Musical Festival at Geneva. He was the first Canadian ever to do so and in that year he was in competition with 343 other singers.

Following this outstanding achievement he was given a civic reception and dinner in the town of Huntsville where he lived, in the District of Muskoka, and at that time members of this House came to that dinner to extend to him the best wishes of the government and people of Ontario on his accomplishments.

Subsequently Mr. Milligan sang with the Glynbourne Opera Company in England. He gave recitals over the British Broadcasting Corporation networks and had taken a leading part in the opera company at Covent Garden. He had also sung as soloist with the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir and the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, his last appearance in Toronto having been last year.

Mr. Speaker, since this young man came from Muskoka, the son of the late Rev. Frank Milligan, who was a great friend of mine, and of Mrs. Milligan who also subsequently died, I would express to Mrs. Jim Milligan and their little son, to his brother Frank Milligan, of Ottawa, and the sisters of Jim Milligan, the sympathy of the members of this House on the sudden and unexpected passing of this very noted man from Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE ONTARIO PARKS INTEGRATION BOARD ACT

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources) moves second reading of Bill No. 6, An Act to Amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves second reading of Bill No. 7, An Act to Amend The Conservation Authorities Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PARKS ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves second reading of Bill No. 8, An Act to Amend The Parks Assistance Act.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, the reason we are not presenting Bill No. 5 today is because it has not yet come down from the printer and these Bills No. 6, 7 and 8 are all part of it. But I would move second reading of Bill No. 8 and we will move second reading of Bill No. 5 and have some discussion on it I hope on Thursday, or as soon as it is here.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 9, An Act to Amend The Provincial Parks Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FOREST FIRES PREVENTION ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 10, An Act to Amend The Forest Fires Prevention Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FORESTRY ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 11, An Act to Amend The Forestry Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): It had been my intention as the hon. Minister from Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) has said, to go on with the debate on the second reading of Bill No. 5, but unfortunately that bill has not come back from the printer and that completes the business that we have on the order paper.

In moving adjournment of the House, we will resume the Throne Debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4.50 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the Bridge View Public School, Welland Junction, in the west gallery.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition has been received:

Of the corporation of the city of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass authorizing the necessary action for a re-development proposal for part of the city of Ottawa; and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a statement to the House relating to a matter affecting my Department of Energy Resources and concerning something which I think is of great importance, particularly to those who live in the Niagara peninsula.

There has been a great deal of concern expressed by citizens, interested groups and newspapers in this province over the water levels in the Niagara River. I therefore wish to make a statement of government policy affecting it.

Mr. Speaker, it is the view of this government that the beauty of Niagara Falls is of great importance and that this government will not allow any of its agencies to undertake any action that would be detrimental to the Niagara Falls area.

With all regard for the vital importance of power to homes and industries, municipal and co-operative organizations; the beauty of the Niagara Falls, and area, comes first. This has long been a matter of great concern to this government and Ontario Hydro, and this has been the policy that they have followed in the past and follow today.

For the benefit of the hon. members, I would like to briefly recapitulate the history of the Niagara Falls diversions.

The first Niagara Falls diversion was authorized by the Boundary Water Treaty of 1909. This treaty provided for the procedures to be used in settling boundary water disputes including the formation of an international joint commission.

Article V of this treaty authorized and permitted the following diversion of water for power at Niagara: Canada 36,000 cubic feet a second; United States 20,000 cubic feet a second.

Despite the apparent disparity, the benefits to each country were almost equal as blocks of power at that time were exported to the U.S.

In 1926 a special board was formed by Canada and the United States to study the Niagara Falls. Both governments and the province of Ontario, and Ontario Hydro were concerned with the recession of the falls through erosion and the need for additional low cost power.

The board after a thorough study reported in 1929 and recommended the construction of certain remedial works, weirs and excavations near the crest of the falls to spread the water to the flanks, and also the construction of a submerged weir in the Grass Island pool.

As a result of these works and in conjunction with them, the board felt that greater amounts of water could be diverted for the generation of power.

In 1940, by an exchange of notes between the U.S. and Canada, Ontario Hydro was allowed to divert an additional 5,000 cubic feet a second at Niagara as a result of the Longlac and Ogoki diversions.

These were rivers and lakes north of what hon. members would call the divide, north of Lake Superior, which normally ran north to the Albany and other rivers into Hudson Bay. They were in effect dammed at the far end and rather than running north into Hudson Bay were diverted so that they flowed back into Lake Superior. The total amount of water which flowed back south instead of flowing north by nature, amounted to about 5,000 cubic feet per second and therefore the Canadian authorities were enabled to withdraw the first 5,000 cubic feet per second at the Niagara Falls diversion and the balance was divided in half.

The Longlac and Ogoki diversions, I would remind hon. members, are but one example of the great many efforts made by Ontario Hydro to maintain the water levels of our Great Lakes system.

During the war emergency, additional temporary diversions were authorized through an exchange of notes between the U.S. and Canadian governments.

In conjunction with the above temporary increase in diversion it was agreed that construction of the remedial works recommended by the special board in 1929 be undertaken. Construction started in 1942, was completed in 1944 by Ontario Hydro.

A treaty was concluded between Canada and the United States in 1950 concerning the diversion of the Niagara River. The objectives of the treaty were to preserve and enhance the falls and at the same time to make most efficient use of the waters of the river for power generation. It was recognized that a knowledge of the diversion to be permitted was necessary before redevelopment of Niagara could take place.

The 1950 treaty superseded the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty insofar as diversions at Niagara for power purposes were concerned. The additional diversions were contingent upon the construction of remedial works in accordance with the objectives of the 1929 special board report and of the nature and design as recommended by the international joint commission and as approved by the two governments. The treaty perpetuated the additional 5,000 cubic feet per second for Canada from the Longlac-Ogoki diversion, by indicating in article III that this water would continue to be governed by the earlier exchange of notes and would not be included in the allocations of the treaty.

Rather than stipulating allowable diversion for power purposes, the 1950 treaty stipulated minimum flows over the falls in prescribed periods, the remainder being available for power purposes.

In this regard the treaty provides:

During the non-tourist season, that is from November 1 to March 31, 50,000 cubic feet per second must flow over the falls;

During the tourist season from April 1 to September 15, from 8.00 in the morning to 10.00 at night there must be 100,000 cubic feet per second and from 10.00 at night till 8.00 the next morning 50,000 cubic feet per second;

From September 16 to October 31 from 8.00 in the morning till 8.00 at night 100,000 cubic feet must flow over the falls and from 8.00 at night till 8.00 the next morning 50,000 cubic feet per second must flow over the falls.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I ask the hon. Minister (Mr. Macaulay) if he would write a letter and send that all to us so we can hear the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) this afternoon?

On a matter of privilege, if the intention is to prevent the hon. leader of the Opposition from reaching the afternoon newspapers, then the hon. Minister is doing it very effectively, in contempt of our rights on this side of the House. As a private member I object most strenuously to his conduct. He could send all that to us. We would all be very interested in it and we could read it at our leisure.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member who has spoken (Mr. Sopha), I would say to the Speaker and thus to the hon. member who has spoken, that this is a matter of very great concern to the people affected by it and that I intend to continue because they have pressed for a statement of government policy on this matter and this is the first occasion I have had the opportunity of assembling this material.

As the hon. members will recall, the present regulations regarding the flow over the falls were drawn up in 1950 and were based to a considerable extent on a report dated 1929. Since then notable improvements have been effected in recent years by the remedial works.

The demands for power production and the demands for viewing the falls are not incompatible. During the winter season the power requirements are highest, while relatively few persons are on hand to view the falls. Conversely, during the summer vacation period, power loads are at a low ebb and visitors to Niagara Falls are numerous. Similar situations exist on weekends and statutory holidays. There appears to be an opportunity to enhance power production during periods when few persons are viewing the falls.

The two power entities have made an application to the international joint commission for revisions to the 1950 treaty, requesting that the present 100,000 cubic feet per second flow requirements be reduced to about 70,000 cubic feet per second, and that the time requirements for this higher flow be reduced.

It is again emphasized, however, that these changes should be made only if they in no way detract from the scenic beauty of the falls as a tourist attraction. The additional water made available to Ontario Hydro would effect large savings in power production costs, and at the same time increase water rentals to the province. It is estimated that the savings to Ontario Hydro, on the basis as outlined herein, will be of the order of $3 million per year, using existing power generating facilities, and that the water rentals payable to the province would be increased by approximately $200,000 per year.

If subsequent studies indicated that the expansion of existing generating facilities at Queenston could be economic, the savings to Ontario Hydro would be two to three times as much, and there would be a corresponding increase in water rentals.

Recently much agitation has arisen on both sides of the river at Niagara Falls because of the levels of the water above and below the falls.

There are three factors affecting the levels of the water at this time:

The natural flow of the Niagara River is lower now than it was this time last year, and therefore obviously the roar of the falls is diminished and the level of the water is down;

Now for the first time, the New York Power Authority is beginning to take its full share of the water under the 1950 treaty and this affects the level of the waters;

The waters which the New York Power Authority are now taking from above the falls they are not dumping into the Maid of the Mist Pool but instead are dumping below the whirlpool at Queenston and therefore the Maid of the Mist Pool is considerably more reduced than it would have been under the old American method of taking the water from above the falls and dumping it into the Maid of the Mist Pool.

The flow in the Niagara River is a tremendous variable ranging from less than 100,000 cubic feet a second to over 300,000 cubic feet a second and there have been occasions when no water has gone over the falls at all. This is due to a number of factors the most important of which is the depth of lake area. It is shaped like a shallow saucer and when there is barometric pressure at one end stronger than at another, the water may be pushed to the westerly end of the lake, thus leaving the easterly end almost or in fact dry. The water can on occasion rise at the westerly end over ten feet with a large drop at the easterly end.

The policy of the government of Ontario in relation to Niagara Falls remains steadfast. Niagara Falls is one of the modern wonders of the world, and its beauty is renowned.

Now I would say to the hon. members opposite they may not be interested in this, but Hansard is going to read very interestingly when they are finished heckling the government's opportunities and policy in this matter.

The surrounding municipalities and residents have spent hundreds of millions of dollars developing the Niagara area centred around the falls and its beauty. The government of Ontario, through its Niagara parks commission, Department of Highways and Department of Travel and Publicity and other agencies have spent millions of dollars relating to the beauty of the falls.

The beauty of the falls cannot be re-created anywhere else and can only be maintained if there is sufficient water. Electrical energy, on the other hand, can be created elsewhere, and therefore the government is determined to see that the relative interests in these matters are properly in balance and that nothing is done to the extent that it is possible on behalf of this government to mar the beauty of the falls and the area surrounding it.

I would conclude by reiterating that the government of Ontario considers pure water and the conservation of our water resources and availability to them, to be a matter of the greatest concern as a provincial policy, and it will continue as our policy that the beauty of the Niagara Falls be not impaired.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question that I would like to submit to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), which I have cleared with all the requirements that are asked.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the members of this House to pay attention to the members as they rise to their feet and speak. It is not only showing disrespect to the member speaking but it shows disrespect to the entire House when the House is disorderly.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, the question I have submitted is this: In the Windsor Star issue of Friday, November 24, there is a story concerning the new secondary school programme announced earlier this year by the hon. Prime Minister.

Dr. Harry Pullen, deputy business administrator for the Ottawa Collegiate Institute Board told delegates to the Ontario conference on education who were meeting in the city of Windsor, that the new programme was "hastily conceived and prematurely announced," and that "those who had to live with the plan had nothing to do with its conception."

I have four questions to ask the hon. Prime Minister, who is also the hon. Minister of Education: were the superintendents, directors of education, head masters or teachers' confederation consulted before the adoption of the programme?

Secondly, if so, what groups were consulted?

Third, what provision has The Department of Education made to staff these new technical training schools and fourth, how many boards of education have made application to establish and increase their technical classes?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister and Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would say in regard to this question that whenever anything new is introduced, particularly in the field of education, it is bound to attract a certain amount of criticism. I think we are all aware of this and with this we have to live.

In answer to the specific questions, I would say that I can give the hon. member a chronological history of what has been done as far as consultation is concerned.

In the first place a meeting of the directors of education for the province of Ontario was held at the Ryerson Institute of Technology on June 2, 1961. At this meeting Dr. S. D. Rendall, who is the Superintendent of Secondary Education in the Department, gave a forecast of the general re-organization which was under consideration at that time.

Secondly, a Secondary School Inspectors' conference was held at Ryerson Institute of Technology, to which Mr. S. G. B. Robinson, general secretary of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, was invited—and this was held on June 13, 14 and 15, 1961. This conference discussed the means of implementing the re-organization in secondary schools in the light of the federal-provincial agreements.

The federal-provincial agreement was signed on June 26, 1961, and a directive from the Premier of the province that the necessary arrangements for implementation of the agreement should be made was issued at that time.

On August 18, 1961, Dr. Rendall spoke to the Ontario secondary school headmasters at their meeting in Kingston, concerning this class.

A secondary school inspectors' conference was held at Ryerson Institute of Technology, at which superintendents of secondary schools in all municipalities were invited to discuss and make suggestions regarding the new plan and these meetings were held on August 28, 29, 30, 31, 1961. That was a four-day conference.

At that time, Dr. Rendall emphasized that this plan was not so much a new departure in secondary education as a shift in emphasis—greater emphasis upon commercial and technical training for employment—and that only one new feature had not been tried experimentally in schools in Ontario, namely, the four-year programme in the arts and science branch.

On September 13 Dr. Rendall met with representatives of the Registered Nurses' Association and executive of home and school associations of the province.

The Minister of Education's provincial advisory committee, representative of the leaders in business, industry and labour met on September 21, 1961, to advise the Minister of Education regarding implementation of the federal-provincial agreement.

Two meetings with the communications committee of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation were held on October 12 and November 7, 1961 and a third meeting with this committee is expected before the Christmas vacation.

During October and the first week of November, conferences and discussions were held between university officials and representatives of The Department of Education at the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario, McMaster University, the University of Waterloo, Waterloo University College, the Ontario Agricultural College, the Ontario Veterinary College, and Macdonald Institute at Guelph, Assumption University of Windsor, the University of Ottawa, Carleton University, and York University.

A discussion of the plan at the meeting of municipal superintendents of secondary schools took place at Vineland on November 3, 1961.

A meeting was held with the executive of the Catholic Parent-Teachers Association on November 6, 1961.

The plan was discussed at a conference of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture on November 7, 1961.

At each of these meetings and conferences which I have mentioned, the revised programmes in secondary education were explained, questions were answered, comments were invited in oral form or in written submission to the department.

Full consultation with the teachers of the province and the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation was initiated in September as soon as the teachers were available for discussion and it is still being carried on. Useful comments and suggestions will be welcomed in the Department from any group or organization familiar with the operation of secondary schools until the end of December, when tentative courses and plans must be mimeographed for issue to the schools on an experimental basis.

That answers the first part of the question of the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Belanger), in detailing who was consulted. I might say just before I leave that portion of the question that the programme is a five-year programme and at the present time we are working only on the first year of that programme. Therefore, we will develop the programme as it becomes necessary. There is no reason for us now, for instance, to settle finally what is going to happen in a course which will not be taken for two or three years. Thus as time goes along we will consult with all interested parties as I have indicated here in order that we may have their views and their views may be expressed upon what we are doing.

The third part of the question is what provision has been made to staff the new technical training schools. Well, what we have done there: it was necessary to take people out of industry in order to train them as teachers to teach in these schools. This means that we had to appeal to a different group than normally goes into teaching, i.e., these were people who were established in their own communities, had jobs and homes and families and so on.

So what have we done: we instituted a one-year course and we undertook to pay the tuition fee for this group and pay them a $30 a week living allowance while they were at the Ontario College of Education. Unfortunately, I do not have the exact number that we attracted into this course, but I can tell hon. members that we ended up by refusing admission to certain applicants because we had more than were required for what we considered to be the immediate needs of the school system.

The final question is, how many boards of education have made application to establish or increase their technical classes. Well, the procedure by which a school board takes advantage of the scheme which we have established is that they submit their plans to us in the department, we process them in the normal course of events and then we send them in to Ottawa for approval as to whether Ottawa will approve them for grants. To date we have received applications from approximately 175 school boards to create greater or lesser facilities for teaching of technical subjects. Of the 175, 118 are at the sketch plan stage and submitted to Ottawa, then they have to come back here and the sketch plans drawn and final approval is given in the department here.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, just one short question. Does the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) think he has answered that first question? Because the plan was in operation and they never told the teachers what they were going to do, when it was announced in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of this debate, I wish to pay my respects to you as the guardian of the rights of the hon. members of this chamber. You are the custodian of a tradition that is the foundation of parliamentary government; namely, the right of the Opposition to be heard in criticism of the government of the day. It is this right to criticize without being treasonable that gives democratic government the strength to endure and the flexibility to progress. I am confident that you will bring distinction to your office again this session.

I want also at this time to say a few words about the new hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and his government. I say a few words deliberately despite the numbers on the treasury benches opposite. An individual salute would take altogether too much time on this occasion, and there will be an opportunity as the session progresses to greet each of the hon. Ministers with affection and thoroughness when they come before us with their estimates.

I had the opportunity to greet the new hon. Prime Minister at the opening and I extend my felicitations to him again. I want also to say a word of greeting to the new hon. members of the government. I congratulate the hon. member for Middlesex North (Mr. Stewart) on his promotion to the portfolio of Agriculture. Being a farmer, he might have been excused for declining a position that is surrounded by so many problems. It is to his credit that knowing what is ahead of him he has accepted such an onerous task.

I also want to extend my best wishes to the hon. member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) who only lately moved from the government rump to the treasury benches to assume the task of reforming our reform institutions.

Congratulations are also in order for the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton), whose abilities have been recognized and whose talents will undoubtedly be employed more specifically in the future.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) and congratulate him on his appointment to one of the better patronized agencies of this government. Many of us assumed that his good spirits in this chamber were 100 per cent effervescent but it seems now we will have to accept controlled reading of 70 per cent proof.

To the hon. members for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and for Lincoln (Mr. Daley) let me say that it is a pleasure to see them in their places opposite. I must be careful here, Mr. Speaker, because while they put aside some of the burdens and cares of office, they still look too formidable for flattery.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining hon. members opposite will not be too disappointed if I omit them today from my catalogue of reference. As I said earlier, I shall be pleased to bring them greetings on another day.

Mr. Speaker, the mover and the seconder of the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) and the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton) did well. In the normal course of events I would be expected to point out the narrowness of their approach and the errors of their judgment on the matters contained in His Honour's address. Today I do not propose to do so in traditional fashion.

Today I intend to devote my remarks to the existence of organized crime in Ontario, a fact which makes it imperative that this government establish a Royal commission to expose all aspects of organized criminal activity in our province so that those involved may be brought to justice.

I shall demonstrate that organized crime does exist in Ontario, that it is widespread in Ontario, that it has international connections, and that it has contaminated law enforcement and is a clear and present danger to our society.

I also intend to demonstrate that an unrestricted Royal commission headed by a Supreme Court Justice, supported by a vigorous and determined counsel and a staff of trained investigators is the only adequate way to meet the threat posed by organized crime.

I should explain at this point two things. Firstly, I shall not discuss this afternoon a number of important matters that relate to the welfare of Ontario's schools, farms, municipalities, labour-management relations and financial problems. I recognize their importance and will deal with all of them in later debates. Today, however, I am going to concentrate on the subject of organized crime because I believe it to be of great importance and little understood.

Secondly, at the conclusion of my speech, I shall move the traditional want-of-confidence motion, and this motion will encompass many issues which will be discussed by other members of my party as the debate progresses.

I do not intend, however, to include in this want-of-confidence motion a clause dealing with the appointment of a Royal commission. I am leaving it out deliberately because a want-of-confidence motion requires that the government supporters defeat it or cause the government to be dissolved. I do not wish to put any technical block in the establishment of a Royal commission by forcing the government to rely on technicalities.

I intend this speech, Mr. Speaker, to be a direct appeal to the new hon. Prime Minister and to the new government to appoint a Royal commission. It is a direct appeal stripped of all technical artifice and made directly to the common sense and conscience of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin by outlining what is meant by organized crime, how it operates, what are its characteristics, its extent in Ontario and the scope of the threat it poses to the people of Ontario.

To begin, Mr. Speaker, we can do no better than to refer to the report of the New York Commission of Investigation which was published last February under the title "Syndicated Gambling in New York State." That report was but a summary for the information of the public of a most intensive investigation begun by the commission as a result of its initial hearings on the now famous gathering of the underworld at Apalachin, New York, on November 14, 1957.

Over 25,000 pages of report and documentary materials were amassed during the investigation. Many raids and arrests were made. Thousands of pages of testimony were recorded in public and private hearings in a number of centres. Widespread corruption and lax law enforcement was uncovered. Specific remedial legislation was proposed, and perhaps most important of all in the commission's view, there was assembled and distributed to the appropriate authorities a tremendous volume of detailed criminal intelligence. In all, some 2,150 references to gamblers or gambling operations were transmitted to 54 of New York's 62 counties, and confidential mailings were sent to 206 cities, towns and villages within 54 counties.

The New York State commission, Mr. Speaker, was a creature of the state Legislature and had no national responsibility. It did, nevertheless, produce clear-cut evidence that crime is national and international in its scope.

On page 82 of its report the Commission said:

Simply stated organized crime is what the term implies. It is the activity of a group of persons working together with the express purpose of more effectively accomplishing criminal acts against society. By organizing, criminals are able to secure greater immunity from the law, a wider field of operations, a monopolistic control over specific types of criminal, and, of course, greater profits.

And I continue to quote:

The emergence and development during the past 20 years of criminal syndicates extending through our entire country is recognized by criminologists as the most prominent and the most threatening and the least understood of our national crime problem.

How does organized crime operate?

The New York State commission found, Mr. Speaker, organized crime and syndicated gambling to be synonymous. The report states, and I quote:

Gambling is the heartbeat of organized crime both on a local and national scale. The main font of organized criminal power today flows from three sources: professional gambling, labour racketeering and narcotics. Easily the most profitable to the underworld, and the most corrupting of the three and thus the most dangerous to society, is professional gambling.

The commission describes the mechanics of professional gambling in considerable detail, and it may be helpful to the House to have a summary of the main points. Basically there are four stages to the operation: the handbook, the bookmaker, the bookmaker's bookmaker or lay-off, and the syndicate.

The handbook is the street agent or runner of the bookmaker. He is in direct contact with the bettor. He is paid on a commission basis ranging from 25 to 50 per cent of the bettor's losses. He is the man most often arrested and charged for illegal gambling and it is part of his job to accept arrest to protect his superiors, who in turn provide bail, pay legal fees and other expenses.

The bookmaker is the street runner's boss. He also deals with customers on the telephone. He requires an established location, usually a small business such as a cigar store, restaurant, pool hall or dry cleaning plant which serves as a cover or front for his illegal activities. He is thus known as the front end of professional gambling. In larger centres the bookmaker tends to take up his business in an apartment or other private place, where he can maintain a battery of telephones, usually in fictitious names and nominee accounts, a shortwave radio and personnel to record bets and results.

The bookmaker's bookmaker or lay-off man does not deal with the general public. He deals with bookmakers and in large amounts of money. He is the bookmaker's banker as well as his insurance agent, supplying him with capital and credit, accepting bets which the bookmaker cannot handle, and placing lay-off bets for bookmakers whose own books have become unbalanced. He is thus known as the back-end in professional gambling.

The syndicate is the central clearing house for the lay-off points. It is to the syndicate that the lay-off men all over the continent turn when their own books threaten to become unbalanced. The syndicate operates on the same margin as the handbook except that its tremendous volume increases its profits accordingly.

The syndicate is vital to the whole system. It is the means whereby professional gamblers make a profit regardless of the outcome of any particular event on which bets are placed.

Suppose, for example, there is a horse running at New Woodbine at odds of 60 to 1 and a bookmaker in San Francisco finds he has some $25,000 bet on that horse. Few bookmakers handle enough daily action to pay up $1,500,000 if the horse wins and still retain a profit from bets on losing horses. To ensure a profit, Mr. Speaker, the bookmaker limits the odds at which he will pay off and he himself bets with his lay-off men such amounts as may be necessary to keep his book in balance and show a profit.

The lay-off man is in precisely the same position as the bookmaker. He must balance his book to show a profit and he does this by placing balancing bets with the syndicate. The syndicate then turns to the race track itself.

A syndicate agent entrusted with huge amounts of money is stationed at the principal race tracks. He is in constant touch, either by open telephone line or other means, with syndicate headquarters. Before each important race he is given instructions. If the combine has received what it regards as excessive bets on a particular horse the agent will be directed to put through the pari-mutuel machines enough money on the horse to lower the odds sufficiently to protect the syndicate edge. That is why there is frequently such a radical change in track odds just before post time. Thus it is that ironically those who bet with professional gamblers end up by betting against themselves.

The New York State commission declared, and I quote:

No bookmaker works alone. He has to traffic with his fellow bookmakers. Thus there is an unbroken chain of communication from the first to the last bookmaker.

The professional gambler's profit depends on the odds he himself sets and, secondly, on the fact he does not have to pay any state percentage tax or deduction from his handle.

The commission found that part of every $2.00 bet with a bookie is likely to end up in the pockets of the syndicate and therefore in the pockets of a criminal.

On page 49 of its report it states, and I quote:

An upstate farmer living ten miles from the nearest village is likely to place a bet on a football game in California, a hockey game in Canada, or perhaps a boxing match in Europe and the money with which the farmer pays off his losses may possibly wind up in the pockets of a Florida combine. Such is the geographical character of bookmaking in the United States today.

On page 20 of the report the commission said:

New York State crime commission found 2,000 people in an area of 5 million people or one bookmaker for every 2,500 people. The average bookmaking establishment employed ten people.

On page 21 it said:

The total gross volume of bookmaking in central New York State during 1959 could be said to have reached $500 million with a net profit to the bookmaking operations of not less than $50 million.

Throughout the United States in 1960, it was estimated by Milton Wessel, a special counsel for federal rackets inquiry, that $45 billion was bet through bookmakers in the syndicate, or more than the total amount spent for defence and more than three times as much as was spent for education in the United States. Profits to the syndicate were $9 billion.

A King county jury in New York in February, 1959, said:

Actually if you scratch the professional operator of gambling ventures you will find the narcotic pedlar, the loan shark, the dice game operator, the white slaver, and even the murderer.

The commission found that the appetite of organized crime for money is insatiable. The lengths to which organized crime will go to pyramid its profits are endless.

The report stated:

Organized crime invests its gambling profits in other criminal ventures. In this fashion the underworld protects itself against any shift in approach towards gambling causing a stoppage of all income. Gambling revenues are used to pay for murders and other acts of violence, to underwrite labour racketeers, to corrupt the public official, to erect the still, to obtain fire arms unlawfully, to purchase contraband drugs, to pave the way for the introduction of prostitution, to finance the Shylock.

On page 52, the report continues and I continue to quote:

Both big and little bookmakers diligently attempt to corrupt the police officer, other public officials and the politician, in an effort to protect their gains and align themselves with the respectable elements in society. In every way bookmakers seek to enlarge and extend their illegitimate business, their power and their influence.

On page 95, the report said:

The really successful gambling operation, ever anxious to guard a good thing, does not content itself with merely enlisting the co-operation of the patrolman, the gambling squad and the precinct captain. Where possible the gambler will reach into the very highest levels of government to secure protection against all possible contingencies. To the gambler bribe money is as much a part of the overhead as the electric bill.

On page 111, the report reads:

If bribery should fail the hoodlum and racketeer will revert to such traditional methods as extortion, beating and even killing. So large are the profits of illegal gambling that a substantial portion can be siphoned off into legitimate business.

Senator Estes Kefauver, chairman of the U.S. Senate crime commission has said, and I quote:

Evidence was shown of criminal influence invading about fifty fields of endeavour, including advertising, amusements, automobile industry, banking, professional sports, communication industry, food, the garment industry, the hotel, insurance, and liquor industry, news services, newspapers, radio, television stations, steel, transportation and many, many others.

This then is the dreadful reality of organized crime.

We can no longer afford the luxury of ignoring the menace of professional gambling. Without drastic changes in attitude and activity, organized crime may eventually undermine the structure of large segments of society.

Senator John Kennedy, now President Kennedy, has said:

In the modern criminal underworld we face a nation-wide, highly organized and highly effective enemy.

Governor Nelson Rockefeller of New York State in the message to the Legislature in 1960 said:

Illegal gambling is a serious cancer in our society. It is unquestionably a principal source of revenue for organized crime.

Some leading Canadians have agreed with Governor Rockefeller and President Kennedy. In October of 1961 the Honourable Davie Fulton, Minister of Justice, told the International Association of Police Chiefs in Montreal:

There are a number of organized crime syndicates operating in Canada.

Commissioner Harvison of the R.C.M.P. in his last annual report declared:

Canada is presenting an increasingly attractive target for organized crime.

The Commissioner stated his position more fully in a recent Toronto speech in which he said:

The American syndicates are showing an increasing interest in Canada and are moving to take over direct control of the existing crime organizations and to expand their criminal activities.

But the hon. Attorney-General of Ontario (Mr. Roberts) has steadfastly insisted over a long period that there is no organized crime in this province. On April 17, 1961, the hon. Attorney-General was reported by the Toronto Daily Star—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I wonder if the hon. member (Mr. Wintermeyer) would allow me to interrupt him a moment. He is quoting from a report and I would just like to read a sentence from it.

An hon. member: Make some notes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on April 17, 1961, the hon. Attorney-General was reported by the Toronto Daily Star as saying it would be "perfectly silly for a single province to undertake a major investigation of crime."

On April 18, the same newspaper reported him saying in a speech at Windsor that while he was not taking reports of criminal infiltration lightly:

I do not think an organized element has appeared or will appear. It is humorous to talk about the Mafia.

On April 20, the hon. Attorney-General was in Belleville and said, according to the text of his speech, that linking the Mafia with crime in Ontario is ignorance and loose talk and that Canada is comparatively free of organized gangsterism.

On May 5, the hon. Attorney-General attended a closed-door discussion of the Ontario Magistrates Association in Toronto and later reported to the Toronto Globe & Mail, that the meeting had strengthened his view that Ontario, and I quote,

Is in very good condition as far as crime is concerned.

On May 8 the Telegram quoted him as saying, and I quote,

I do not think my remarks have been what you call complacent. There is no organized crime in Ontario, but men in the criminal element are always trying to organize it.

The Toronto Daily Star reported him as adding:

We are fortunate that so far we have been able to crack down on them before they got organized and throw them in gaol. Once it gets beyond a shadow it appears to be organized and I am firmly convinced it is not.

On May 11 the hon. Attorney-General addressed a political meeting in Toronto and according to his text said:

Of course there is a certain amount of bookmaking and betting in pools, with some link-ups to know instantaneously the results of certain races, but there is no suggestion from my sources that there is any undue or extensively unmolested organized crime effective in this province at this time in any way comparable to some of the conditions that have been exposed in some of the states to the south of us.

Mr. Speaker, let me summarize the characteristics of organized crime as revealed by the New York State crime commission.

The commission found organized crime and syndicated gambling to be synonymous. It noted that many other investigations had come to the same conclusion. The commission found that syndicated gambling is an integrated, highly organized, interlocking conspiracy traversing local, provincial and national boundaries. It found that the common handicap, the lay-off system and rapid means of communication, are the vital mechanics of syndicated gambling. It found that syndicated gambling to operate successfully must have police protection and that the professional gambler will reach into the very highest levels of government to secure protection against all possible contingencies.

It found there is an inter-relationship between professional gambling and other illegal activities, especially drug trafficking. It found that gaming and gambling revenues are used to compete with legitimate business.

Mr. Speaker, I shall demonstrate that in Ontario today there is all the evidence needed to show the presence and activity of organized crime. I think this evidence with the description of organized crime made available in the

New York State crime commission's report will convince any reasonable mind that we are faced with a matter of such seriousness that a government responsive to its duties to guard public welfare will be persuaded to launch an all-out investigation that will expose and bring to justice the criminal element that threatens all of us.

I propose to ask and to answer five questions. What evidence is there of syndicated gambling in Ontario? What evidence is there that syndicated gambling in Ontario is an integrated, highly organized, interlocking conspiracy? What evidence is there that professional gamblers have had and may still have protection from police and public authorities? What evidence is there of a connection between professional gambling in Ontario and other illegal or criminal activity? What evidence is there that gambling revenues in Ontario are used to compete with legitimate business?

Mr. Speaker, on the first question one might argue that the New York State crime commission's report alone is evidence enough of syndicated gambling in Ontario. On page 48 there is reproduced a schedule of out-of-state contacts by bookmakers of Niagara Falls, New York. These contacts include bookmakers in Guelph, in Hamilton and in Toronto. On page 51 there is a schedule of contacts by bookmakers at Buffalo, and these contacts include bookmakers in Guelph and in Toronto. On page 45 the commission states:

Below the combine level bookmakers tend to operate on a regional basis. Thus the small bookmakers in the central New York State area lay-off primarily with contacts in their own immediate geographical section. Larger bookmakers would in turn lay off mainly with their counterparts in Canada and the immediately surrounding state. There is an extremely close relationship between major bookmakers in Canada and those in Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Rochester, Syracuse and Albany area. Many of these bookmakers in Canada are transplants from New York City who periodically shift their operations from one city to another.

And that, Mr. Speaker, I quote directly.

On page 21 the commission refers to evidence at its public hearings in New York City in April of 1960 concerning a Canadian bookmaking operation engaged in accepting lay-offs from up-state bookmakers which netted $500,000 during two months of the baseball season.

On page 26 the commission describes the syndicate in these words:

Today the combines and syndicates enjoy almost complete immunity from law enforcement.

On page 83 the report states:

Several bookmaking operators arrested by the commission and the state police during 1959, were found to have made contact with guests of Joseph Barbara Senior around the time of the Apalachin meeting. One New York State bookmaker, for the purpose of purchasing $22 million worth of smuggled Cuban pesos, had formed a partnership with a Canadian gambler who was a business associate of an Apalachin delegate.

On page 88 the commission cites a statement it received early last year from Attorney-General Edward J. McCormick of Massachusetts:

His office found evidence that a meeting of over 100 leaders of organized crime had recently taken place in Worcester, Massachusetts, at which the main topic of discussion had been syndicated gambling. Those present at this meeting had connections with gamblers in such places as Albany, Kingston, Schenectady, and New York City in that state; Providence and Johnstown in Rhode Island; New Haven and Hartford in Connecticut; Philadelphia and Pottsville in Pennsylvania; Miami in Florida; Covington in Kentucky; Wilmington in Delaware; and Toronto, Canada.

On page 90 the report declares:

The international character of organized crime is also manifest in the professional gambling field. Lay-off centres are established and maintained in several cities in Canada and until recently in Havana, Cuba.

And it then goes on to make further reference to the Canadian gambling operations which made a half a million dollars profit on baseball betting, by saying the same operation also won $150,000 in a two-week period from a Buffalo bookmaking operation.

But I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of relying only on the New York State crime commission and what it found out about syndicated gambling in Ontario.

Between 1957 and the middle of this year, Mr. Speaker, that is a period of four and a half years, 31 so-called social clubs lost their charters as a result of illegal gambling in Metropolitan Toronto. Yet at the end of this period there were still 24 clubs in Metro area suspected of illegal gambling by the police. I am informed that of the 31 cancellations, 23 resulted from court convictions for either gaming or betting, and eight from police representations to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) and that he exercised his discretionary power to cancel when there is good reason to believe the charter is being used for illegal gaming.

A Globe and Mail story on May 25, 1961, written by Albert Warson provides further evidence of the extent of organized gambling. His report said:

On May 19, 1961, the police of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, New York, produced a pile of nearly 70 telephone numbers linking bookmakers in their area to their contemporaries in Toronto, Hamilton, Guelph, London, Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Thorold, Welland, Fort Erie, Port Credit and such places as Rosemount.

On May 13, 1961, the Toronto Daily Star quoted Magistrate Bick, Chairman of the Metropolitan Police Commission, as saying:

Toronto does have organized crime and the big question is what links it may have with the United States. Certainly there is organized crime in Metro Toronto. There has been organized crime in Toronto for many, many years.

As recently as November 9, 1961, the Toronto Telegram reports a raid on a Betty Anne Drive, Willowdale, home that netted five men who were held on 21 charges. This raid uncovered Bell telephone records of calls from that house costing $1,312 in one 35-day period. The calls included calls to Hamilton, Montreal, Preston, Norfolk, Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit and Miami.

Last April 20, 1961, the Toronto Daily Star reported the conviction of two men by Magistrate Wolfe of operating a bookmaking business which police estimated was a $2.5 million a year operation. The men were convicted of operating a common gaming house on Eglinton Avenue and another on Christie Street. In the Eglinton Avenue apartment police found betting slips for April 30, 1960, recording $17,034. Police claimed the average daily take was $8,772. The convicted men's defence counsel, David Humphrey, and I quote, "contended that the two men were not the big men of the business but salaried employees."

In December of 1960, when confessed gambler Max Bluestein was convicted of operating the Lakeview club on Eglinton Avenue, the convicting magistrate estimated that the club did an annual business exceeding $13 million, with a profit in excess of $1 million. After the raid on the Centre Road veterans club the police found lists of gamblers totalling 1,464 persons. Of these 1,098 were members of the veterans club and 336 were members of the Jordan club, a downtown Toronto club run by Feeley and McDermott and against which a conviction was entered.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would just like to—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Do not interrupt.

An hon. member: We are loaded around here. Sit down.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am not going to sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member can rise on a point of privilege if there is some real misstatement.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The privilege is just this—will the hon. leader of the Opposition sit down for a moment, please?

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the privilege?

Mr. Speaker: The member can rise and state his point.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The names of two people Feeley and McDermott were just mentioned. These two men are accused and at the present time there is a case before the court of appeal awaiting hearing in connection with gambling which puts anything relating to them and to their case in the position of sub judice. Surely my hon. friend knows that and I am bringing it to his attention now to make it clear because the rules of the House are very clear concerning that.

An hon. member: What is the rule?

Mr. Wintermeyer: What rule is the hon. Minister quoting? Mr. Speaker, we are going to fight this one out. No speech have I ever given more thought to, more determination; nor is there any speech have I ever made in this House am I going to fight more to present.

This is a defensive move by the hon. Attorney-General. Most of what I am going to say relates to that trial and I say, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Then the hon. leader of the Opposition has no—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, there is a rule which says an hon. member may not comment on any cases before the courts; but I say, Mr. Speaker, that surely that rule can not be used to preclude any reference to any case in our courts.

Mr. Speaker, think of this: that particular case to which the hon. Attorney-General makes reference is currently in the Court of Appeal. Now surely I cannot influence the Court of Appeal, and common sense, Mr. Speaker, dictates that this supreme Legislature should have the opportunity to bring to the attention of this House and the people of Ontario matters of significance and not be diverted by a tactic that would suggest that I am going to undermine the judicial system at the Court of Appeal level by making comment.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member intends to persist I will say at once that if he intends to persist along those lines I will ask you to rule and I will ask the House.

An hon. member: Well, what is the hon. Minister hiding for? Get out from behind that screen. No wonder he did not win.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am informed and I have every reason to believe that the hon. Attorney-General knows, or should know as I do, that in a raid on a back-end in a Toronto apartment in 1957 the Toronto police seized a list of 600 names and upon study these proved to be the names of not just bettors or customers, but of bookmakers and gamblers. Mr. Speaker, there has been evidence in the courts and reference in this House on previous occasions concerning three of the largest gambling clubs in the province in the past 10 years—the Roseland club in Windsor, the Frontier club in Fort Erie, the Centre Road veterans club in Cooksville. I am informed that two notorious gamblers, Joseph McDermott of Port Credit and Vincent Feeley, had substantial interests in all these operations—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I arise to object that these men's names, who are charged before the court with charges pending as well as the case—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I am the leader of the Opposition and I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to tell you now that I will vacate any privilege I have. No speech was more important than the speech I am going to make. I am prepared to waive any privilege I have in this House, I am prepared to do anything that is reasonable to give me the opportunity to make the comments that I think in conscience have to be made for the people of Ontario at this time.

Applause.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Speaker will rule when he thinks a rule is necessary.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, there has been evidence in the courts and reference in this House on previous occasions concerning—sorry Mr. Speaker, I have already read that portion, let me continue.

There has been evidence in court concerning the Ramsey club in Niagara Falls. Mr. Speaker, the relations between this club and the Frontier club in Fort Erie were most intimate and most intriguing and I shall relate them to the House later on. Suffice it to say at this point, there has been testimony in court to indicate that from the latter part of 1959, Joseph McDermott and Vincent Feeley had a substantial interest in the Ramsey club and were therein associated with various American gamblers led by one Benjamin Niccolitti.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid—

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister is afraid all right, he is afraid—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would point out to the hon. member that I have responsibilities just as he has and in connection with the rule, it is a general rule not of my institution by any means, but a general rule that when cases are before the courts they should not be discussed in this House. Now my hon. friend was talking about the very evidence that was produced in these cases.

Mr. Reaume: Is the hon. Minister's face red?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, that evidence has been presented at the trial level. This is not politics.

There was testimony to indicate that two brothers named Iannuzeli of Niagara Falls, New York, who preceded Feeley and McDermott as the Canadian bosses of the Ramsey club, were members of the Mafia.

There has been testimony to the effect that as recently as the early part of 1960, an American by the name of Magardino, who was identified as the brother of a hoodlum called Magardino the Undertaker, had visited Feeley and McDermott to discuss sources of information in the anti-gambling branch of the Ontario Provincial Police.

There has been reference in court to a James Bay hunting trip which Joseph McDermott was supposed to have made with two or three racketeers from the United States. On September 30, 1958 McDermott, Feeley and six other men arrived at Moosonee, Ontario, and were taken to the James Bay goose club. They departed by air on October 4, with the exception of one man to whom I shall refer later.

The other members of the party were all from Detroit and all are, assuming them to be still alive, reputed leaders of the Mafia in Detroit. The five men were:

William Tocco of 581 Middlesex Road, Grosse Point Park, Michigan. This man has a Detroit police record from the prohibition days, being arrested several times but never convicted. He is apparently very wealthy, owning interests in a produce business, a beer distributorship, a bus line and a bakery in Detroit. He is reported to be the judge and peacemaker within the gambling syndicate in Detroit.

Anthony Tocco of 552 Middlesex Road, Grosse Point Park is the son of William Tocco, and is married to Carmelia Profaci the daughter of Joseph Profaci of Brooklyn, who is regarded as the leader of the syndicate in the eastern United States.

Jack W. Tocco of 560 Middlesex Road, Grosse Point Park, Michigan is the son of William Tocco and is married to the daughter of Angelo Meli, a czar of the prohibition era, who is said to have a controlling interest in gambling in the Detroit area. Jack Tocco is a large shareholder in the Hazel Park racing association, which owns a race track in Detroit and operates Wheeling Downs in West Virginia.

Vincent Meli, 1683 New Castle Ave., Grosse Point Woods, Michigan. He is the son of Angelo Meli, to whom I have just referred.

Dominic Corrado, 701 Middlesex Road, Grosse Point Park. He is a cousin of Jack and Anthony Tocco and the son of the late Peter Corrado, a czar of Detroit bootlegging and gambling. Dominic Corrado was arrested on a gaming charge in 1952 but released.

These then, Mr. Speaker, were the men with whom Joseph McDermott and Vincent Feeley went hunting at a luxurious lodge in James Bay some three years ago. I do not pretend to know what they talked about. I can tell the House that the Detroit men were McDermott's guests. At least he is known to have paid $2,000.00 in cash for water transportation and supplies when the party left.

I can also tell the House that the James Bay goose club is owned by Eric Cradock and Joseph B. Ryan and that shortly before McDermott and his party arrived at the club, Ryan sent a telegram from Toronto to the club manager which stated in part:

JOE McDERMOTT PARTY EIGHTEEN FOURTH WEEK CANCELLED. PURPLE GANG IN TROUBLE STOP.

Laughter.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, Feeley and McDermott were big-time gamblers who operated on a big-time scale. To get about in their gambling operations they had a private airplane at their disposal and were both licensed pilots.

The aircraft, of course, was not registered in their name. The plane I am referring to was a float-equipped Cessna 180A aircraft, insignia CFJQQ. This plane was based at Toronto Island airport and was registered to one George Reid, a gambling associate of Feeley and McDermott, in the care of D. G. Humphrey, 12 Richmond Street East, Toronto, a legal advisor to several Feeley and McDermott enterprises.

McDermott was at the controls of this airplane when it crashed into the Toronto harbour on September 3, 1958. He was returning from Fort Erie, the location of the Frontier club. This airplane was replaced by a similar one, insignia CFKRN. It too was registered to George Reid, in care of D. G. Humphrey.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. leader of the Opposition appears to be reading from some evidence. Would he indicate what—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Attorney-General was on top of his department he would know where I got this information.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am asking—

Several Opposition members: No, no, no!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Hon. members can ask questions of those who are speaking and have the floor. They can ask questions with permission. However, the hon. member speaking has the right to refuse to answer the question at any time.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In the early winter of 1959, Mr. Speaker, this aircraft left Toronto Island airport and did not return for many weeks. It was flown by a hired pilot to Florida where Feeley and McDermott had gone south by a commercial airliner, and used it for private flights in Florida and the Caribbean area. The airplane made at least one flight to Cuba, where the pilot was jailed for illegal entry.

It would be very interesting for a Royal commission to investigate whether there was any connection between this flight to Cuba and the report to the New York State crime commission of a deal involving a Canadian and New York gambler to buy $22 million worth of smuggled Cuban pesos.

Since September 21, 1960, Mr. Speaker, the Cessna KRN aircraft has been registered in the name of a respectable Toronto architect. All the log books pertaining to the aircraft were turned over to this gentleman at the time of sale with the exception of the journey log. The journey log is the one and only record of where the aircraft has been. It must be kept afterwards, because it may be inspected by The Department of Transport at any time. Any inaccuracies or omissions can result in the cancellation of the registration.

The House may be interested to know that the police blotter for September, 1960, records the report of a theft from George Reid. According to Reid, he was on his way to the architect's home to deliver the journey log and had decided to stop in Chinatown for dinner. When he returned he found his car had been broken into and a briefcase containing the journey log had been stolen. I hardly need add, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been any recovery.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to my second question. What evidence is there that syndicated gambling in Ontario is an integrated, highly organized, interlocking conspiracy? On April 25 of this year the Bellevue bridge and social club and a number of other places were raided. Nine men were charged with conspiracy to operate several betting houses. Since their names and histories are instructive, I shall give them to the House:

Freddie Gabourie, of Bathurst Street; Jack Weaver of Chelwood Road; Harry Ikeman of Eglinton Avenue; Max Silver of Crawford Street; Arthur Larder of Spadina Avenue; Tim Buckley of Royal York Road; Mr. Goldenberg of Arlington Avenue; Alex Robinson of Tyndall Avenue and Hugh O'Gara of Eglinton Avenue.

Of Mr. Gabourie and Mr. Weaver I shall have more to say later on. For the present—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Not at this juncture. I anticipate the question and it may be valid a little later but not right now.

For the present I wish only to draw the attention of the House to the fact that Jack Weaver of 41 Chelwood Road, Toronto, is on record with the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) as being a director of the Divion club from early 1959 until the club lost its charter in October of 1960 as a result of police representations.

Here is but one example, Mr. Speaker, of the difficulties faced by the police in suppressing illegal gambling. Having finally got the Divion club closed, they find Mr. Weaver busily at work elsewhere.

Unless the hon. Attorney-General draws some satisfaction from the fact that at least the Divion club was closed, let me point out to him that the file in the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary on this club shows its location to have been 2 Tyndall Avenue, Toronto. But that the Toronto police knew it to be 1284 Queen Street West and that in the injunction proceedings to which I have referred the address of 9A McNab Street, Hamilton, was also stated. There is no reference of either address in the club file, and no record that the hon. Provincial Secretary consented to a change of premises from 2 Tyndall Avenue, as the law requires.

If the hon. Provincial Secretary should reply that they cannot possibly police the files of all these club charters, I suggest to him that we are surely entitled to expect a better performance than occurred in this case where the Divion club charter was dissolved on November 12, 1960, but his officials were still writing Mr. Weaver on November 30, 1960, to complain that the club's annual return had not been filed.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to Harry Eisen and Arthur Larder. Eisen was from 1955 to 1958 a director of the Somerset club in North York, a club suspected by the police of illegal gambling. After 1958 he was a director of the Bellevue club. The file on the Bellevue club does not show an Arthur Larder, L-a-r-d-e-r, but it does show an Arthur Larter, L-a-r-t-e-r of 397 Spadina Avenue, as a director in 1960. And it would appear they are one and the same man.

Tim Buckley, another of the men arrested April 25 on the charge of conspiracy to operate several betting houses appears in the file of the Columbia bridge club of Toronto as a director in 1959. The Columbia club's charter was dissolved for cause a year before Mr. Buckley was arrested on the conspiracy charge. Phinias Goldenberg of Arlington Avenue is I presume either the same or a close relative of Percy Goldenberg of 243 Arlington Avenue, Toronto, who is identified in the Bellevue club file as a club director from 1958 to 1961. Alex Robinson of Tyndall Avenue was a director of the West End bridge and social club, Toronto, from 1953 until the club was convicted for illegal gambling in 1960. From 1954 to 1956 he was a director of the Club Bernard, a club still operating and suspected of illegal gambling by the Toronto police.

On April 24, 1961—and I would point out to the House this is only a day before he was picked up in the raid—Alex Robinson was sentenced to three months in jail and fined $3,000 for operating a back-end book-making establishment. An identical punishment was meted out on the same day for the same offence to Hugh O'Gara, the last of the nine men arrested on April 25 and charged with conspiracy to operate several betting houses.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the pattern is obvious. Here are nine men, all arrested on the same day and charged with the same conspiracy offence and most of them, it develops, proved to have associations with other illegal and conspicuous gambling operations. Clearly this indicates the highly organized interlocking nature of professional gambling. The hon. Attorney-General may say, how can he be expected to know that? I ask the hon. Attorney-General, does he not know that the provincial police seized a list of 1,464 names showing the membership of the Centre Road veterans club at Cooksville and the Jordan club in downtown Toronto when the police raided the home of George Reid, the trusted lieutenant of Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott? Has he not examined that list?

Does the hon. Attorney-General not also have records of illegal gambling convictions both in respect of individuals and chartered clubs? Has he not received both from the provincial police and the Metropolitan Toronto police lists of clubs suspected of gaming or betting?

And has he not the records on these clubs examined either by his own or the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary? And has he not had a comparison made of all these lists and records?

Perhaps the hon. Attorney-General will say he has been too busy travelling about the province, convincing people that there is no organized crime in Ontario. I will tell the House what such an examination and comparison shows. It shows beyond any reasonable doubt a pattern of interlocking memberships, directorships and associations in chartered clubs by professional gamblers. I have already cited several names, names which have already appeared in the press. I shall have occasion to cite a few more because their disclosure will be necessary. But I am not going to disclose all the names because I do not believe they should be disclosed unnecessarily. Suffice it to say I have compiled over 30 names of persons who are part of the pattern I have described.

In every case the organization involved has been convicted or suspected by the police of illegal gambling and I would point out to the House that it is well established that these persons are frequently just the fronts for the big-time gamblers. Max Bluestein, for example, was convicted of keeping at the Lakeview club in Toronto but his name appears nowhere in the Provincial Secretary's file on that club. The examination and comparison of the Provincial Secretary's public records also shows beyond any reasonable doubt that there has been and is a heavy trafficking in the charters of so-called clubs and that professional gamblers have received valuable legal assistance from certain legal firms.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it proper to cite all the things involved because I realize a lawyer can easily be fooled in a matter of this sort. However, I shall cite two notorious examples, and again I remind the House that every club I shall name has been closed down or is suspected by the police of illegal gambling.

Sol Gebirtig, a Toronto lawyer, has acted for the Lakeview club, the Garment Centre recreation club, the Jordan club, the Bellevue club, the Colonial club, he was the sole defence witness in the 1957 trial of the notorious Finnish club of New Toronto, and his testimony at that trial can only be described as fantastic. The same man was a member of the Jordan club and has been identified in evidence in court as a close companion of Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott.

The Toronto law firm of Herman, Moses & Rose has acted for the Union Jack club, the West End club, the Columbia club, the Greek Canadian club, the Showmen's League of America, the Frontier Veterans Association of Fort Erie, the Roseland club in Windsor, and the Centre Road veterans club of Cooksville. There is good reason to believe, Mr.

Speaker, that Walton C. Rose, a member of this firm, represented himself to provincial police officers at Windsor as a shirt salesman in an effort to discover what evidence they had against the Roseland club.

In view of this traffic in social club charters, and in view of the organizational pattern I have described with respect to these clubs, I now propose, Mr. Speaker, to examine in some detail how this charter system works and how it has been used by criminals to exploit the laws of Ontario and circumvent the laws in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to deal now with the gaming clubs in Ontario masquerading under the guise of social clubs incorporated under the laws of Ontario. In dealing with chartered social clubs that have become gaming clubs I will discuss the following topics: (1) What is the difference between gambling and gaming? (2) What is the law relating to chartered social clubs? (3) What is the advantage for professional gamblers to operate behind the guise of a chartered social club? (4) What is the policy of the Conservative government towards chartered social clubs suspected of being gaming houses? (5) How have the Attorney-General's department and the Provincial Secretary's department enforced the laws and carried out government policy with respect to chartered social clubs and illegal gambling?

Let me deal with the first question: What is the difference between gambling and gaming? Gambling of itself is not illegal in Canada but professional gambling is illegal. Professional gambling, Mr. Speaker, is gaming. The professional gambler is a man who operates a gaming house or a gambling game for his own profit.

The Criminal Code, section 176, provides that everyone who keeps a common gaming or betting house is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years imprisonment. Persons found in such houses are guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. Under the Criminal Code bookmaking is an indictable offence liable to two years imprisonment. A common gaming house is defined as a place that is kept for gain to which persons resort for the purpose of playing games.

What is the law relating to chartered social clubs? The power to incorporate a social club is held by The Corporations Act to be discretionary with the Lieutenant-Governor who may issue a charter by letters patent to not less than three persons constituting them a corporation. The power to incorporate may be exercised by the Provincial Secretary. In order to qualify for incorporation it is specifically provided that the corporation may have objects that are of a patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, educational, agricultural, scientific, artistic, social, professional, fraternal, sporting or athletic nature, or that are of any other useful purpose. But a corporation with such objects shall not be carried on for the purpose of profit or gain.

The Criminal Code provides, however, that in the case of an incorporated bona fide social club or a branch thereof such club or branch shall not be deemed to be a gaming house if no fee in excess of ten cents an hour or 50 cents a day is charged to the players. The law provides that the onus of proving an incorporated social club is bona fide is on the club. It is this exception which makes a social club charter so valuable to professional gamblers. It permits gamblers to occupy a premises that can be frequented openly and daily by a large number of people. It permits gamblers in the guise of a club to have gambling equipment such as playing cards, dice, poker chips and other paraphernalia on the premises. It permits installation of a teletype system that provides sporting information on which gambling can take place.

Mr. Speaker, professional gamblers regard a social club charter as a certain road to fortune. It provides the front for their illegal operations. A gaming house with a club charter can delay entry by posting look-outs, by having doors with knobs or handles, by having a steward beside the door who only opens to persons he knows. Gaming houses with charters excuse these wilful obstructions on the ground that as a club they have a restricted membership and have to take precautions against intruders. As it takes as little as one minute to clear evidence of gaming even a slight delay frustrates police in their efforts to secure evidence.

Mr. Speaker, the existence of a social club charter provides protection for the keepers of gaming houses and for those who are found-in on police raids, because it is very difficult for police to obtain conclusive proof of the operation of gaming when all the paraphernalia can be removed or concealed in less than one minute or explained away as legitimate recreational equipment.

Because the power to incorporate resides in the Crown the power to cancel a charter also rests in the Crown. The power of cancellation, however, has certain limits. A charter can be cancelled if sufficient cause is shown. The only statutory provision concerning cancellation is set out in The Corporations Information Act which permits cancellation if the corporation has defaulted for three years in filing its annual returns. The Ontario Court of Appeal, however, in the case of Border Cities press club v. the Attorney-General of Ontario, affirmed that the Provincial Secretary may decide what constitutes sufficient cause, provided the persons affected are first given notice and the opportunity to appear before the Provincial Secretary and show why an order for cancellation should not be made.

The significance of this ruling, Mr. Speaker, is that the Provincial Secretary can initiate an action for cancellation of a social charter. The Crown, in addition to the powers to create a corporation by letters patent, has the power to make regulations governing the manner in which the corporation shall carry out its objects. Such regulations have been drawn up governing the operation of chartered social clubs. They provide that the letters patent of a social club, other than a service club, shall limit the location of the club's activities, clubhouse or premises. Since 1960 this restriction has been set out in law. This section forbids a social club to change the location of any of its premises without the written permission of the Provincial Secretary.

The regulations also provide that the letters patent of all social clubs must contain two clauses, the first stating that the exemption for legal rake-off provided by the Criminal Code will not prevent cancellation of a club charter if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Provincial Secretary that the club is being used as a common gaming house. The second clause provides that the Provincial Secretary may cancel the letters patent if it is shown to his satisfaction that the club's premises are guarded, equipped or otherwise constructed or operated so as to hinder lawful access and inspection by police or fire officers, or are found to have any means for betting or gaming or any device for concealing or destroying such means. Another regulation requires that veterans must constitute at least 95 per cent of the membership of any veterans' club. The Corporations Information Act of Ontario provides that every Ontario corporation and every corporation carrying on business in Ontario shall file with the Provincial Secretary by June 1 of each year an annual return setting out its name, directors and officers as of the preceding March 31. Fines are provided for failure to comply.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the policy of the Conservative government towards chartered social clubs suspected of being gaming houses? The answer to that question is contained in a statement made by the hon. Attorney-General in this Legislature on February 23, 1959, and I quote certain portions of that passage:

The policy as established, and still in effect, is to limit the location of the activities to the particular street address named in the letters patent. The letters patent themselves carry special clauses.

The first provision was to take away the overhead right to the point that the Provincial Secretary could recommend the cancellation and the Lieutenant-Governor in council actually cancel, in his discretion, such a charter even if they were not charging any more than what was permitted by the Criminal Code for overhead.

The second point was that, if the premises were equipped or guarded or otherwise constructed to hinder or prevent lawful access and ready inspection, or if found to be fitted with any means or contrivance for playing any game of chance, then the letters patent could be cancelled in the same discretion.

This, in the words of the hon. Attorney-General, is the interpretation of the statutes and regulations I have just quoted. And then he goes on:

When an application is received it is the practice of the Provincial Secretary's department and has been ever since 1949 to refer the matter to the local police and also in all cases to the Ontario Provincial Police, and in some cases to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police before granting incorporation. The practice is not to grant a charter if the police have legitimate objections. Also, precautions are taken to make sure that the applicants for an incorporation must continue to be the members, in other words, genuine members of the organization must be the applicants and they must remain in office. In this way, a check on the membership is made easier.

I am informed that since this policy was adopted conditions have greatly improved, and it is only on very rare occasions that—at the insistence of the police or otherwise—this type of charge requires action although such a step as cancellation has taken place on occasion. . . .

By and large, the procedures used by the Provincial Secretary's department in these social club activities proved very satisfactory, and wherever there is misuse I feel certain that I can give the assurance, both on behalf of my own department and on behalf of the hon. Provincial Secretary that the police can count on co-operation and every effort will be made to stamp out offences.

Mr. Speaker, that in summary is the policy of the government. Now how have the department of the hon. Attorney-General and the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary enforced the laws and carried out government policy with respect to chartered social clubs and illegal gambling? An examination of the records will demonstrate there have been flagrant violations of all points of the law in all aspects of policy, not just once, but on frequent occasions. The hon. Attorney-General's statement of policy declared that it is the practice of the hon. Provincial Secretary's department and has been since 1949 to refer all applications for social club charters to local police and to the Ontario Provincial Police. Mr. Speaker, all social club charters were not investigated by the police. The following were not investigated:

1. Chipper Sales and Advertising Club, 1 Howard Park Avenue.
2. Showmen's League of America, 1 Howard Park Avenue.
3. The Portuguese-Canadian Association of Toronto, 274 College Street, Toronto.
4. The Centre Road Veterans Association, sometimes called the Vets club, Toronto Township. I shall have more to say about this later.
5. The Roseland Veterans Association, Windsor.
6. The Frontier Veterans Association, Fort Erie.

I am sure that those last three clubs are no strangers to the hon. Attorney-General. Perhaps he will recall that on July 19, 1957, he issued a press release in which he complained that the then federal Minister of Justice had declined to restrict the federal charters to these clubs in the same way that provincial charters were restricted by the policy I have just outlined.

In that press release the hon. Attorney-General did not explain that the Minister of Justice had very little power to restrict the clubs, since they were but branches of the army, navy and air force veterans associations of Canada, an organization created many years ago by a private bill passed by Parliament. Nor did the hon. Attorney-General mention in that press release that the Dominion command of the army, navy and airforce veterans association was about to take some action after many representations from the police.

What the hon. Attorney-General did say, however, was that despite the Minister of Justice, the leaders of the three clubs were willing to submit themselves to provincial jurisdiction with all the limitations that involved, just to show they were bona fide social clubs. Let us look therefore at these three clubs, Mr. Speaker.

The records of the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary do indeed show that they were all incorporated on July 5, 1957, 14 days before the hon. Attorney-General's press release. They all had, as I have said, the said solicitors, Herman, Moses and Rose. They all escaped, as I have said, prior police referral. Another fact which the hon. Attorney-General forgot to mention in his press release.

The Roseland club at Windsor lost its provincial charter on March 8, 1958 as a result of a court conviction two months before of two men, Curly Gardner and Leo Finnigan, on charges of keeping a common gaming house. Well, the hon. Attorney-General may say we finally got them. Mr. Speaker, that conviction was obtained despite the hon. Attorney-General, not because of him.

The Roseland club had been raided and raided again and again by the police. And because of its charter club set-up and for the reasons I shall explain later on, no evidence to support the laying of charges could be found. That was why I suggest Mr. Walton C. Rose was so anxious to know the evidence the police had when the charges were laid.

The police evidence, Mr. Speaker, was dramatically revealed in court by the appearance of one Raymond Atwood of Detroit as a Crown witness. Mr. Atwood's brother Earl had been found murdered in Michigan a few weeks before after winning a very large amount of money at the Roseland club. Earl Atwood was reported to be carrying $40,000 when slain. Raymond Atwood was prepared to testify about the Roseland club's operations, but he never got the chance. The moment he appeared defence counsel asked for a recess and when the court resumed the accused changed their pleas from not guilty to guilty.

John "Curly" Gardner, Mr. Speaker, was sentenced to one year in jail. On April 23, 1958, he was released on ticket-of-leave, having served some four months of his twelve-month sentence. Parole was granted on the prerogative of mercy after Lewis Herman, of Herman, Moses and Rose wrote The Department of Reform Institutions that Gardner was seriously ill. A medical examination also reported that he had diabetes and a heart condition and further imprisonment would endanger his life. Mr. Gardner is still very much alive, Mr. Speaker, and he is running a small bookmaking operation.

The Frontier Veterans Association at Fort Erie was incorporated, according to records in the hon. Provincial Secretary's department, by Henry Damore and Frank Muscato of Niagara Falls, and Allen Sydney Ross of Welland. The letters patent stipulated the location of the club to be Concession 3, Bertie Township, Welland county, and nowhere else. However, both in 1959 and 1960 the annual returns for the club showed its location to be Rural Route No. 2, Garrison Road, Fort Erie. These are two different addresses and there is no record that the letters patent were amended or that the hon. Provincial Secretary consented to the change of address as required by law.

The charter is still in good standing despite this fact, and despite the fact that in 1958 Bertie Township formed its own police force and the club was raided so often that business fell away and the operators were obliged to close down.

Now let us examine the Ramsey club in Niagara Falls. The House will recall I have said that Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott obtained interests in the Ramsey club in the latter part of 1959. The Ramsey club has a federal charter and its annual returns show two names appearing as club directors in 1960 for the first time. Those names are Henry Damore and Frank Muscato, two of the directors of the closed-down Frontier club. There has also been evidence in court that the steward of the Ramsey club after Feeley and McDermott moved in was Syd Ross, apparently the same man who was the third director of the Frontier club. It may also interest the House to know that the Ramsey club's federal charter has not been cancelled.

The records of the hon. Provincial Secretary's department show that the directors of the Centre Road Veterans Association in 1958 and 1959 were William Laffrade, John Pleschuk and Angelo Laffradi. There has been evidence in court that Pleschuk and Laffradi were officers in the Finnish social club at Timmins. I will not go into the history of the Finnish club, Mr. Speaker, except to say that it has two locations in New Toronto—one of them being the address at the time of Vincent Feeley—and that it gave the police a great deal of trouble for several years before a conviction of illegal gambling was obtained in 1960.

Despite this record of Pleschuk and Lafradi, and despite the fact that Lincoln Turner, one of the incorporators of the Centre Road club was in 1957 the secretary-treasurer of the notorious Jordan club in downtown Toronto, it was not until February of 1960 that the hon. Provincial Secretary agreed to hold hearings on police representations that the Centre Road club was a gaming house. And it was not until June 24, 1960, that Robert J. Wright was arrested and the Centre Road club was dissolved.

These, then, Mr. Speaker, were the three social clubs for whom the hon. Attorney-General set aside the policy of police investigation when the government granted charters in 1957. The hon. Attorney-General in his policy statement also said it is not the practice of the hon. Provincial Secretary to grant a charter if the police have legitimate objection.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to read to this House the names of several social clubs which were granted charters and letters patent or supplementary letters patent despite the fact that there was an adverse police report on the clubs following police investigation. The clubs which the police investigated and reported upon adversely were:

(1) The Bathurst-Sheppard social and athletic club, North York. The police reported adversely on this applicant on September 30, 1959. The club was incorporated on November 20, 1959. This club is suspected by the Metro police as a gaming house.

(2) The Chinese Business Men's Cultural Society, Toronto. The Metro police reported adversely on this applicant in May of 1959. Letters patent were issued on July 8, 1959. A second adverse police report on this club was made on September 15, 1959. Dr. H. W. Lore, one of the incorporators, ran or helped to run the Chee Kung Tong club which was dissolved November 22, 1958, because of a conviction.

(3) The Apter Friendly Society, Toronto. The Metro police reported adversely on this club on January 17, 1960, and a charter was granted on March 28, 1960.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General in his statement said it was the policy of the government as well as a requirement of law to limit the location of the activities of a social club to a particular street address named in the letters patent. A change of address was to take place only after written permission for the change had been secured from the hon. Provincial Secretary. I want to cite several instances in which this policy was not pursued and in which the law was contravened.

The Chipper Sales and Advertising club was restricted by its letters patent to No. 1 Howard Park Avenue which is the address of Price's Vita-Crisp Potato Chips and Mixed Nuts. Joseph R. Price, 301 Park Lawn Road, the leading officer of the club, wrote the hon. Provincial Secretary on January 11, 1961, that the club was not active. At that time the club appeared on the Metro police suspect list as a gaming club. Mr. Price's name can be found in the membership list of the Centre Road Veterans club, the Feeley and McDermott operation in Toronto Township. Mr. Price's business stationery which is in the public file on this club lists the telephone number as Lakeside 5711, an exchange listing that was discontinued several years ago.

The Showmen's League of America, incorporated on August 6, 1959, by Toronto barrister Louis Herman, without a prior police investigation, also gives 1 Howard Park Avenue as its address. The club's address in the 1960 return is not shown as 1 Howard Park Avenue, but as 1 Wellington Street West, an address which appears in the Toronto city directory as the Royal Canadian Yacht club. There is no record in the file of permission from the hon. Provincial Secretary to change the address. The telephone directory continues to list the Showmen's League as 1 Howard Park Avenue and this club is also suspected by the Metropolitan Toronto police as a gaming house.

The Frontier club, Niagara Falls, was restricted by its charter at 1292 Ferry Street, Niagara Falls. In recent returns its address is given as 1528 Louis Avenue. No consent for a change of address appears to have been obtained from the hon. Provincial Secretary.

The New Canadian Social club, Toronto, obtained letters patent on June 15, 1955, and its premises were stated to be 360 to 362 Queen Street East. However, the first return gave the address as 52 Wyatt Avenue. In 1956 the address of the club was changed to 364 Queen Street East, with no evidence to suggest the change was approved by the hon. Provincial Secretary. A further change of address was given as 372 Queen Street East in the club's 1960 return. The hon. Provincial Secretary's department advised the club that a change of address could not be approved without the hon. Provincial Secretary's consent and the club requested supplementary letters patent. The police filed a report disapproving of the club. Before the hon. Provincial Secretary could act the police closed the club down with a raid on December 28, 1960.

The Somerset club moved to 4140 Bathurst Street, North York, in 1959. There is no record that the hon. Provincial Secretary approved of the move although the department was aware of it as is shown by a letter advising the club that such a move had to be approved by a vote of the membership because the new location was outside the limits of the city of Toronto. On June 30, 1960, the provincial police submitted an adverse report concerning the issuance of supplementary letters patent. The club is also suspected by the Metro police as a common gaming or betting house.

Despite these three objections no steps were apparently taken by the hon. Provincial Secretary to enforce the prohibition against the club's change of address without permission.

The Spadina card and social club is another case at point. It was incorporated on April 24, 1947. On August 5, 1957, it applied for supplementary letters patent to move its location from 163½ Spadina to 560 King Street West. In September, 1957, the Ontario Provincial Police reported adversely on the proposed change. On November 8, 1957, the club's solicitors wrote to the hon. Provincial Secretary complaining that the police investigation was taking too long. The club asked for consent to make the change without a police clearance. On December 2, 1957, the hon. Provincial Secretary wrote that the application for change had been refused.

On December 19, 1957, however, the supplementary letters patent were granted by the hon. Provincial Secretary. No reason for the change in policy can be found in the file. The club was convicted of being a common gaming house in 1960 and then the charter was cancelled.

The Sun Sun social club, Toronto, wished to move from 92 Elizabeth Street to 121 Dundas West. On March 27, 1961, the Ontario Provincial Police reported adversely on the granting of supplementary letters patent. The club apparently had the new address when the application was made, it still has 121 Dundas Street West, and it is suspected by the Metro police to be a common gaming house.

A recent case is that of the 25 Club, Port Credit, which applied for a charter on September 20, 1960. The application was submitted to the Port Credit Police, the Ontario Provincial Police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. On November 17, 1960, the Ontario Provincial Police submitted an adverse report. On January 31, 1961, a solicitor in the hon. Provincial Secretary's office wrote the club's solicitor that his only objection appeared to be that the location, which was in fact the home of one of the applicants, violated a Port Credit zoning by-law. It was suggested that this objection might be overcome if the club did not maintain a clubhouse.

Apparently the Ontario Provincial Police report was ignored as letters patent were issued on March 28, 1961, with no mention of an address for a clubhouse and stipulating that the head office had only to be in Toronto Township.

Mr. Speaker, I could cite other violations of the declared policy of the government and of the law as it relates to social clubs, but from the ones I have cited several conclusions are obvious.

Firstly, police have demonstrated they know of 55 chartered clubs in Metro which have been convicted or suspected of gaming within recent dates. I do not suggest this is an all-inclusive figure, but by itself it indicates that widespread gaming is a fact in Metropolitan Toronto.

Secondly, that despite the declared policy of the government and the requirements of the law, these clubs have been able to operate with relative impunity for long periods of time.

Thirdly, the action of the hon. Provincial Secretary's Department in granting charters to clubs in the face of police objection and the subsequent convictions of many clubs for gaming, leads one to conclude that the granting of charters was in fact a temporary licence to game. The failure of the hon. Attorney-General's Department to act against these clubs in the face of adverse police reports, indicates at least a complete lack of liaison between the hon. Attorney-General and the hon. Provincial Secretary. At worst, it could be said that negligence of the two departments permitted the operation of gaming houses.

Mr. Speaker, there are three other aspects of the problem presented with the social club charters that I would like to raise, and they are these:

1. The problem created by the failure of the government to make retroactive its regulations governing the change of address of a social club.

2. The interlocking nature of gaming clubs as revealed by a study of the solicitors employed to charter the clubs and to defend known gamblers.

3. The interlocking nature of gambling clubs as revealed by the presence of certain individuals, many of them convicted gamblers or convicted found-ins of gaming houses as officers, directors or members of many different social clubs.

Mr. Speaker, the first point deals with the government policy towards social club charters issued before 1949. The hon. Attorney-General's policy declaration outlines the government's policy from 1949 onward. The conditions relating to permission to change the address of a club and so forth, apparently were not to be applied to charters granted before 1949. I ask why these charters were not subjected to the same conditions and subject to the same regulations?

Failure to make the regulations retroactive, Mr. Speaker, suddenly gave a great potential value to many long dormant charters. As one charter was put out of business the operator of the gaming clubs simply activated an old charter and continued in business, very often on the very same site.

There is the case of 1289 Bloor Street West. In 1959 this was the Toronto branch of the Montcalm amateur athletic association, an Ottawa club that was closed up when the Ottawa headquarters was convicted of gaming. After cancellation of the Montcalm charter the Greek Canadian social club, which was organized in Ottawa in 1915 opened at the same address.

The public file makes it clear that this club had been dormant for many years and its records lost. The Toronto law firm of Herman, Moses and Rose and McReath and Lamar sought to produce substitute records, but the charter was cancelled on January 30, 1960, as a result of police representations.

Let us now look at 111½ King Street West. Until early 1959 this was the location of the Dorchester club of Picton which was incorporated in 1947. The charter was dissolved on May 14, 1959, as the result of a court conviction. The premises are currently occupied by the Community social club which was incorporated in 1934 and which is a suspected gaming house. The police know it to be at this address, but the hon. Provincial Secretary's records give the location of the Community social club as 1335 Dundas Street West.

Let us look at 1601 Dundas Street West. This address was the home of a Union Jack social club which was dissolved on September 25, 1959, as a result of a court conviction. The same address was then used by the Nottawa community club until its charter was cancelled on March 28, 1960, as the result of police representations.

Lest the authorities take satisfaction from this, let me point out that the Nottawa club was incorporated originally in 1919, and the hon. Provincial Secretary's records will reveal a letter from the widow of one of the original directors stating that the club had been out of existence for 30 years. No returns for the club had been filed with the hon. Provincial Secretary from 1927 to 1958. A letter from the hon. Provincial Secretary's office written in 1958 to the last directors on record asked for returns for the period 1927 to 1958 prior to cancellation of the charter. Following this letter a Toronto law firm revived the charter and a new set of directors was appointed and the club was moved from Nottawa to Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, I could cite much more evidence of trafficking in social club charters; long dormant charters being suddenly revived, movement of club locations from one part of Ontario to another, failure to file returns with the hon. Provincial Secretary and operation of a succession of dubious and suspicious charters at the same addresses at which clubs had been closed because of court convictions.

This evidence raises two questions: why have the landlords of these illegal gambling clubs not been prosecuted under the available sections of the Criminal Code and why have not provincial government departments concerned not maintained their records so that chartered clubs can be policed with respect to application, transfers, charges, changes in control and so on?

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the provincial government departments involved in granting social club charters and enforcing the legal prohibitions against gaming ever compiled such a list and employed it when considering new applications for charters, transfers of old charters or in taking the initiative to cancel suspected clubs? The least that can be said for their failure to take reasonable and normal precautions against the long-term perpetuation of gaming houses in the guise of social clubs is that the departments concerned and their hon. Ministers were grossly negligent in their duties and utterly careless of their responsibilities.

Applause.

An hon. member: Grossly negligent. We need a new Provincial Secretary as well as an Attorney-General.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I think it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that a full scale, wide-ranging Royal commission is required to investigate the true nature and extent of the gaming and gambling being conducted under the guise of social clubs. I think it is necessary for such Royal commission to investigate and report upon the negligence and carelessness of the hon. Attorney-General's department and the hon. Provincial Secretary's department and to ascertain the reasons why these departments have failed to enforce the law with respect to the issuance of social club charters.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to my third question. What evidence is there that professional gambling has had and still has protection from the police and law enforcement agencies? Here again there is considerable evidence on the public record available to anyone who wishes to ferret it out. There has been evidence in court that Kenneth Lamorie and Carmen Lawrence, two members of the anti-gambling squad of the Ontario Provincial Police who were suspended and resigned in June of 1960, were warning gamblers in St. Catharines, Fort Erie, Thorold, Niagara Falls, Toronto, Cooksville—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is now quoting from evidence in connection with a case which is in front of the courts at the present time and—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I know of no decision that you will ever make—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I ask you to rule that he be careful about what he says about those people.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am prepared, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I am presuming that the learned hon. member, being a learned hon. member of the House, knows full well what he is speaking about and will assume full responsibility for every word he says—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Should the hon. member make a mistake he will be judged, as has been mentioned in this House before, by the court of public opinion.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will accept your direction. I will be responsible for everything that I have said and that I say from here on, and I vacate any privilege I have as a member of this House.

There has been evidence in court that Kenneth Lamorie and Carmen Lawrence, two members of the anti-gambling squad of the Ontario Provincial Police were suspended and resigned in June of 1960 for warning gamblers in St. Catharines, Fort Erie, Thorold, Niagara Falls, Toronto and Cooksville of impending raids by the police, and for this they received $500 a month.

There has been evidence that in respect of the Niagara Falls operation the information was sold to one Sammie Balsam, a notorious bookmaker in that area, who, in turn, sold it to bookmakers as protection against being raided. There has been evidence that Kenneth Lawrence, while he was on the force, was operating a gaming house in Toronto called the Alpine hunting and fishing club.

There has been evidence that Robert J. Wright, a former member of the anti-gambling squad was protecting a gambling club in Windsor while he was a police officer and for this he received $1,000 per month.

There has been evidence that Wright until his arrest on May 28, 1960, was in league with Joseph McDermott and Vincent Feeley and supplied them with tip-off information over a long period of time.

There has been evidence that Joseph McDermott, when warned on May 5, 1960, of an impending police raid on the Ramsey club in Niagara Falls, replied that he already knew about it and that he had been told by James Bartlett the Deputy Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. There has been evidence that Deputy Commissioner Bartlett received $2,000 from Joseph McDermott for informing him of the signing of search warrants before clubs were raided. There has been evidence that Inspector Allan Stringer, in charge of the Peterborough District of the Ontario Provincial Police telephoned McDermott and others to warn that the anti-gambling branch had planted an undercover man in gambling operations in Hamilton and that raids were about to take place.

There has been evidence that the anti-gambling branch received from Inspector Stringer an unsigned, undated brief on how to convict the old Ramsey club in Niagara Falls and that this brief was actually prepared by Robert Wright and David Humphrey, the Toronto lawyer to whom I have already referred. There has been evidence that prior to the receipt of this brief Vincent Feeley gave the same information orally in several telephone calls to W. J. Shrubbs, then a member of the anti-gambling squad and now deputy chief of police at Peterborough. There has been evidence that Mr. Shrubbs became deputy chief at Peterborough because the gamblers wanted him out of the anti-gambling squad, and accomplished this by bribing some members of the selection committee which chose Mr. Shrubbs for the job.

There has been evidence that one J. F. Cronin, a former sergeant in the anti-gambling squad, supplied protection to Feeley and McDermott for some ten or 12 years, that he had the heart of a lion in his devotion to their interests and that by the time he was caught and discharged he had made $100,000. There has been evidence that Don Scott, the assistant Crown attorney at Niagara Falls, was a pal of Feeley and McDermott, and that they hoped to get him appointed Crown attorney instead of the present incumbent, who from their point of view was much harder to get along with.

There has been evidence that Don Scott and an unidentified member of Parliament in the Niagara peninsula received some money to take the pressure off the club in Niagara Falls and the Niagara Falls area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said there has been evidence given in court on all these matters I have listed. The hon. Attorney-General and others may say it is hearsay evidence. I agree with him, and I will deal with that point in a moment. Before I do, however, I wish to give the House some information which has not been given in court.

As most hon. members may know, most of the matters I have just enumerated result from an undercover investigation by Constable George Scott of the anti-gambling squad of the Ontario Provincial Police, who was instructed by his superiors to accept a proposition from Robert J. Wright that he supply warnings about raids and other information on the activities of the anti-gambling squad to certain gamblers, who were later identified as Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott.

Constable Scott, as is customary, kept an official diary of that undercover investigation and also supplied progress reports, directly to Assistant Commissioner Kennedy and Commissioner W. H. Clark who we may assume kept the hon. Attorney-General informed. Constable Scott's diary was not submitted in evidence at the trial of Wright, Feeley and McDermott, but because it formed the basis of the Crown's case, copies were supplied to the three defense counsel. Mr. Speaker, most of the entries in the diary came out in court, but some did not. I shall read the relevant items which were left out, omitting the names of the individuals concerned.

An entry on February 29, 1960, reported that Wright told Scott and I quote:

"Said the fix was in at Queen's Park, re cancellation of the Vets Club charter."

An entry concerning a phone call on May 14, 1960, reported that McDermott told Scott:

"May have inspector bribed at St. Kitts," and "Intimated—(and here the name of a senior official of the department of the hon. Attorney-General)—on payroll. Said to ask—(and again the name of the official)—something and I'll tell you what he has said the next day."

The entry for this date further reported when McDermott "Talked about the branch being stopped from using hammers at Cooksville and being told to time the door." Another entry dated May 16, 1960, said:

"Bartlett received money from McDermott for telling when warrants were signed. Received $2,000 once at a party with—

And then a member of a previous government is named.

An entry concerning a meeting of Scott, Wright and Lawrence on May 17, 1961 reported that Lawrence said senior official of the hon. Attorney-General's department was receiving $800 a month from the gamblers.

Mr. Speaker, why were these entries in Constable Scott's diary not introduced in evidence? No doubt the hon. Attorney-General may say it was all hearsay evidence, but not the sort of thing to be read in court without the support of other evidence. Why then, Mr. Speaker, were many of the matters which I have given to this House read into evidence? Most of them, the references to Lawrence, to Lamorie, to Cronin, to Bartlett, and so on, were on the same legal footing as the references which were not disclosed. The references to Stringer and to Wright were substantiated by other evidence but the remainder were not. Why then were some put in and others not?

I suggest the answer is very clear. Constable Scott's investigation lasted nearly four months, from February to May of 1960, his purpose was to ingratiate himself with the gamblers, gain their confidence and to eventually deal with them on a face-to-face basis, so that incontrovertible evidence could be secured. The provincial police no doubt set great store by this investigation. Here were big-time gamblers who had evaded conviction for years; finally the police had succeeded in planting an undercover agent in their midst.

The information Constable Scott gathered during those four months was undoubtedly valuable but obviously the police felt he had by no means exhausted all the possibilities especially the possibility of face-to-face contact with the gamblers. Mr. Speaker, there has been absolutely no suggestion that Constable Scott's true purpose was discovered by the gamblers. That being the case, and recognizing that the police themselves would want the investigation to continue, what conclusion is possible but that it was stopped on the orders of the hon. Attorney-General? The reference to the member of the previous government—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would just like to say that that is an absolute and completely false conclusion.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I have taken great precautions, I am much concerned about this matter. I will give the hon. Attorney-General every opportunity. All I ask is that he give the public of the province the opportunity of an impartial investigation.

Mr. Reaume: And that is exactly what he does not want.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now these entries, Mr. Speaker, were recorded on May 14, May 16 and May 17, 1960. Robert Wright was arrested on May 27, 1960, a short two weeks later. Some time between those dates the investigation was terminated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to present some additional information touching on this whole matter.

I have mentioned the name of J. F. Cronin, the lion-hearted helpmate of the gamblers while he was in charge of the anti-gambling squad of the Ontario Provincial Police. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of record that this man is in some way involved with Vincent Feeley and probably with Joseph McDermott in a drug business. There has been evidence in court that the two gamblers were interested in a drug firm. I am informed the product involved is called Dewsbury's ointment and it has been registered as a patent medicine with the federal Department of Health since 1936. I have not found any drug store or druggist who knows anything about Dewsbury's ointment or its ingredients nor are its ingredients a matter of public information because the federal requirements governing publication have been waived at the request of the licensee on the ground that it is a secret preparation. The records of the federal Department of Health show the head of the firm to be Vincent Feeley and the address of the manufacturer to be 1508 Kenneth Drive, Port Credit. Mr. Speaker, that address is the residence of J. F. Cronin and is only a stone's throw away from the Rometown Drive home of Joseph McDermott.

Perhaps the hon. Attorney-General would be good enough to tell the House, Mr. Speaker, what the gamblers and their friend Mr. Cronin were doing with a licence to manufacture a drug preparation which cannot be found in the marketplace. Or is this another matter which could not be pursued because of the untimely termination of Constable Scott's investigation?

I have had occasion to mention W. J. Shrubbs, new deputy chief at Peterborough. The gamblers wanted Mr. Shrubbs off the anti-gambling squad and the Ontario Provincial Police because they could not buy him. In May of 1955 Mr. Shrubbs had a conversation with J. F. Cronin, in which Cronin admitted he had a share in the Cooksville veterans club. Cronin also told Shrubbs the gamblers would be opening other clubs which could mean a lot of money to Mr. Shrubbs if he fell in with them. Cronin also hinted to Shrubbs that he knew an inspector of the O.P.P. at Peterborough who would endorse this proposition.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Shrubbs sent a confidential report on this conversation to the then Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. He was to find out later during conversations with Vincent Feeley that the gamblers knew of this report and its contents. Some time after his talk with Cronin, Mr. Shrubbs was approached out of channels by Inspector Allan Stringer of the Peterborough District of the O.P.P. with an offer of a sergeant's post in his district, a job which would have meant a promotion and a salary increase. I am informed that Inspector Stringer made similar offers to members of the anti-gambling squad who had spurned bribes by the gamblers.

After Mr. Shrubbs turned this proposition down he was telephoned on a number of occasions by Vincent Feeley who insisted on seeing him on a matter of legitimate business. It turned out that Feeley's proposal was that he and Shrubb go into the service station business because Feeley had been reliably informed that four service stations were to be erected on Highway 400 and that through his political friends he was assured of one of these locations.

Deputy Chief Shrubb was a witness at the trial of Feeley, McDermott and Wright. He testified as to phone calls he received from Feeley in May of 1958 in which Feeley gave him detailed advice on how to close up the old Ramsey club in Niagara Falls. The House will recall that it was in August of 1958 that the anti-gambling squad received an undated, unsigned brief to the same effect.

I do not intend to recount what Mr. Shrubb said in evidence, Mr. Speaker. I intend to tell you what he did not say and what I suggest he was not permitted to say.

During one of those telephone calls from Feeley a break in the connection occurred and Mr. Shrubb on receiving the operator was able to determine the number from which Feeley had been calling. It was a Port Credit number and it turned out to be listed to another name, but Mr. Shrubb was able to execute search on telephone company records and determine what long distance calls had been made from the number. He found in May and June of 1958 that calls were made from the Port Credit number, CR. 8-2538, to the following numbers:

Peterborough, RI. 5-6310, with the toll slip noting the name Stringer; Niagara Falls, Ontario, EL. 4-5071, with the notation Jolli; Niagara Falls, Ontario, EL. 4-4874, with the notation Berelli, the representative of Feeley and McDermott in the Niagara Falls area; Windsor, CL. 2-8645, with the notation Gardner, who is Curly Gardner, manager of the Roseland club; Scarborough, PL. 9-3007, R. J. Wright, 117 Gooderham. Calls to the home telephone number of a senior official of the Ontario Attorney-General's department, whose name was also noted.

I should point out to the House that the official referred to here is not the same as the official referred to previously.

A call to the home telephone number together with the name of the member of this government to which I have already referred. Ridgeway 5-11J12, Fred House, the then Reeve of Bertie township, site of the Frontier club. Fort Erie 5-57, Lloyd Williams, Fort Erie councillor. Fort Erie 9-84, Michael's Restaurant, 179 Garrison Road, and the business phone of Mike Tartaglia, then the Reeve of Fort Erie.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Shrubb could have testified as to these phone calls at the trial of Feeley, McDermott and Wright, and he could have produced photostatic copies of the telephone toll slips to show that the phone calls took place. Such evidence would have gone a long way, I suggest, in proving the conspiracy in which Feeley, McDermott and Wright were charged.

But that was not all that Mr. Shrubb could have said. He could have testified in much greater detail concerning Feeley's advice on how the police could close up the old Ramsey club. He could have testified that Feeley told him such a police effort would not backfire like the time the police took everybody to Brampton; that Feeley said he could promise from the hon. Attorney-General's office that he would not roar down on the police; that Feeley said he could guarantee the hon. Attorney-General's office would not take a dim view of the plan.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the meaning of these curious statements? The meaning is clear once certain facts are understood.

The House will recall that Feeley and McDermott wanted to set up operations in Niagara Falls, because after Bertie township took over its own policing in January of 1958 they were subjected to constant police harassment of their Frontier club near Fort Erie. However, the old Ramsey club was getting all the action at Niagara Falls. Feeley and McDermott therefore decided they would have to take over the Ramsey club and they determined they could do this by first setting the police to close up the club.

This would demonstrate to the American owners involved that their Canadian colleagues in the old Ramsey club at that time did not have the police protection and influence that they claimed to have; that Feeley and McDermott were the people to deal with; and having demonstrated that, Feeley and McDermott would be in a position to make a deal with the Americans and re-open the club under joint auspices.

Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what happened. The police were supplied with detailed information on how the old Ramsey club operated and how it could be convicted. The club was raided and closed up, although after a most undue delay the magistrate dismissed the charges. The key fact, however, is that when the Ramsey club re-opened at the new premises Feeley and McDermott were the Canadian associates of the American owners.

The information supplied to the police both in the form of Feeley's telephone conversations with Mr. Shrubb and later in the form of a brief from Inspector Stringer dealt in some detail with Section 174 of the Criminal Code. Under this section persons found in a suspected gaming or betting premises may be brought before a justice of the peace for an examination under oath and in camera. The gamblers were obviously most anxious that this section should be invoked by the police in raiding the old Ramsey club.

It is clear, however, that they regarded this section of the Criminal Code as a deadly weapon in the hands of the police when used against their own gambling clubs. Constable Scott, the undercover agent, testified that in the telephone conversation with Joseph McDermott on May 13, 1960, McDermott told him that the section of the Code dealing with the powers of the police to take people found in a gaming house off for examination under oath was what closed the clubs up if it was used. He added that McDermott told him not to repeat this to anyone.

There was also testimony by Constable Scott on another point, that the police executed a search warrant in the Cooksville veterans club in November of 1954 and all the occupants of the club were taken to the court house at Brampton to be examined under oath. It is in this context that I ask the House to consider Feeley's remarks to Mr. Shrubbs, that he could promise the hon. Attorney-General's office would not roar down on the police if they used Section 174 of the Criminal Code to close up the old Ramsey club.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the provincial police did raid the Centre Road veterans club at Cooksville on November 24, 1954, and seven of the 34 found-ins were held overnight at Brampton and brought under oath and in camera the next morning by Crown Attorney Davis before Magistrate Blain. Legal counsel for the club was present and allowed to cross-examine. During these proceedings, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Davis received a message to call the hon. Attorney-General's office. He did so and was instructed to—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition just give the date?

Mr. Wintermeyer: November 24, 1954.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is the one he brought up previously.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is right. No question. What I am trying to point out is simply to explain the significance of the comment of Mr. Feeley.

During these proceedings, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Davis received a message to call—I am sorry.

What an irony it is then, Mr. Speaker, to read the Morton report and to see how it dismisses this whole question of chartered clubs as a red herring with the suggestion that if only police officers, prosecutors and magistrates understood the law a little better they would make use of the great assistance that is afforded to them by Section 174 of the Criminal Code.

There is one final matter I must deal with in my remarks at this time. I do so most reluctantly, not only because it is a most sensitive issue, but because I am not in a position to give the House all the information in my possession without violating well established rules of debate. I feel I must bring it to the attention of the House as best I can, however, because of the serious nature of the issue. I ask the House to consider these facts.

Hon. members will recall I have described the composition of Joseph McDermott's hunting party at James Bay goose club in the fall of 1958. I have stated the names of seven of the eight men in that party. I now tell the House that the eighth man was one Arthur B. Monteith of Toronto, and that in a prospectus filed with the Ontario Securities Commission on February 7, 1961, he was identified as secretary-treasurer and a director of KRNO Mines Limited, a mining venture in which Feeley and McDermott held the vendor shares.

As of June of 1960, the records of the Port Arthur mining office show there were only 300 mining claims in the Big Duck Lake area north of Schreiber on Lake Superior registered to either Feeley, McDermott or KRNO Mines. The same records show Arthur B. Monteith to be a claim holder in the same area, and Monteith visited the Port Arthur mining office in the company of Feeley and McDermott in the summer of 1960.

The prospectus filed with the Ontario Securities Commission on February 7, 1961, was an application for O.S.C. permission to release the vendor shares for public sale. By this time, however, the names of Feeley and McDermott had become somewhat notorious and permission was not granted. Because the application was not technically in order was, well, technical reasons were given to the applicants. The directors of KRNO mines, therefore, had no reason to suspect that the matter could not be cleared up and the shares placed on the public market when on May 16, 1960, they decided to designate Davidson and Company, a prominent brokerage firm, as the trading agent for KRNO stock.

Mr. Speaker, Arthur B. Monteith has for several years been an employee, a customer's man with Davidson and Company. Mr. Speaker, the foreman of the jury which tried Feeley, McDermott and Wright was vice-president of Davidson and Company. The panel of petit jurors summoned to attend on May 29, 1961, for the sittings of the Supreme Court of Ontario in the county of York contained 90 names. A murder trial had first call on the jury list and 16 names were removed, leaving 74 available for the trial of Feeley, McDermott and Wright.

Mr. Speaker, the defence counsel in that murder trial was approached separately by two lawyers immediately before his court began and was asked by each lawyer to challenge two names should they be called for the jury in this case. The defence counsel thought nothing in particular about these requests partly because, as hon. members may know, it is a device used by citizens who do not wish to do jury service, and partly because he had planned to challenge the four names he had been given anyway because their occupations indicated that they might be unsympathetic to his client.

Two of the four names he was asked to challenge were drawn and were challenged. All four men served on the jury hearing the case of Feeley, McDermott and Wright. That is all I am going to say about the jury, Mr. Speaker. I have further information in particular with regard to the deliberations of the jury and the jurymen which I have decided not to give this House. I feel it is not my right nor my duty to say more.

This is the function and this is the point I want to make throughout, Mr. Speaker. I feel an obligation as leader of the Opposition and as spokesman and person responsible in this House to do the difficult thing and to bring these facts to the attention of this House so that an independent inquiry can be made. I charge no man, I judge no man but I feel it conscientiously to be my duty to enunciate the facts that I have outlined so that an intelligible determination can be gained and made for our request to hold an impartial and a judicial inquiry into all these matters.

Applause.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Nor am I going to discuss at length the subject of KRNO Mines Limited. I will simply tell the House the company was incorporated provincially on September 10, 1959, and that David Humphrey was identified as president and Charles Philips, an accountant in the law firm of Humphrey, Locke as secretary-treasurer. Humphrey was also identified as the promoter, Feeley and McDermott as the vendors. In the February 7, 1961, application, Humphrey continued to be president, but Arthur B. Monteith was named secretary-treasurer and one J. B. McNamara of 28 Edgar Avenue, Toronto, was named vice-president.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Provincial Secretary knows who J. P. McNamara is? Hon. members may wish to consult the file of the Centre Road veterans association in the company's records office of the hon. Provincial Secretary's department. They will find one John McNamara of 2360 Edenhurst Drive, Cooksville, listed as a director of the club in 1960 and an indication that he was the manager of the club. Mr. Speaker, the McNamara of the Vets club and the McNamara of KRNO Mines Limited are one and the same man.

Mr. McNamara is also the publisher of the Veterans Advocate, a publication of the army, navy and air force veterans association of Canada and has wielded some considerable influence in that organization. Hon. members will recall that the Centre Road club was once a branch of the federally incorporated army, navy and air force veterans association. Perhaps the hon. Provincial Secretary will remember Mr. McNamara as a defence witness, so to speak, at closed hearings on the February 11 and February 17—excuse me—1960, before the Deputy Provincial Secretary to show cause why the—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, may I bring to the attention of the House that it is not the present Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, I did not intend that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, but that is the way it sounded.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I am sorry if I created that impression and I will read it again.

Perhaps the Provincial Secretary will remember—it may be that I should have said the Provincial Secretary of the day will remember—

An hon. member: And we have a new hon. Prime Minister too. He will be up in a minute.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —Mr. McNamara as a defence witness, so to speak, at closed hearings on February 11, 1960, and on February 17, 1960, before the Deputy Provincial Secretary to show cause why the Centre Road club's provincial charter should not be cancelled on the ground that it was being used for illegal gambling.

Perhaps the hon. Provincial Secretary will remember the fantastic story Mr. McNamara told at those hearings about how the president of the army, navy and air force veterans association had conducted an investigation into allegations against the club and had given it a clear bill of health and how he took his position in the club to keep an eye on things because it had been more or less forced on him as the decent thing to do. And perhaps the hon. Provincial Secretary can explain why no cancellation was ordered for months and that, in fact, the charter was not dissolved until June 14, 1960, after Robert Wright was arrested and everybody knew the jig was up.

Perhaps Mr. McNamara can explain how the vice-presidency of the gamblers' mining company was forced on him in February of 1961, several months after it was known that everything had not been so decent at the Centre Road club after all.

Mr. Speaker, one of the characteristics of organized crime demonstrated by the New York crime commission was the use of violence. The commission said that beatings and even murder were the consequences of the presence of organized crime in a community. There has been evidence in Ontario that physical violence and murder are associated with the activities of gamblers. I will cite several cases:

On March 21, 1961, Max Bluestein, a convicted gambler, was savagely beaten by a number of men in the Town Tavern in downtown Toronto. He was beaten with brass knuckles, iron bars and fists. He was knocked down and kicked and a broken bottle was ground into his mouth and face. According to reports, Mr. Bluestein was beaten by a group of men acting for rivals who wanted to share the enormous profits of Bluestein's illegal gambling enterprises in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, let me outline a little of Mr. Bluestein's background. In December of 1960 he was convicted along with Sam Binder of operating a common gaming house in the Lakeview club on Bathurst Street near Eglinton Avenue. Magistrate Addison in passing sentence of a fine of $15,000, or four months in jail estimated Mr. Bluestein's Lakeview club did an annual volume of gambling in excess of $13 million with a profit to Mr. Bluestein of more than $1 million.

Mr. Bluestein obviously could pay the fine but it was reported in the press that he chose to go to the Ontario Reformatory at Mimico because paying the fine would cause him an income tax problem. While at Mimico a trusted lieutenant told him that rivals wished to take over four large floating crap games which Mr. Bluestein controlled in Toronto hotels. At this point Mr. Bluestein decided to pay his fine in order to gain his freedom and the opportunity to meet the challenge to his gambling empire. It was curious that when Mr. Bluestein came to pay his fine, it was discovered that a clerical error in the court record made him liable only for a fine of $4,000 and not $5,000.

It was reported in the press at the time of Mr. Bluestein's beating at the Town Tavern that almost half of the hundred people present had been invited to witness what subsequently took place. This was a public demonstration to the gambling fraternity of Toronto that violence would be used to capture and control illegal betting here. Despite the fact that a hundred persons were in the tavern no one came forward to give evidence to the police. The tavern's hat check girl and doorman, as well as the customers were thoroughly intimidated.

One month later, after the police held in camera hearings with 12 witnesses, warrants were issued for men—for four men—on a charge of assault causing bodily harm. These men were Jack Weaver, Frank Marchildon, Fred Gabourie and John Papalia. The first three, arrested April 23, 1961, have already been identified as convicted gamblers and members of various social clubs convicted or suspected of being gaming houses. The fourth man, Johnny Papalia of Hamilton, gave himself up to police on May 12, 1961, 48 days after the Bluestein beating and at a time when the New York State police had a warrant for his arrest in connection with the largest narcotic ring ever uncovered in the United States.

Mr. Papalia was a member of the veterans club, he was convicted of beating Max Bluestein and is now serving a sentence of 13 months in an Ontario reformatory.

Mr. Speaker, the New York crime commission pointed out that the three principal fonts of revenue for organized crime were illegal gambling, trafficking in narcotics and labour racketeering. In Johnny Papalia we have a direct link between the gamblers and the dope pedlars. The New York District Attorney charged 20 men, four of them Canadians, as being part of the conspiracy which smuggled drugs worth $150 million on the black market into the United States in the course of the past several years.

Of the 20 charged several left the United States forfeiting bail of $20,000 to $50,000 each. One man was murdered in Brooklyn, New York, last summer, another tried to commit suicide, a third was declared insane, and unfit for trial. A fourth was Alberto Agueci of Toronto, whose beaten, strangled and burned body was found last week near Rochester, New York. Some of the men charged in New York have been identified by federal narcotics authorities in the United States as members of the Mafia.

Another characteristic of organized crime as revealed by the New York State commission was that of extortion. Do we have examples of extortion in Ontario, Mr. Speaker? Last April, Toronto Daily Star columnist Pierre Berton published stories about gangland beatings of Toronto stockbrokers who refused to pay protection money. Beatings have been reported in Hamilton. Gwyn Thomas in the Toronto Daily Star on April 10, 1961, reported that beatings and shake-downs had been going on in Toronto for the preceding two years. Attempts to corrupt law enforcement authorities is another characteristic of organized crime.

I have already related the extent to which gamblers corrupted the Ontario Provincial Police anti-gambling squad. Gamblers have also attempted to corrupt magistrates in the Toronto area. It has been widely reported, Mr. Speaker, that Magistrate Fred Thompson was threatened some few years ago on the day before he was to hear a case against a well-known gambler. Magistrate Thompson reported this to the hon. Attorney-General. It would be interesting to know what the hon. Attorney-General did about it.

It has been reported that an attempt to bribe Magistrate Addison with $50,000 was made prior to the trial of another well-known gambler. It would be interesting, Mr. Speaker, to know what steps, if any, the hon. Attorney-General took in this matter.

I have cited the murder of Earl Atwood in connection with the Roseland club, and no doubt the hon. Attorney-General is familiar with that case. I wonder if he is familiar with the case of Peter "Scrit" Mitchell, one of the gang in the old Ramsey club. According to evidence in court Mitchell held his position in the organization by reason of his alleged ability to provide the club with political protection. According to evidence his position became somewhat tenuous and he is said to have talked too much. It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that Scrit Mitchell disappeared suddenly and has not been seen for a long time. I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General would know where Mitchell is.

Mr. Speaker, physical violence, extortion, intimidation, bribery and attempted bribery, drug trafficking, and even murder, have all accompanied the growth of illegal gambling in Ontario. They are the inevitable corollary of organized crime. In recent years, however, a new and equally frightening aspect has appeared to this relationship between professional gambling and other illegal activity. It is the use of illegal gambling revenues to promote fraudulent stock deals. I will not weary the House with the complicated details of any particular case. Instead I would simply cite some cases of record in which evidence of syndicate money has been found.

There was the case some two years ago of Shoreland Mines Limited, a dormant Toronto firm. There was the case of Manor Securities Limited in the Maritimes. There was the investigation and report of the acting administrator of The Securities Fraud Prevention Act in New Brunswick last year into the activities of Canam Investments Limited, and of a number of related companies and individuals. This investigation found links with racketeers in Toronto and New York.

If time permitted I could show the House an association between some of these racketeers and some of the professional gamblers. I have named earlier in my remarks. I have cited the shakedown and attempted shakedown of certain stockbrokers. It is no great secret, Mr. Speaker, that the culprit here, certainly one of the culprits, was Johnny Papalia. It is no great secret that the stockbrokers concerned were really so-called stockateers, the high pressure brokers and dealers who live on the fringes of securities law. At least two of the men coerced by Papalia were frequent visitors at the Centre Road veterans club.

I had occasion to mention Eric Cradock and J. B. Ryan, the operators of the James Bay goose club. They are associated in Cradock Holdings Limited, Toronto, and both have poor records, to say the least, with the Ontario securities commission. Cradock offices were once used by Jack Weaver and Fred Gabourie for a big back-end booking operation.

I can cite the case of Jaylac Mines Limited, a stock promotion which resulted this month in the cancellation by the Ontario securities commission of the registration of two Toronto stock dealers. The commission identified one Ivan Gordon as a representative of Jaylac interests who disappeared in 1960 following the removal and probable disappearance of all Jaylac's liquidated assets. Here again a detailed examination would reveal an association with ventures in which professional gamblers were and may still be involved.

If for no other reason, Mr. Speaker, a Royal commission is necessary to discover and expose the use of illegal gambling revenues in the participation of professional gamblers and their associates in fraudulent stock promotions.

I now come, Mr. Speaker, to the fifth and final question. The New York crime commission found that one of the characteristics of organized crime is its penetration into legitimate business. What evidence is there that this has happened in Ontario? I could give the House a number of references but I will detail only one because it is a classic example of what has happened and what can happen.

On June 27, this year the chief of police of Metropolitan Toronto told a meeting of law enforcement officers in Buffalo that a questionable group of men were operating an airline service from Toronto to the United States and the Caribbean area. Mr. Mackey said that although no criminal activity had been discovered the airline would be watched closely because of the ease with which private aircraft can cross international borders and evade customs inspections and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, the name of that airline is Airgo Limited and it was run for a considerable period of time by Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott. Airgo Limited was incorporated by federal charter on August 11, 1958. The original owners were a Toronto lawyer and his brother-in-law who allegedly were interested in operating a rent-a-plane service at Toronto Island airport.

On July 3, 1959, the Air Transport Board issued a licence authorizing Airgo Limited to operate a flying training school and a commercial passenger and freight service in Canada. This licence became effective when the federal Department of Transport issued an operating certificate on August 21, 1959. On September 15, 1959, the Air Transport Board issued another licence to Airgo Limited authorizing it to make flights to and from the United States. This became effective when the federal transport department issued an operating certificate on October 13, 1959.

Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 1959, six days after Airgo Limited was in business to make flights to the United States, the owners sold the airline to two Toronto lawyers who said they were acting for undisclosed principals. Those lawyers were David Humphrey and Hugh Locke of the firm of Humphrey & Locke. The deal was consummated in the lobby of a downtown Toronto bank when Mr. Locke handed over a large sum of cash money to one of the original owners.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of their investigation of Feeley and McDermott on other matters the police executed a search warrant for the law offices of Humphrey & Locke, and it is no great secret that among the other documents seized was a record of meetings in those offices concerning Airgo business. This record shows that those present at the meeting were Hugh Locke and his accountant, Charles Philips, the operations manager of the airline and Vincent Feeley. The Aviation Directory of Canada, a private publication which compiled its listings on the basis of information supplied by the airlines themselves, also listed David Humphrey as vice-president and Hugh Locke as secretary of Airgo Limited for 1960 and 1961.

Nor is it any great secret, Mr. Speaker, that police seized a document in the law offices of Humphrey & Locke drawn up in May of 1960. This document is a conditional sales document whereby David Humphrey, Hugh Locke, Joseph McDermott and Peter Fielding agreed to sell Airgo Limited to Robert S. Wong, subject to the approval of the Air Transport Board and other conditions. Peter Fielding is an alias used by Vincent Feeley and Robert S. Wong is a manager at Toronto Island airport. The deal apparently fell through but the document is at least indicative of the substantial financial interest in Airgo Limited by Vincent Feeley and Joseph McDermott.

I can also tell the House that Feeley and McDermott were frequently seen about Airgo's offices at Toronto Island airport, and that they identified themselves to the employees as the owners and operators of Airgo Limited. Further I can say that George Reid, the trusted lieutenant of Feeley and McDermott in gambling club operations, was placed on the Airgo payroll after the Centre Road veterans club closed down.

Joseph McDermott took a chattel mortgage for $20,000 on certain aircraft when Airgo Limited was sold to the present owners some time last winter. Yet despite all this evidence of participation by Feeley and McDermott in the ownership and control of Airgo Limited for a period of over one year there is no record with either the Air Transport Board or the federal Department of Transport of the sale of the airline from the original owners in October of 1959.

In August of 1960, and I point out, Mr. Speaker, that this would be shortly after Robert Wright was arrested and the gamblers had discovered the police had had an undercover agent in their midst, the Air Transport Board did receive a vague letter from Humphrey & Locke indicating there had been a transfer of ownership, not to Feeley and McDermott, but to the current owners.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, a serious evasion of law occurred in this case. Federal regulations provide that the air transport board must be informed of any sale or transfer of stock exceeding five per cent of the total stock, and must approve such sale or transfer. Failure to do so can mean cancellation of the airline's licence and legal prosecution. Clearly, the regulations were violated in this case and there can be little doubt the law was evaded in order to conceal Feeley and McDermott's participation in Airgo Limited.

I shall say nothing, Mr. Speaker, about why they wanted to run an airline, nor shall I say anything about the present ownership of Airgo Limited. Chief Mackey's statement can speak for itself. But I do suggest most strongly, Mr. Speaker, that here again is the type of illegal activity requiring investigation by a Royal commission.

Mr. Speaker, this speech has been long and full of detail. The material is complex and technical. For those reasons it presents a special difficulty for the hon. members of the House to grasp all its meaning readily and easily. I am also aware that much of the material is sensitive in nature. However, I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that I have made no charges of culpable wrongdoing against any person. I have not made and I do not now make any judgment about the legal or moral guilt of any man. What I have done is to present in this House a number of facts which I am convinced demonstrates that organized crime exists in Ontario and requires investigation.

I believe that the only satisfactory investigation can be that of a Royal commission. The characteristics of organized crime which were demonstrated by the New York State crime commission are all manifest in Ontario. I think it is obvious that an investigation of organized crime by the department of the hon. Attorney-General would be in the nature of an internal house cleaning.

That is needed, but it is not sufficient. I think it is obvious that a Royal commission, independent of government, is the only adequate device for investigating organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Royal commission should be headed by a Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario. He should be aided by a counsel who will be empowered and directed to investigate all aspects of the problem of organized crime. The commission's terms of reference should require investigation into the extent of organized crime in Ontario; the link between professional gamblers and their counterparts and associates in the United States; the records of the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary in its handling of social club charters; the failure of the department of the hon. Attorney-General to carry out government policy and to enforce the laws relating to gambling; the link between illegal gambling and other criminal activity; especially links with trafficking in narcotics; the penetration of legitimate business by professional gamblers; the contamination of our processes of law enforcement by attempts to influence courts and their operation; and finally the use of legal fronts for illegal activities.

The commissioner and chief counsel should be assisted by adequate staff of trained investigators. The commissioner should have the power to subpoena witnesses and to hear their testimony under oath and if necessary at times in camera. The commission should also be empowered to hold public hearings if deemed advisable as a means of bringing home to the general public the nature and scope of the menace which organized crime presents. The commission should be required to prepare a report of its findings for presentation to this House.

Mr. Speaker, I and my party will not be satisfied with anything less than the type of commission and inquiry which I have outlined. I appeal directly to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), to appoint such a commission and to give it terms of reference that encompass the matters I have enumerated. I wish to assure him and all the hon. members of the House that if the present government does not undertake to appoint such a commission and to direct it to undertake such an inquiry, the next Liberal government will do so at the earliest opportunity.

Applause.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, that concludes the portion of the address related to crime. I have but a few additional comments, and at your instruction I will adjourn the debate now to continue later, or, if you prefer, I will continue now and conclude all my address.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition would he take very long to finish. If the hon. members agree for him to go ahead, why—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I note that it is now six of the clock—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: It is quite obvious that the hon. member was quite prepared to finish his address—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Leave it up to the hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: —however, the hon. Prime Minister has mentioned—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset of my address this afternoon that it was my intention to concentrate on the subject of crime. Mr. Speaker, no address that I have ever prepared has given me more concern, no address has been more difficult to present and I assure you, in summary, that I tried to do so as an hon. member of this Legislature.

I want to enforce and to reinforce the observation that I made several times, that I feel a public responsibility to say the things that I said. And I feel sufficiently strongly about it, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared to vacate the privileges that are normally given to an hon. member in an address of this sort.

However, now, Mr. Speaker, I refer to other matters, other than crime. And I can, very briefly, I think, assist all hon. members of this House by referring very briefly to the other subjects that I intended to talk about, subjects that subsequent debates will permit of great opportunity for explanation and development.

It is my intention, therefore, at this time to refer only briefly to given positions I and my party have taken in respect to several problems in Ontario.

I have suggested on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, that the problem of sales tax, as we have it in Ontario, has resulted from a failure on the part of the government over a long period of time to accurately assess the financial conditions of the province. I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that even now with the implementation of the sales tax what has happened is that the tax has been implemented without due consideration and without due timing. I feel that the opportunity is present, even now, to exempt all purchases up to $25 and to lose only a small portion of the total revenue that is available by the imposition of this tax.

I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, about the matter of agriculture and I would say that the big duty and responsibility of this government is to assure the farmers of this province—particularly the man who farms 100 acres, the family farm—give him the assurance that he is going to be given the opportunity to carry on that farm. His net income today is less than it has been ever since Confederation. The simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that he does not have any assurance today that this government will co-operate with him in building co-operatives and otherwise assisting him technologically, scientifically, financially and co-operatively to assure that he can compete with the large competitors that are growing up to compete with the small farmer.

I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, about the matter of the lack of leadership of the government in respect to municipal refinancing, or at least the re-organization of municipal financing and the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of municipalities to finance their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask your permission now to adjourn because I feel that I can in five or ten minutes tomorrow express myself more effectively and more directly and more cogently than I will. I assure you that with no more than five or ten minutes I will read the amendments that I have prepared to the Address to the Throne. Therefore I would like to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Wintermeyer moves the adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will resume the debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery Gulfstream Road Public School, Toronto and in the west gallery McArthur Public School, St. Catharines.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. R. Belisle from the standing committee on standing orders presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of Greater Oshawa Community Chest praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to give notice of meetings by publishing such notice in a newspaper.

Of the corporation of the village of Erie Beach praying that an Act may pass allowing it to be represented on the county council of the county of Kent.

Of the corporation of the city of Belleville praying that an Act may pass amending The City of Belleville Act, 1948, to permit monies held by the board of governors of the Belleville General Hospital to be kept in a trust company registered under The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, as well as in a chartered bank.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing insurance for members of city council travelling on business of the corporation; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the village of Markham praying that an Act may pass confirming an agreement for the construction of a community centre building and arena, confirming a by-law relating thereto and authorizing the issue of debentures therefor.

Of the corporation of the county of Halton praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to receive from persons, or for the credit of persons admitted to homes for the aged, etc.; real and personal property and to administer such property.

Of the corporation of the city of St. Catharines praying that an Act may pass establishing the St. Catharines Transit Commission; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Nepean praying that an Act may pass confirming debenture by-laws for school construction.

Of Nepean Township High School District Board and Collegiate Institute Board of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass confirming an agreement for the erection in the township of Nepean, by the said township board, of secondary schools to be operated by the said Ottawa board.

Of the board of trustees of the Roman Catholic separate schools for the city of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass raising the membership of the board from nine to ten.

Of the corporation of the Young Men's-Young Women's Christian Association of Cornwall praying that an Act may pass exempting its real property from municipal taxation except for local improvements.

Of the corporation of the township of Wicksteed authorizing certain school construction and debentures therefor.

Of the corporation of the Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Incurables, Toronto, praying that an Act may pass changing its name to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Toronto.

Of the corporation of Ontario Co-operative Credit Society praying that an Act may pass increasing the authorized capital of the society.

Motion agreed to.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Amend The Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. members a very important occasion.

I would be remiss, this being St. Andrew's Day, if I were not to rise in this House and pay my annual tribute to our fine citizens of Scottish ancestry. This great country and province owe a great debt of gratitude to the Scots for the very large part they played in the pioneering of Canada and Ontario. Indeed our gratitude extends to the part they play in our society today, in politics, education, the sciences and the arts—in fact, in every facet of our community.

The Scottish contribution is one of which they may very well be proud.

I am proud of the great cosmopolitan constituency which I represent. Within those boundaries are many thousands of people of practically every race and nationality in the world and I am proud also of the fact that the riding is named after that great patron saint of the Scots, St. Andrew.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all of the constituents of St. Andrew, I extend to the citizens of Scottish ancestry in Ontario greetings and best wishes, "lang may their lums reek."

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I address to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan).

The question is: The Ontario Retail Sales Act permits tax rebate on railway rolling stock including streetcars and subway cars. Has the hon. Minister given any consideration to extending this tax rebate provision to buses purchased by municipalities for public transit services?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I may say that railway rolling stock was exempted because railways have to pay tax on the tangible materials used in the construction and maintenance of the roadbed on which the rolling stock operates. This exemption parallels similar exemptions in every other retail sales tax Act in force in Canada.

In the circumstances no consideration is being given to extending the exemption to buses purchased by municipalities for public transit service; one reason being that transport trucks and buses, whether privately or municipally owned, operate on roadbeds the construction and maintenance of which is entirely paid for by the province, if it is a provincial highway, and substantially paid for if it is a roadbed belonging to a municipality.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, generally there is some supplementary question, but I have no supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I just might say that the municipality of Brantford owns its transportation system and this year they will have a $70,000 deficit which the taxpayer will have to meet.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in his capacity as hon. Minister of Education.

Referring once again to the 11 students who are still absent from classes at the C. B. Stirling School in Hamilton, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass) mentioned the other day that there was no application pending before the Ontario Municipal Board, that the hon. Minister did not believe that the board should deal with the matter as it was obviously the responsibility of local education authorities and a local council. Could the hon. Prime Minister in his capacity as hon. Minister of Education give the assurance that he will take immediate action to see that this dispute is resolved either by the municipal board, local education authorities, council or someone, in order that the students might not suffer as a result of their abstention from classes?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not the question in the form which it was handed to me.

Mr. Speaker: I asked the member to shorten the question, Mr. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I will be strictly co-operative and answer it in this form even though I have not seen it in this manner. In the first place, I am aware of the situation there and in regard to the meeting . . .

Perhaps I should say that to understand the entire situation, there are two groups of students involved in this problem. In the first place there was a group for which the municipal board did order transportation to be provided. That order was made as part of an annexation order. In other words, the whole matter was considered when the municipal board was considering the annexation proceedings and as part of the annexation settlement an order was so made.

Then there was a subsequent annexation by the city of Hamilton and it is with this group that the present question arises.

Originally, there were some 40 children involved and now it is down to 11 children coming from four families. As far as The Department of Education is concerned we have no power whatsoever to force any local school board to provide transportation. The relevant section of the educational statute, which is section 37 of The Schools Administration Act, provides that a board may provide transportation. In any event, if the board decides so to do, under certain circumstances we pay grants towards the cost of that transportation; but as a department we have no power to order any board to provide transportation and this is a matter that is left entirely to the local school board.

As far as the affairs in front of the municipal board are concerned, apparently a meeting was set up between the city council, the board of education and the parents in front of the municipal board. This meeting was called in Toronto for October 13 and Mr. Kennedy, the chairman of the municipal board, I believe arranged the meeting. But at the time the meeting was held he was not available because he was on a meeting in another city and therefore Mr. Jamieson, who is a member of the municipal board, presided at this hearing.

At this meeting the city of Hamilton people turned up, as I understand it, the board of education people turned up from Hamilton, but nobody turned up from the parents group or representing the parents, and thus it was impossible to have a meeting and to discuss the matter.

The only way in which the municipal board could enter this dispute at this stage of the game would be if they were to re-open annexation hearings which are now some two years old. However, I am told that if an application is filed properly the Ontario Municipal Board would be prepared to consider the application—if it were properly filed. But as far as this meeting that was referred to in the question that I have here, the parents of the children involved did not appear at the meeting that was arranged.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. Minister in connection with this matter—is his department not concerned with the fact that these children are presently being deprived—perhaps I should use a better choice of words—being left without an education as a result of this dispute? Is there nothing that can be done from The Department of Education level which would speed this thing to a settlement? These children are staying home from classes in the interim period.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I feel as keenly about the children as the hon. member, but the point simply is this, that in the legal arrangements of our school system The Department of Education has no power. This is a matter over which the local board has complete control.

Their position, as I understand it, is that they could establish a precedent here. They provide no transportation any place in the city and if they were to provide transportation here it might lead them into all sorts of other things about which the hon. member and I really know nothing, because we do not know the internal affairs of that board. I am afraid as far as the department is concerned—we would be prepared to mediate the dispute if that were possible, if there was anything we could do in that field—there is no concrete action that we can take because we have no power.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

AN ACT TO AMALGAMATE DEPARTMENTS

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources) moves second reading of Bill No. 5, An Act to amalgamate The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and The Department of Commerce and Development.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry? Carried.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on this bill at this time. I had thought that perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) would say something in moving his motion but perhaps he considers that his comments on the first reading adequately introduced the bill to the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill is considered in relation to the comment made about it in the Speech from the Throne, it becomes apparent that it is part of the process whereby the government hopes to evolve what it describes in the Throne Speech as a comprehensive plan. Though the government has not divulged details about what it has in mind when it refers to a comprehensive plan, it is refreshing to note that it is at least talking about economic planning and is setting up some elements of the machinery through which such planning might be undertaken.

One thing that interests me, Mr. Speaker, is the way in which the phrase "economic planning" which even two or three years ago was regarded almost as a dirty word, has now become an accepted part of the vocabularies of business men, newspaper editors and even the politicians. In fact, even the Liberal Party, which is noted for its old-fashioned, not to say obscurantist, approach to economic problems, finds it necessary nowadays to talk about planning.

Admittedly, most of the statements that Liberal spokesmen make indicate that they have at best only a vague idea of what planning is all about. For example, they almost always say that though they are in favour of planning they are also in favour of doing business at the same old stand, and, Mr. Speaker, those two things are manifestly incompatible. If business is to be carried on in the same way it has always been carried on then, obviously, there is no change and we will have no more economic planning than we had under previous Liberal administrations.

It does not follow from this, of course, Mr. Speaker, that under proper planning there will not be opportunity for private initiative and private resourcefulness. On the contrary, in my opinion these opportunities will be greatly increased because the basic objective of planning, as I see it, or one of the basic objectives, is to create continuous economic growth which increases economic opportunity.

However, it is sheer nonsense to suggest that business operations would not be affected if we undertake a programme of planning. Business will have to be carried on within an overall framework and will have to be adapted and accommodate itself to the basic plan.

Now, taking the government proposal as it stands before us in this bill—admittedly the bill in itself is only a skeleton, but I am trying to take it in the larger context in which it has been placed in the Speech from the Throne. I quite hope, Mr. Speaker, that there is no intention on the part of the government, or no notion on the part of the government, that planning can properly be carried on through a single department.

I suggest that that delusion leads to one of two things, either to ineffectuality—which was the situation with the so-called Department of Planning and Development, which we had up until a year or two ago when its name was changed—leads either to ineffectuality or else the creation of an economic czardom which is above the government even though it might ostensibly be part of it.

As I see it, in a democratic system of government, planning is the responsibility of the whole government and not of an individual department. It is the government's function to set over-all economic objectives, over-all goals within its particular jurisdiction and to indicate at least the general lines by which it expects these goals to be achieved. Now, within a framework of that kind, Mr. Speaker, I can see a vital role to be played by a department of the nature envisaged in this bill. It can provide the government with continuous information—

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, sir. This bill, referred to as Bill No. 5 in our books, does not mention the word planning. The bill is designed to combine the purposes of both of the departments in one department; there has been no suggestion of planning made in this bill—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Hear, hear. That is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And this is perfectly fine, when the hon. member wants to speak about planning he is free to do so when he speaks on the Speech from the Throne. This bill actually is an administrative bill to combine two departments under one head.

Mr. Bryden: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is a pity the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) had not read what was stated about his bill in the Speech from the Throne. On page four of the Speech from the Throne, in the first column, about a third of the way down the column, the Speech states:

A comprehensive plan is being evolved to assist the economy in achieving a satisfactory rate of economic growth.

Which I hope is true. And then there are further comments on that point within that paragraph, and then in the next paragraph, and surely elaborating upon what was said in this paragraph about planning:

In addition, legislation will be introduced to merge The Department of Economics and The Department of Commerce and Development under the title of The Department of Economics and Development.

And so on. Surely that means, at least if one can assume that the government knows what it is doing at all, it follows this is an agency through which, or one of the agencies through which, they hope to develop the comprehensive plan to which they referred in the Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

It is quite obvious that we must limit discussion to bills before the House and this bill does not deal with planning. Although planning may have been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and if it was, it may be introduced by way of a bill at a later date; if it was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne the matter of planning can be better discussed in the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to set up a new department by the amalgamation of two existing departments. The hon. Minister has not indicated whether he has any function in mind for the department or not but I would like to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the debate on the principle of this bill to indicate some functions that I think this department ought to be undertaking. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is within the terms of reference of the bill. The bill is to create a department; I would like to discuss the functions of the department in so far as one can discern them from the very limited information the hon. Minister has seen fit to supply to the House.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on the second point of order, the proper functions of the bill, or the functions of the department, should be determined when we come to deal with the specific phraseology of the bill itself, that is in committee of the whole House. The only thing we are debating today is the principle of should these two departments be joined, this is the principle before the House.

Mr. Bryden: Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is a quibble beyond all comprehension. The department is created in order to perform certain jobs and I presume, I do not know why else it would be created, its functions relate directly to the principle of the bill. The bill has no purpose at all unless the department is to have some functions; and, as I say, I do not know what functions the hon. Minister had in mind. I had hoped that he had some intelligent ones in mind but—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I would ask you to rule, sir, if you would, on this in one way or the other. This bill is quite clearly what it says it is—an amalgamation of two departments. When both of those departments were established their functions were argued out in this House and were established and all this is going to do is put both of those functions under one department; this has already been debated. Now, if the hon. member wants to argue about the phraseology, it is well known to be a rule of this House that the time to do it is in the committee of the whole.

Mr. Bryden: The matter on which I am least interested in arguing, Mr. Speaker, is not the phraseology. I am, however, interested in arguing about the principle involved in the bill and this is what I have been trying to do. If the hon. Minister would give me an unobstructed opportunity I could complete my remarks in relatively short order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since the hon. Minister asked for a ruling I would say at the present time the member would be allowed to proceed but to confine his remarks to the matter of the amalgamation of the departments.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it has been my suggestion to you, sir, that the amalgamation of the departments raises the whole question of the functions of the department. That seems to me to be clear and that is what I would like to discuss.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is not the creation of a new department but it is the amalgamation of two existing departments.

Mr. MacDonald: Sheer obstructionism! What is the hon. Minister afraid of, anyway?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is a proper place to discuss this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Speaker will decide, as he already mentioned, when the hon. member is completely out of order. At the present time the member will proceed.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

What I have been trying to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that in my opinion this department which is now being created through the amalgamation of two other, and not very adequate departments, can play a vital role in assisting the government in achieving an objective which it set forth in the Speech from the Throne. Whether or not it genuinely adheres to that objective I do not know, but at least this department could assist in achieving it by providing it with information on a continuous basis to assist it in planning if it had that in mind. I thought this department would be an obvious one to assist it also in giving it advice in how to adapt its plans to changing conditions.

I would also like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the department could provide a great service to the government by clearing away the nineteenth-century mythology which is so prevalent in Canada today and which stands in the way of sound efforts to develop plans at the government level. I would like to refer very briefly to two matters only on which I think this department could provide the government with useful information and which might help the government to clarify its thinking—and obviously that is a task that seriously needs doing just on the basis of the interjections of the hon. Minister at this point.

There are two myths in particular which I think stand in the way of developing economic growth in this country on a continuous basis and one is the myth that growth is inhibited by excessive government spending. A comparison of Canadian experience with the experience of other advanced countries shows just how little sense there is in this particular myth. The National Institute of Economic and Social Research of Great Britain has published authoritative figures on comparative rates of growth in different countries and it has published these figures in its Economic Review of July, 1961. This Review indicates that the rates of growth of national product per man-year in countries other than those behind the Iron Curtain—

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the member must confine his remarks to the bill—I do not think we have to get behind the Iron Curtain on this one. The point is that the bill actually deals with the amalgamation of departments and I think we should confine remarks to either the amalgamation or the non-amalgamation of the departments.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I still submit to you that the functions of the department and some of the contributions that it might be able to make to the development of economic policy in this country or this province, which surely is its major function, are matters that would properly be discussed. I think some of these points that I am trying to raise now would be of value to the government and to the department. As hon. members know, my prime motive is always to attempt to assist the government and if I can suggest that the new department can assist it in clearing away some of the delusions under which it at present suffers, I think that would be a useful contribution to this debate.

I was referring to certain tables in the economic review of the national institute which indicates that in the period 1954 to 1959 Canada ranked tenth in terms of economic growth among the countries considered and ahead of it were such countries—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member is straying far afield. I would point out to the member and all members of the House that in a technical way this bill is already carried. I said "Shall the motion carry?"—no one rose at that time, and I said "Carried." Technically the bill is carried. So at this point I would ask the member to possibly conclude his remarks.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that you have taken such a limited view of the principle of the bill, I will defer to your ruling but I would like to state that I had hoped that the government had something a little more positive and dynamic in the proposal it was placing before the House than now appears. Apparently this department is simply a consolidation of two departments, neither of which had any very effective function to play within the government structure or contributed anything in particular to the development of this province.

It had been my hope—especially when I read the Speech from the Throne, which I found at that point quite encouraging—it had been my hope that the government had some more dynamic policy in view. That the amalgamation of these two departments and their creation into a new and what I had hoped—but apparently mistakenly—into a better department, had indicated some disposition on the part of the government to try to develop plans to restore economic growth in the country and to create full employment.

Apparently that is not so. That is unfortunate. If this department is just to be the sum of the two other departments, I am afraid that it will make very little contribution to development in this province.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the advisability of combining these two departments, I would remind you, sir, that my recollection is that when The Department of Economics was created some few years ago, it was suggested this new department, The Department of Economics, would serve as a fund of information for all the several departments of government; The Departments of Education, Highways, Planning and Development and such-like.

Now, it may be that my presentation can be speeded, Mr. Speaker, if I were to ask the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) whether The Department of Economics will maintain the same relative position with respect to the other departments in the future as it has in the past. Will it serve as a research branch for all departments of government; and will it remain or is there any expectation that it will ever become the autonomous department that I once expressed should be the case, where all hon. members of the Legislature, for example, could go, for assistance, for assistance in research, for assistance in respect to statistical information that might be helpful to individual hon. members? I personally feel that there is a lot to be said for an independent Department of Economics that serves all departments and serves, in effect, all hon. members of the Legislature.

Now it may well be that the hon. Minister has given this problem some considerable thought and it may well be that there is an answer to my question, enunciating what I think are the advantages of an independent Department of Economics. I would appreciate the observations of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), The Department of Economics at the moment is broken down into four main branches, the finance branch; the economics and statistics branch; inter-governmental relations branch and general economics branch. Each one of these branches has its own specific responsibilities, but there is an inter-relation between them all.

Now the question that the hon. leader of the Opposition has asked is this: when these are combined into a new department, or combined or amalgamated into a department, will this new department as it will emerge continue to offer or offer in a more accelerated way—whichever way one wants to put it—whatever statistical information is at hand? Will the hon. members be advised of the kinds of studies that are being undertaken so that they be kept appraised of some of the major problems of the day and those which we might anticipate will involve us in the future, and the answer to that is "Yes."

I have in mind rather extensive re-organization for these departments, including The Department of Energy Resources and I think, frankly, the time at which I can best be brought to task for either handling this well or badly is when I present the estimates for all of these departments. Now I submit that traditionally that is the time, whether the Minister is conducting the affairs of his department properly or whether he is at large sufficiently or so forth, this is the time I think to bring him to task and also to make suggestions for progress and development in the future.

This is where I think the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) and the hon. leader of the Opposition both might make reference to these things. This will give me a couple of months with which to bring together three departments, to present to the House at that time what planning we do have in mind, how it can be done. There are a lot of people to be approached. I would be happy to send the hon. member a copy of the speech that I gave to the trade conference here in Toronto a couple of weeks ago which was well received, I understand, by labour and industry alike; and to give him some indication of the philosophy which is going to be behind this department. I think we can accomplish a very great thing. I just ask the hon. members to give me a few weeks and a little less ado.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, that is as good a point to rise as any, to pour a little oil on troubled waters when the man who is used to pouring the oil around here has gone elsewhere and is not here too often.

I do not intend to give the dynamic hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) any abuse at all, but I hope, sir, he would not consider it abuse from me if I said, in contradiction to my hon. friend from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), that what more dynamic person could he get to head up two departments, if not three. Before the government finishes they may give him five or six. But if I say that, sir, it is not through flattery, the desire to flatter him, but to be realistic about it.

Now, sir, the remark I did want to make to him was this. As all hon. members will know, this starts my third session and it seems to me that for reasons of convenience, perhaps from a pragmatic approach or perhaps because the government is imbued with the philosophy of empiricism, that every year, every year a couple of departments are combined. There does not seem to be any overall philosophy or a great deal of thought, for that matter, put into the conception of the overall functioning of government.

Mr. Speaker, may I approach it this way if what I have said to this point is unclear. Last session we appointed a committee to inquire into the organization of government and I was privileged to serve on that committee, as well as the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), representing the party in this part of the House. I do not recall, sir, under the chairmanship of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), I do not recall ever seeing the hon. Minister of Economic Development, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. We were never privileged, sir, at any time to hear any brief from him or any representations at any time.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite incorrect. The hon. gentleman and I had a conference right after one of the meetings out in the hall. Does the hon. member not remember when he spoke to me about somebody up in the north?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, I remember that well, I remember that well.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This followed the meeting the hon. member just said did not take place.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, no. I had not yet completed my sentence, which would explain the absence from the meeting which I imagine did not take place.

Laughter and interjections.

Mr. Sopha: Now, sir, I am merely saying this, and I can see now that I have to put it in the clearest terms for my hon. friend to understand and particularly the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) the liquor commissioner, whose thoughts no doubt are consumed with that $400 million business he is now running. But I say, sir, that at that committee on the organization of government we had no representations about the necessity of this.

Last year, from the pragmatic approach, we were talking a lot about federal-provincial relations. That was in vogue. The then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) had been down in Ottawa unsuccessfully trying to break loose the purse strings and bring something back for this province, which he did not. So then they obscured the real problem, or sought to obscure it, by changing the name of The Department of Economics; they changed that to Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations. Then at the same time they changed the name of The Department of Commerce and Development. I have to look around to get the assurance of what I say is correct, sir, from my hon. friends on my right here, because if hon. members do not keep a close eye they cannot keep up with what the names of these departments are—or were.

This year it is going to become Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and Department of Commerce and Development to be called The Department of Economics and Development. That is it, it says it right in black and white there.

My complaint, sir, is that I think anyone, almost anyone can see that this is the result of a most makeshift approach. I think it is fair to say, and one would not be accused of using exaggerated language to say, they do not know what they are doing. They do not know what they are doing at any particular time. I would go a long way—I would stop short, sir, of saying that this is the result of stimulus given the government by any particular individual who felt he did not have enough to do and wanted a little more to do—but I think, sir, that it shows, it demonstrates this. That as a member of the committee I referred to earlier, it demonstrates that the government itself does not have very much faith in that committee, or at least it would have apprised that committee before this bill was introduced of what its intentions were.

On the other hand, sir, I hope you will not say that I am straying from the subject at hand if I recall to your honour that we have at various times in this House said that The Department of Travel and Publicity should be made a branch of The Department of Commerce and Development. I reiterate that, sir. We have said that we do not see any justification for a separate Department of Travel and Publicity and perhaps—I do not know whether I am going to vote for this bill or not, I have not made up my mind whether to vote for it or not—but before this House, sir, is asked to finally pass upon it, perhaps the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—the hon. Prime Minister, sir, who I might say and I wished to say earlier, seated as he is, is a rose between two thorns—perhaps he will consider, sir, taking into account our suggestion that The Department of Travel and Publicity be included in The Department of Commerce and Development or made a branch of The Department of Economics and Development.

It would take, sir, a person who had a much greater command of the English language than your humble servant does, to then come up with an appropriate name for a combination of these three departments. If I am not mistaken the hon. Minister said a moment ago that he is trying to mould into one whole three departments already. I have added a fourth, and to come up with a name for the four departments. But I have long, sir, admired the ingenuity of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources and I think by tomorrow he could probably come up with something to present to this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I hope I can avoid being intoxicated with the exuberance of my own verbosity like the last speaker, but I do want to go back to one point that he did touch on in that flurry of words and that is the discussions on the principle involved in this bill, related to these two departments, that emerged in the select committee on government organization.

During the hearings of that committee it was pointed out that at approximately the level of 20 hon. Cabinet Ministers you begin to move into an unworkable and unwieldy kind of situation. As a matter of fact, in Great Britain when they moved beyond that they then had to try to get some more effective working arrangement by having an inner cabinet and some people out of the inner cabinet were just heads of departments.

Now, we have had some twenty-odd hon. Ministers, at this breaking-off point, for quite some time and there has been great need for re-organization. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) made some comment about this being a makeshift approach. I think this comment would have been very, very applicable in the original development of these departments. This, I think, was our problem. The economic department grew up like Topsy. Quite frankly, I think it was an incorporation of a private service for the last hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), who later dignified it as a department with an hon. Minister, I do not know that it really ever deserved the status of a separate ministry. I think it quite rightly belongs as part of this new department.

We are making some progress, at least theoretically, by bringing together departments that had some relationship to the same general area of work of the government. While we will have to bide our time to find out what the dynamic hon. Minister does in putting this department into operation, I think at least this step in bringing these makeshift arrangements together is a good one.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at the adjournment yesterday I advised you that I would take but a few minutes this afternoon and I intend to do exactly that.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Oliver, that the Motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House regrets:

1. That this government has failed deplorably to recognize the peril of the inroads of organized crime into the life of Ontario, and has failed to protect the citizens of this province from the activities of the criminal and the anti-social.

2. That the government's bad management of the province's finances resulted in the imposition of a sales tax and that this tax, ill-conceived and badly-timed, did produce a maximum of inconvenience to the taxpayer and a maximum of irritation for the retailer, when the plan calling for an exemption of $25 would have been far more effective.

3. That, as a result of the wasteful extravagance, unplanned spending and inefficiency of this government, notwithstanding the imposition of a sales tax, the public debt of this province has reached unparalleled heights, and has thereby placed an onerous mortgage on the future citizens of this province.

4. That the government, which has a responsibility to do everything in its power to provide an opportunity for every citizen to work, has failed to discharge this responsibility, with the result that gross unemployment debilitates the morale of the people of this province and attacks the stability of the economy, the community and the family.

5. That the government has failed to provide leadership in the solution of municipal financial problems by failing to institute a financial reform that would have as its key feature reduction of the property tax for education and assumption of a greater share of the total cost of education by the provincial government.

6. That in spite of the fact agriculture is still the backbone of the economy of this province, the economic position of the farmer has deteriorated to a point where his net income is the lowest in history. This government has failed to provide assurance to our sorely pressed farm community that government efforts will be directed towards preservation of the family farm as an efficient economic unit and that farmers, working individually and co-operatively with government help, will remain in control of the production and prime marketing of agricultural products.

7. That the lack of government leadership in the field of labour-management relations has brought its legislation into disrepute and thereby caused confusion and chaos in a vital area of our society and economy where clarity and order are imperative for the public good.

8. That the government's rigid policies towards the natural resource and manufacturing industries has failed to recognize the vital role it can play in assisting these industries to be competitive particularly by making available its special services for industrial expansion.

9. That the government has failed to initiate reform in Ontario's liquor laws, which, under its administration, have become the most widely disregarded and most thoroughly abused statutes in our province, and thereby have promoted a disrespect for law among our people.

10. That this government has failed to recognize that it has an obligation, by virtue of its jurisdiction over northern Ontario, to encourage economic development and habitation in the north.

11. That the government has failed its responsibility as the parent of the Metropolitan government of Toronto to improve the structure of that government and thereby provide for the persons in the Metropolitan area equity in assessment and taxation, greater balance in representation and leadership in the Metropolitan council that is responsible to the electorate.

12. That the government has failed to indicate advances in policies and programmes in the fields of health and welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I so move.

Applause.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) would permit a question?

With respect to the amendment he has just brought in and the use therein of the phrase:

assumption of a greater share of the total cost of education by the provincial government.

Does that indicate that the Liberal Party has departed from its declared policy of last year that the government should assume the whole cost of education in the province?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, do you wish me to answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: The members have heard the amendment and the amendment is now open for discussion.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to congratulate you upon your unfailing courtesy and skill in dealing with what are sometimes difficult moments in this Legislature. Your kindness and impartiality have earned for you, sir, the affection and respect of members on all sides of the House and I am happy to take this first formal opportunity of expressing my appreciation and thanks to you.

I would like also to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the reply to His Honour's address. The hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) departed from what might be termed the traditional approach to the House and I, for one, found it very refreshing. This is, after all, a form of free expression of opinion within the limits of the rules of the House and I would hope that every hon. member would feel free to express his views upon the many contentious issues of these days and times. After all, Mr. Speaker, it is in this way that we will have reflected in the deliberations of this body the thoughts, the ideals and the hopes, the opinions, the attitudes and aspirations of the many and divergent groups in our province who are represented by the members sitting here.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton) on his very clear exposition of many of the problems facing the government and the solutions which have been produced by my predecessor over the past few years.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the very lengthy statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in relation to law enforcement, gambling and crime both organized and unorganized, I first of all want to assert and to assure the people and this House that there is no matter which I place higher than the administration of justice. This is one of our basic cornerstones and it will be my objective to be sure that our laws are administered with integrity, with fairness, with vigour, and with justice.

I can assure hon. members that under my regime no crimesters or racketeers from other lands or from our own land will be allowed to operate with impunity. If such exist, I can assure hon. members that they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

It will also be my objective that the administration of justice and the operation of our law-enforcement agencies such as our police forces, will be operated with integrity and on the highest plane for both justice and efficiency. That is my objective and that is my pledge to the people of this province.

I assumed office on November 8, and it will be readily understood that there are very many problems to which I have been able to give only passing consideration. The subject matter of the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition, of course, has been current for some time past and therefore I have endeavoured to look into the facts as they are in the hands of the law-enforcement agencies, in a general way. At the moment I can only say that the statement which has been made by the hon. leader of the Opposition does not seem to discuss anything which the law-enforcement agencies and the provincial police and other police forces have not themselves uncovered and which are not already known in detail by the department and in a number of cases are the subject of prosecution at this moment.

Many of these matters are before the court of the land at the present time.

As to the ways and means by which the investigation of our law-enforcement agencies have come into the hands of others, including the hon. leader of the Opposition, this is something to which I will refer later.

I do not propose to say more than that from the information I have been able to peruse in the days before this session, and comparing the same mentally with what the hon. leader of the Opposition said yesterday, the information appears to come very largely, if not entirely, from police investigational sources. Much of it also is a re-statement of what has been said and adduced by the Crown at the instance of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), in cases which are already being prosecuted.

Concerning the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I am personally and under my direction having a complete analysis of that statement made. I shall have the same compared with action which has been taken in and out of the courts. On this personal investigation and examination I will make my judgment, which I shall recommend to the government as to whatever course should be taken.

I want to point out to the House that The Department of the Attorney-General and the law-enforcement agencies in this province have been very active indeed in these matters over at least the last two years. Very important proceedings have been taken, which not only could affect the liberty of certain accused persons, but which are very important from the standpoint of public interest. I can assure the House that I shall without delay, take the course which I have outlined and I can again assure this House, and through it the people of our province, that I shall leave no stone unturned to assure that British justice and its fearless enforcement will be my objective.

(Applause).

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer for a few moments to some of the economic factors affecting our province. Much has been accomplished in this province in the years of tremendous expansion which lie between the end of World War II and the beginning of the 1960's. There is no point in reciting the statistics of this period, but I think we must bear in mind that it should be the duty of this government and indeed, if the province is to survive, it will be an absolute necessity, that we continue our economic development. During the past five years our population increased by about 800,000 or 2.8 per cent per year, and we must anticipate as large a numerical increase in population during the next five years, although the projected rate of growth drops to about 2.4 per cent per year.

The rate of growth in gross national product, which has been about 4.2 per cent per year, has been higher than our rate of population growth. However, when we take into account price changes, there has actually been a slight decrease in gross national product in real terms per capita since 1956. If we are to continue our plans for progress we will have to accelerate the rate of expansion in our economy.

The total industrial production of Canada increased by just over eight per cent from 1956 to 1960. The year 1961 has brought a general upswing in economic activity and almost all our industries have been showing substantial increase.

For example, gold production is at an all-time high; nickel production is at an all-time high, and we expect a buoyant market for our mineral products in western Europe, which will support continued high levels in production in our mining operations. Pulp and paper production this year is expected to reach an all-time high. Saw-mill operations, on the other hand, were running well below the levels of 1959 and 1960 during the first half of this year, but since general housing construction has expanded it is expected that the second half of the year will produce near-record levels.

We can also take some encouragement from the fact that unemployment levels have been dropping and in Ontario in October were down to 4.7 of the work force when adjusted seasonally, which compares with and is well below the 6.6 per cent average for Canada as a whole and 6.8 per cent in the United States.

Another encouraging trend is the continuing rise in labour income. It has been increasing steadily since the post-war period and in 1960 totalled $18.5 billion in Canada, and $7.7 billion in Ontario. This represents nearly $4,000 per paid worker in Ontario as compared with just under $2,600 ten years ago, and just over $3,500 in 1956. Thus, even though there has been some slackening in the rate of growth in the economic activity during the past four or five years, Ontario workers are now earning an average of about $450 more per year than they did in 1956.

There is, however, as I have stated before, no cause for complacency about this situation. It has been estimated that we must create approximately 60,000 new jobs in Ontario alone each year for the next nine years. The creation of these new jobs is necessary to take account of the expansion of our population both through immigration and through natural growth.

Faced with problems of this magnitude which concern so intimately all of our people, I believe it is time for us as a province to take a completely new look at our position in the world of trade and commerce and our traditional position in relation to the federal government. Under the distribution of legislative powers at the time of Confederation, the provinces were given exclusive control over many important matters such as education, municipal institutions, public lands and natural resources, property and civil rights, administration of justice, and so on. The general clause included all matters of a local or private nature and over the years there has been a tendency, in my opinion, to think in terms of the provincial government as dealing primarily with matters of a local or private nature. On the other hand, the central or federal government was given responsibility for such matters as national defence, navigation and shipping, currency and coinage, commercial paper and banking and most important, the regulations of trade and commerce.

In my opinion this division of powers over the years has tended to reduce the extension of the activity of the provincial governments of Canada in matters of the development of foreign markets for the products of the provinces, although some efforts have been made in this direction. We are presently faced with certain problems throughout the world that will have a direct relationship and bearing on the economic growth and prosperity of this province. I think the time has come when we must play a much more vigorous and active role as a government than we have in the past. To promote this concept and to provide the administrative means of accomplishing these ends, mention was made in the Speech from the Throne regarding an Act of the Legislature to merge The Department of Economics with The Department of Commerce and Development—I think perhaps the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) anticipated me with his remarks earlier—in order to bring together that department which can do the necessary research in delineating the problems we face and the department which has the facilities for promoting various policies designed to rectify the difficulties. Legislation has already been introduced in the form of Bill No. 5, An Act to Amalgamate The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and The Department of Commerce and Development.

I should like to point out that there is a large area of co-operation which has been developed in the past few years between the federal government and ourselves to deal with these problems. As recently as a week ago Tuesday, there was a federal-provincial trade and industrial promotion conference held at the Queen Elizabeth building here in Toronto under the auspices of both levels of government. These conferences were developed, as far as Ontario is concerned, under the hon. Minister from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and certainly they have done a great deal to highlight the problems which we face. These matters will be debated more fully and be explained more fully to the Legislature during the consideration of the bill I have just mentioned, upon second reading of the bill and so on.

However, I would like to make it very clear that we are approaching this problem of planning for the future with the idea of utilizing to the greatest possible extent the brains, experience and ability that our province possesses in such abundance in four major fields; namely, labour, industry, agriculture and government, both provincial and municipal.

It is not our intention to set up rigid controls and to do planning by governments which will direct these elements within our free economy. Rather it is our intention to provide the leadership in bringing together these dynamic and powerful elements in our society so that they may jointly produce answers to the problems that face us. As I say, these matters will be dealt with much more fully in the course of the proceedings of this House in the next few weeks but this is the fundamental position from which our efforts will proceed.

Closely allied to this programme is the development of our educational system, particularly the development of technical and commercial training. As I have mentioned, it is forecast that we will require 60,000 new jobs per year for the next nine years. Many of these jobs must be provided for the young people who are presently in our elementary and secondary schools and it is necessary that their education be geared to the type of economic life they will face when the time comes for them to leave the educational world and enter the commercial or industrial life of our province.

With this in mind we have instituted a very broad programme of curriculum revision, particularly in some areas of the province which, in the past, have found it very difficult to provide anything other than a straight academic type of education for their young people.

Perhaps it would be of interest if I were to outline the origin of this reorganization. The plan results from careful consideration of the adequacy of existing curriculum and programmes of study in relation to the diverse needs of shifting types of pupils. Secondly, it resulted from a consideration of the educational requirements of our young people in relation to the employment situation and changing procedures in industry.

As I have already stated, it appears to me to be fundamental that we must keep our educational system completely flexible so that it may not only provide our young people with the basic education required for a happy and contented life in our society, but also, we must educate them to fill the needs in industry as it develops.

Thirdly, we have been greatly concerned over a good number of years about the number of drop-outs from our secondary schools and the loss that this entails to our society as well as to the pupils concerned.

Fourthly, it arose from the consideration of the desirability in a shift in emphasis from what has been, broadly speaking, a one-course situation with respect to the branches of study offered in the several types of Ontario secondary schools. In effect we considered it necessary to provide a greater variety of opportunity for young people in secondary schools so that they would not all be forced to take the same course and continue in the same branch of study. This means that we will attempt to provide for every secondary school pupil the type of education that will best develop his vocational capabilities and will best promote for him security of employment for himself and his family as he takes his place in the economic life of our province.

I am not going to go into the specific details of the school programmes as these can be considered in detail at the time of the submission of the estimates of The Department of Education. Suffice it to say that for the purposes of this debate that we have developed three main branches of study which will represent major differences in the interests, special abilities and prospective careers of pupils who are entering our secondary schools.

These three branches are broad fields of preparation for different types of education and are not to be understood as requiring the pupil to decide early and specifically upon his life work. One of the problems, of course, which has disturbed some parents is the thought that their children have to make a very early decision upon their life work. This is not so. The pupil entering high school will select one of the three branches on the basis of special interest or possible future career when he leaves grade eight; the grade nine year is exploratory and he may take as an option one subject from another branch of study. This will facilitate his transfer, if he so desires, and if he has completed his grade nine year successfully, to another programme of another branch.

It has been, as I have mentioned, our endeavour to keep the programme as flexible as possible and yet if we are to offer a variety of courses we must have decisions. I can assure the hon. members of this House that we will in developing these courses keep all the flexibility that is possible but, as you can understand, if we are to have anything other than a single choice system, why certainly decisions are going to have to be made at some stage of a child's educational career.

Hon. members can understand also that the function of guidance and direction, and the education of parents in the possibilities of these courses, becomes of paramount importance, and the strengthening of this branch of our educational system is being proceeded with now.

It is interesting to note that we presently have applications for approximately 175 projects to be constructed under the educational training agreement with Ottawa, and at least one-half of these are in areas which have never offered commercial or vocational training on this scale to the young people of these areas before. Now this, to me, is a very encouraging feature of this entire programme.

Many people are concerned about the increased emphasis on vocational and commercial training. It is my opinion that this emphasis is long overdue and when we were presented with an opportunity to accomplish these great things in a relatively short time, we seized the opportunity with enthusiasm. I do not think that the flow of students into our traditionally academic courses will in any way be affected.

After all, one must realize that the total enrollment for elementary and secondary schools has more than doubled since 1945 to a total of 1.4 million people in 1960. It is impossible for us to expect that all these young people will wish to take the traditional course. In addition, through a centralization of secondary schools by the creation of high school districts and in the improvements in our roads and increase in transportation facilities, we are now offering secondary school education to a larger group of our young people than have ever enjoyed it before. Also a larger percentage of these young people are staying in school longer, thus we have a constantly increasing percentage of a constantly increasing numerical group in our high schools. I think that it is quite obvious that the time has come to develop additional courses to suit a great many of these young people who will not necessarily have university in mind.

There are many other facets of education with which I will deal at a later time, namely, the development of our trade schools, the development of our technological institutes and our assistance to universities. These matters will be dealt with during my estimates and I shall now proceed to some other matters arising from the great programme outlined by His Honour's address to this Legislature.

In connection with the development of hydro-electric power I would like to say that the commission has been pushing ahead with the development of additional supplies of power and energy in all parts of the province. Thermal generating units including the Thunder Bay station at Fort William, the Lakeview generating station, are being constructed and hydro power stations in the James Bay watershed are underway or in the planning stage. It is estimated that the total additional capacity of these new plants will be about 2.4 million kilowatts; or in terms that we are able to understand, enough to meet the power requirements of all the homes in this province. Work is also under construction on nuclear power stations at Rolph-ton and Douglas Point.

Legislation has already been introduced by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) to provide for the amalgamation of Hydro's northern Ontario properties with the southern system. The hon. Minister has already dealt with this matter at some length in a statement made at the time of the introduction of these bills and of course after being thoroughly examined in the select committee on energy these bills will be fully debated in the House and there is little that I can add at this time.

However, I would like to point out that this amalgamation should result in a more economical development of electrical resources across the province and should result in a better balanced system, which will enable the northern section to withstand economic swings and fluctuations caused by nature, together with a larger reserve of power for contingencies.

Now, hon. members will recall that on April 7, 1960, my predecessor announced to this House the formation of a special technical committee on portable pensions. This committee was asked to study and make recommendations for strengthening the existing programme of pensions and removing impediments to the employment of the older workers.

The committee is under the joint chairmanship of Mr. G. E. Gathercole, Deputy Minister of Economics, and Professor D. C. MacGregor of the University of Toronto. The other members are Mr. J. A. Tuck, managing director and general counsel of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association; Mr. R. E. G. Davis, executive director of the Canadian Welfare Council; Professor C. E. Hendry, of the University of Toronto; and Professor R. M. Clark, of the University of British Columbia.

At the last session of this House the summary report of the committee was tabled. On February 15 last the committee appeared before a special committee of this Legislature and presented evidence of its findings and recommendations to that point. Because of the complexity of this subject, the committee was asked to continue its work and to prepare with the co-operation of legal counsel, a draft bill which would contain the essence of its recommendations. Mr. John G. McDonald, a Toronto lawyer, was engaged for this purpose.

At the conference of provincial Premiers held in Charlottetown last August, my predecessor presented the draft bill together with the second report of the committee to the Premiers of the other provinces. Active interest in this problem was shown by four or five provinces, some of which had begun similar studies on their own. They have been invited to make use of our committee to obtain advice and a fuller explanation of the committee's recommendations.

Members of this Legislature have received copies of the draft bill and the second report. I should like to recommend that they be studied carefully by all members. The second report which was prepared largely by Professor MacGregor provides a background of information which is essential for anyone seriously interested in the subject. I might say that both of these documents received a very wide public response, almost 4,000 copies of the draft bill have been circulated and well over 2,000 copies of the second report.

As this study is a pioneer work in this field in North America, requests for information about it have come in from all parts of this continent as well as from western Europe.

Throughout the autumn the committee has been engaged in preparing a set of regulations to accompany the draft bill, as well as making certain revisions to the bill itself which have become necessary as a result of outside reaction to the first draft.

Later on in this session an opportunity will be provided for a detailed study and discussion of the committee's proposals. It may be that a special committee of this House should be appointed at that time. In any event, I hope that hon. members will study the work which this committee has already produced and we will provide a suitable forum for discussion in due course.

To deal with the ever-growing registration of motor vehicles in our province, the highway construction programme undertaken by the government has been unprecedented. A total capital and ordinary appropriation for the present fiscal year for all highway purposes totals $270 million which includes $75 million for municipal subsidies. At the present time expenditures on construction of development roads are running about $8 million per year.

Work on our superhighways is being pushed ahead very rapidly and at the end of this year the total mileage on Highway 401 will be 386 miles with a total of 84 miles having been added during this past year. Work is also underway on the first stage of Highway 403 which runs from the Queen Elizabeth Way to Highway No. 2 in the Burlington area. I note also that work has begun on the new 405 Highway which will run between the Homer Skyway and the new international bridge to New York at Queenston.

We are developing seven new highway programmes which will be of benefit to all the people of this province. Plans are underway to construct new roads between major airports and the centres which they serve. The earliest possible start is planned on new routes between Malton and Toronto and between the Uplands Airport and the City of Ottawa.

By way of assisting municipalities with road construction programmes, the department is encouraging municipalities to initiate traffic studies and in addition to paying 75 per cent of the cost of these studies the department makes technical personnel available to assist in the compilation of the figures and studies that are being done. These are co-operative ventures in research to predict the future transportation requirements of a given area.

In addition, The Department of Highways in conjunction with Economics is carrying out considerable research in the fiscal policies to provide for highways, roads and streets throughout Ontario. We plan also to introduce legislation at this session to increase to 90 per cent from 80 per cent the present subsidy which is paid on bridges and culverts on any connecting links in the case of towns and villages, excepting separated towns with population of over 2,500.

The approach of the government toward highway construction has had and will continue to have two purposes. First, to extend the highway system which is the direct responsibility of the province, and second, to increase assistance to be given to municipalities in order to enable them to meet their road and street construction cost.

Mr. Speaker, we in the government are very much interested in challenges of all kinds which appear before us today: economic challenges, social challenges that are facing us as a people in this present era. However, I think we might bear in mind that challenges are nothing new for Canadians and down through our history, problems which were no less difficult in their own day arose frequently, but were solved successfully so that the task of nation building could proceed without obstruction.

This happened despite diverse backgrounds of interests of the people who settled and developed this province. In fact, it happened to a great extent because of those diverse backgrounds and interests and the wide and rich variety of talents and skills which flowed from it.

In Ontario diversity has produced rewards, not conflicts. We must always be vigilant to ensure that this fortunate state of affairs remains with us and that every individual regardless of race, creed or colour, has a full and equal opportunity to direct his life toward what he thinks to be the most rewarding objective. That is the purpose of the human rights legislation which has been placed on the statute books of this province during the past 17 years. It should be a matter of pride to every hon. member of this House that our province has been a leader in the campaign against racial and religious discrimination. I wish to associate myself firmly and unreservedly with the policy upon which our human rights legislation is based.

(Applause).

Through the efforts of the Ontario human rights commission and with the wholehearted support of churches and schools, industry, trade unions, press and radio and a wide variety of community organizations, great progress has been made in winning understanding and acceptance of the aims of this legislation. We can be proud of what has been accomplished but there is no reason for us to be complacent. There are still areas of prejudice in our community life which command our concern and it remains the task of individuals and organizations to strive to still higher levels of improvement in the field of human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for a few moments about the retail sales tax which came into force on September 1, and I might say that the treasury is now receiving its second month's remittances from registered vendors.

Dislocation of business by reason of introduction of the tax appears to have been very slight. In the original instructions going to vendors, they were asked to keep records of gross sales, taxable sales and the amount of tax they collect. This appeared to impose some hardship and the requirements have been reduced so that only records of gross sales and the tax collectible will be necessary, although the vendors will be expected to keep a proper file of all purchase invoices and inventory records.

At the same time, the field men from the department are asking vendors to suggest methods to them whereby they may account for the tax collected on a formula basis, provided the formula is approved by the sales tax branch. By this I mean it is possible in some types of enterprise to work out a formula whereby the gross sales are so much, and over a period of time the percentage of gross sales can be established as being that portion of sales which is taxable and the tax can be computed on that amount, and of course it will have to be checked periodically by the sales tax branch.

It is this type of formula computation of tax which we are aiming at in order to relieve the retail storekeeper of the burden that has been imposed upon him, by keeping records to date. These matters, as I say, are under constant review.

In addition to these improvements, vendors who operate on a seasonal basis, such as summer resorts, will be relieved of the necessity of filing returns for periods during which they are not actively engaged in business. All vendors are being requested to advise the department of the months they will not be operating so that the records in the department may be suitably adjusted.

Rules and regulations are being reviewed in the light of present experience—and once again I reiterate that this tax came into effect only on September 1—and comments have been received from a host of retailers throughout the province in order to provide for ease in the requirements, all with the idea of simplifying collection procedures.

In addition certain of the exemptions are being examined very carefully in order to correct any anomalies that may presently exist. I can assure the House that all these matters will be kept under constant review in order to reduce to a minimum the inconvenience caused by the addition of this tax.

However, I would like to point out to the hon. members that the purpose of imposing this tax is to collect revenue which is needed if we are to maintain our standards of service in the fields of education, highways, welfare, health, and all the other myriad services which the government provides. It is ridiculous to impose a tax and then immediately to ask for exemptions to such an extent that the effectiveness of the tax in producing the revenue required is destroyed. There is no jurisdiction of which I am aware which imposes a sales tax which has a broader list of exemptions than those contained in the Act establishing this tax.

While I realize how politically attractive it is to offer exemptions to various sections of the population and on various classes of goods, I can assure hon. members that in the long run it will only create and perpetuate inequities.

Mr. Speaker, the government of the province of Ontario has always been energetically interested in every activity which can serve the goals of our agricultural industry and which can increase the opportunity for, and the income of our farmers. In recent years there have been expansions in all the main branches of The Department of Agriculture to further the services the government is giving our farmers.

An indication of the extent to which the interest of our farmers have been served, is the fact that the cash income of Ontario farmers has remained above 1960 during the first half of 1961. Present indications are that for the whole year, the farm cash income will continue above 1960, as well as over the average of the past five years. This compares very favourably with the development of the country as a whole.

The government of the province is interested in preserving the family farm, for the rural economy is still the backbone of our province.

I should point out that a healthy and stable agriculture does not depend merely on the number of acres in a farm. For example, a profitable livelihood can be obtained from a market garden which is only a relatively few acres in extent and located near a larger city. The income per acre varies a great deal on different types of farms. When hogs are raised or hens provide the main source of income, for instance, the income bears no necessary relationship to the number of acres, for feed may be raised or purchased if the farm is not sufficiently large to supply it all. On the other hand, on some types of farms, such as those engaged in raising beef cattle, even 100 acres might not be sufficient as beef requires a lot of roughage of a kind that cannot be shipped very far without the expense rising too much to be economical.

These are all considerations which are important and it is impossible to state that the success or failure of any farm depends on any particular acreage, since the acreage required for a good livelihood varies so greatly according to the type of crop grown or animal being raised.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some other matters I had thought I might refer to, but I think I will leave these for another day. Many of the matters I have mentioned this afternoon, of course, will be debated much more fully as time goes on, and I would direct a little more attention to some comments that have already been made by hon. members of the Opposition.

Applause.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before I proceed with what I am prepared to say I would like to make two brief comments with regard to the initial portion of the comments of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts).

If the hon. Prime Minister is going to have a personal investigation of the problem of organized crime, in effect what he has said is that he is going to move in at least to some degree on the department of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this is long overdue. Somebody has needed to move in, because this department has been guilty of a combination of neglect and mismanagement. In fact the real problem, of course, was it would not face up to even the existence of this problem of organized crime and therefore, of course, was not willing and able to come to grips with it.

So, if the hon. Prime Minister is in effect going to move in and start doing some of the jobs that the hon. Attorney-General has not been doing, well, very good; a little late, but very good.

Now the second comment is that I am a little disturbed by the tendency of the hon. Prime Minister to dismiss all that was presented in this House yesterday by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) as being merely—and I am using my phraseology, but I do not think it is inaccurate—a rehash of what has appeared in the papers, appeared in evidence, that has been adduced by the Crown and presented in various court cases.

The thing that disturbs me about that, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. Prime Minister has himself become guilty to a degree of the same complacency in making that kind of a comment. Because along with the evidence that the hon. leader of the Opposition presented—much has been known for quite some time, to all those people who have been on top of this issue, and there is some more I would like to add when I get to the appropriate comments in my own remarks—but along with that, there were other things, that I do not think the hon. Prime Minister can dismiss in the fashion that he has done.

For example, hon. members had the suggestion that the hon. Attorney-General—the only conclusion that one can make—is that the hon. Attorney-General stepped in at the very critical stages of the investigation with regard to the O.P.P. and the efforts of Constable Scott. Now this is extremely serious and this cannot be dismissed just as a rehash.

For example, we have had these efforts to corrupt members of the judiciary, magistrates, in the city of Toronto. I have been absolutely astounded that statements appear under the by-line of responsible reporters in this city with a backing of the papers, and there is an echoing silence from government just as though somebody had said that Monday follows Sunday—nothing more important than that. And here hon. members have a suggestion that there have been bribes even up to the extent of $50,000, as far as one of the magistrates was concerned.

In other words, there have been too many things that suggest that there is a serious threat to the very nature of our society, if I may borrow the phraseology of Professor Morton. This is the kind of thing to which the government has not yet got close enough to recognize its serious proportions. As a matter of fact, I was just flipping through the report on syndicated gambling in New York State, and I recall the phrase there that I think is not inapplicable as far as this government is concerned. The hon. Prime Minister himself to a degree is guilty of it.

We cannot longer afford the luxury of ignoring the menace of professional gambling and all that flows from professional gambling.

The hon. Attorney-General has done this, and if the hon. Prime Minister is going to dismiss everything that was presented in this House yesterday, and more that will be coming, as a rehash, he too is guilty of the same kind of approach.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me go back to the pattern of my remarks that I had prepared. In the traditional fashion, of course, I not only must, but I very enthusiastically, extend to you my best wishes and my sympathies for the task that you have in maintaining order in this House.

I also, have to extend congratulations to a rather lengthy list of Cabinet Ministers, and like the hon. member for Toronto-St. George (Mr. Lawrence) I am not going to go through them one by one because this would be rather a wearying thing.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this process of Cabinet shuffling is one of continuing fascination. Essentially, in so far as we have seen it of recent years, essentially it is a game of musical chairs, a sort of shuffling around of the various posts among the Ministers, but it has interesting variations in it. Some are on their way in, others are on their way out. This one had the added pain that some who thought they were on the way in, discovered that they were really on the way out and have not yet figured out exactly what struck them. However, I congratulate them all—those who are on the way in and those who are on the way out and those who are not sure which way they are headed at the present time.

I now turn to extend my congratulations to the mover and the seconder but I am not going to do it in the fulsome fashion that is normally done. Because, Mr. Speaker, I wonder when we are going to get to a stage—one of the hon. members did break with precedent here—when the mover and the seconder to the Speech from the Throne can deal with some of the issues that are pre-occupying the people of this province, instead of an endless and fulsome heaping of praise upon their fellows and their party.

As a matter of fact, I am emboldened to make this kind of a comment this year. I have sometimes wondered—perhaps I am a little bit unsympathetic towards the great work of this government, perhaps I do not see it in its full and rounded proportions, perhaps I am biased. But after the speeches were over the other day I happened to be chatting with a certain member on the government side—I shall never reveal his name because both his safety and his survival in the party would be seriously threatened—he would belong to those, quite rightly, who would be on the way out! But his comment was that all speeches should be restricted to three superlatives.

Even he was getting just a little bit sick of this outpouring of congratulations upon each other. That is the kind of sentiment, I must confess, that I share.

However, I do want to make a comment about the hon. member who moved the motion. The hon. member for Toronto-St. George is by nature a rebel, he has great difficulty in accommodating himself to living within the Tory Party. That I can understand.

An hon. member: He bet on the wrong horse though.

Mr. MacDonald: He bet on the wrong horse, you bet, but some of his remarks were refreshing. But even when his remarks were refreshing he always tends to indulge in exaggerations that border on the puerile. My colleague in the House has dealt with some of them that he chose to make outside the House rather than inside the House. I just want to deal with one he did make inside the House—his comments on the Royal York strike.

He started out by saying he was in sympathy with the strikers. Well, Mr. Speaker, the strikers will be pardoned, after they read all of his remarks, if they make some such comment as that old one that "my enemies I can live with and cope with, but God protect me from my friends." Because he started out saying he was in sympathy with them and then he went on to express his own personal judgment that they had made a mistake in the timing when they started their strike.

This was the only criticism that he had to make—that they had chosen the wrong time. In other words, he from his great experience in the trade union movement and his great experience in coping with a corporation like the C.P.R. and of work within a hotel, he presumed to say that he knows more than they—they were wrong in choosing their time. From that point on he really cut loose.

They were idiotic, their tactics were idiotic. He then described them as bull-headed, and he finally concludes by saying "a pox on both their houses."

So this man who started out by being basically in sympathy with the union ends up with "a pox on both their houses." I must say, Mr. Speaker, it was one of the best mugwumpish efforts I have ever heard in this House. He certainly was on both sides and I am sure he was not too surprised when he picked up the Globe and Mail the next morning that the point in his remarks that got the headline was that the union in the Royal York was bull-headed.

Well, that is rather typical of the way he deals with these issues.

However, I will have to sympathize with him from this point forward—in having to get something dynamic out of the Throne Speech. Because, Mr. Speaker, this Throne Speech in my view wandered wearily for about four thousand words and then it came up with such earth-shaking pronouncements as commending the federal government for looking into health insurance.

Now, I grant hon. members that is rather difficult for a mover and a seconder to get very excited about that kind of a Throne Speech. In fact, the whole tone was a continuation of that which we saw and heard so much of in the Tory leadership campaign—pompous words parading across the landscape in search of a single new idea, and they did not come up with any new idea. As a matter of fact they thought they came up with a new idea at their convention—in that programme committee—the new idea that got some headlines in sympathetic papers, to the effect that they were going to bring in a provincial bill of rights.

New, Mr. Speaker?

Well, 14 years ago, in that banner province of Saskatchewan, Tommy Douglas introduced a provincial bill of rights. And here it is a new idea! However, it was so new that they could not grasp and retain it, so sometime between the leadership convention, some three weeks ago, and the Throne Speech, this new idea got lost and it did not even turn up in the Throne Speech.

There was another point which emerged in the debates of the mover and the seconder—their comments with regard to the Tory convention and their eulogizing because of its being so democratic. Well, Mr. Speaker, I concede that the leadership contest in that convention had all the appearance of at least a wide open battle. But that, of course, is what made it so exceptional.

If the hand that had directed the organization in the Conservative Party for more than ten years had still been around, I wonder how much even of an appearance of democracy there would have been in the leadership contest. I venture to predict that procedures would be pretty cut-and-dried.

But even if one concedes this, the convention provided an illuminating revelation of the limitations of the Tory concept of democracy in party politics. Grattan O'Leary once stated—after the last two national leadership conventions, when he was asked what he thought of the policy resolution that had been passed —that they were not worth the paper they were written on. And he went on to add, that in the old parties—and he lumped them both together—it is the right and the prerogative of the leader to lay down policy.

Now the thing that interested me in this recent Conservative convention is that clearly the delegates accepted this as the right approach. They were not interested in policy. They simply were not interested when it was under discussion. In fact, their two policy meetings, insofar as they were reported in the press, were epic displays of mass non-participation. Out of 1,780 delegates there were 55 attended one meeting and some 40 turned up at another one. And instead of a discussion on policy matters, Mr. Speaker, apparently, if the news reports be correct, it degenerated into a verbal slug fest between Fred Gardiner and Charlotte Whitton. Now that apparently is the Tory substitute for a discussion or democracy in the shaping of policy.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): What was done at the New Democratic Party?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) should just come up and view what we did at the N.D.P. And the people who came cynically to view what happened at the N.D.P. conceded that there were never fewer than 2,000 present in the coliseum when we were discussing policy and there was a vigorous and a lively participation in it. And as was pointed out the floor was in control and repeatedly sent back things that the people at the head table, or on the platform, had decided.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Did Mr. Douglas confirm it all?

Mr. MacDonald: Confirm all what?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All the policies set?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get into a debate on this.

However, I have been critical of the Conservatives and I want now to commend the hon. Prime Minister. I was very interested in the way he carried on his campaign and successfully won the leadership. He very seldom revealed what his policies were, but at one meeting—and I am almost wondering whether or not he was unaware of the fact that the press were there—he did discuss a little bit of policy along with some other things.

He was talking to the young Progressive-Conservatives on the campus at the University of Toronto. And I could hardly believe my eyes—although I repeat again I want to commend him—when the news story came out because it was headed: “Something different—N.D.P. will change politics says Robarts”.

Apparently what happened was that one of the students, in the question period, asked the hon. Prime Minister designate—to-be—the embryonic Premier, whatever would be the correct description of him at that point—“How do you differentiate between Conservative and Liberal policies? To me it often seems just a matter of personalities and policies thrown together for elections.” Well, the hon. Prime Minister replied, according to the Toronto Daily Star, in this fashion:

The old clear-cut definitions have tended to blur over the years. It is one of the problems we have in this country in our political system. Opposition parties tend to offer just more rather than anything really different. Now we have a new party coming up which is going to introduce I think some new policies. It will mould the old doctrinaire C.C.F. and the political arm of organized labour and should come up with something different.

Well, I want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not say better, I said different.

Mr. MacDonald: All right, different, very well. I want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister for his basic political realism.

He acknowledges (a) that there is no difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives, and this is part of our problem in politics in this country; and secondly, he then proceeds to say that the new party is going to bring out something different, and that this development will be good. However, in making this kind of a comment, Mr. Speaker, he of course is following in the footsteps of his predecessor who also had elements of realism on occasion—though he hid them a bit more when he was talking about topics of this nature.

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) a year or so ago got into a private discussion with a visiting Australian political scientist who subsequently wrote a book. In this book he describes the things on the Canadian scene that attracted his attention most, and the one that he put very close to the top of the list was the emergence of a new party on the Canadian scene. But he ended up by quoting

Premier Leslie Frost of Ontario who told him this:

Mind you, I think you are right in suggesting that the next 25 years in Canada will see the emergence of an increasingly stratified conflict between a Conservative-Liberal or a Liberal-Conservative party of the right and some sort of Socialist party of the left.

That is basic realism, with regard to what is happening on the Canadian scene at the present time.

However, I want to go back to this Y.P.C. speech that the hon. Prime Minister gave on the campus of the University of Toronto, because here he breached his normal procedure of not stating policy and made two observations. Both were rather indicative of his approach and the approach of his government.

The first one was that he was not in favour of free university education. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of some arguments against free university education. I hasten to add that I have never found them convincing. I think that in this province and in this nation the development of human resources is one of our greatest challenges and if we do not succeed in facing up to this challenge, we are not going to develop this province and this nation. But I cannot conceive of how we are going to develop our human resources unless we take the dollar sign off the educational opportunities at the higher educational level.

What really puzzled me was not just the assertion of the hon. Prime Minister, that he was against this, but his reason for being against it. According to the Toronto Telegram—which of course always reports accurately and fairly on anything to do with the Conservative Party, and therefore I feel quite certain in accepting their version of it—he said he does not believe that free university education “gibes with free enterprise.”

If the hon. Prime Minister will forgive me for putting this very bluntly, Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty fatuous comment. I suspect it accurately reflects this idea that for some reason or other you cannot give higher education to the people on a free basis because it does not gibe with free enterprise when obviously education in the 20th century ever since the year 1900 has had nothing to do with free enterprise.

As a matter of fact, it is a comment which is in exactly the same spirit and approach as Tories were uttering 100 or 150 years ago, when they were arguing against free education at the secondary and the primary level of school. A child received an education if he happened to be a member of a family where the pocketbook permitted it and he could go to private school, but otherwise a child became part of the great inarticulate masses who did the work and lived and died in society.

The same kind of approach today seeks to keep the dollar sign on higher educational opportunities. Cautious Toryism. This is the only way it can be described—the role the Tory party has played traditionally through history, that of a brake on the wheel of progress. We need progress but the function of the Tory party is to make it slow rather than as fast as is necessary to meet the needs of our day.

In the same spirit of cautious Toryism, you have the second comment with regard to policy advanced by the hon. Prime Minister. “A health insurance plan is at the present time beyond Ontario’s financial capability,” he said—at a time when the province of Saskatchewan under the leadership of Tommy Douglas is moving once again to pioneer—they are going to pay for it, as they did for 14 years on hospital insurance, while you dragged your feet here and would not do it unless you got help from Ottawa. They will pioneer it and they will force it so that a few years sooner the whole of the nation will get it as a result of their efforts.

“Some time we may have to consider it,” Mr. Robarts added. Cautious Toryism once again.

Mr. Speaker, if there was any comment needed to underline the need for a new party in this province and across this country, I think it was a comment of that one speech of the new hon. Prime Minister of this province (a) that there is no difference between the Liberals and Conservatives, that we must have something different, and I can assure him besides being different it will be better. In fact it will be so much better that five or ten years from now you will accept what we are now proposing—in the same way that has been going on for the last generation or more. Also, of course, that he is going to pursue this policy of cautious Toryism.

However, Mr. Speaker, to further proceed with the main theme of the Throne Speech as it was brought down. It was a theme which is now central to Tory propaganda, both federal and provincial, that good times are back again. Unemployment figures are minimized. We have John Diefenbaker going around the country, with all the melodrama of which he is so capable, accusing those who face the facts as gloom-mongers. The Throne Speech picked up this rosy picture of development.

This may be good politics, Mr. Speaker, but it is not good economics. Just let me quote from a source which I do not think even the Tories can dismiss as being guilty of gloom-mongery. Following the recent meeting of the chamber of commerce in the city of Halifax the Financial Post appeared on October 7 with a front page editorial which led off like this:

Canada is in a basic long-term trouble and nothing less than really first-rate thinking and high courage will set us again on the path of progress.

That was the very sober gist of several thoughtful statements made by Canadians of stature and great experience this week.

In addition to that comment, Mr. Speaker, just last Saturday I was interested to note in an article on the financial page of the Toronto Daily Star comments carrying the predictions of two reputable economic analysts in this country, Dr. D. E. Armstrong of Economics Research, of Montreal, and Allan Beckett of W. A. Beckett Associates, of Toronto.

"How high will the business upturn be?" was the question that was put to these men, and the gist of their reply was, "Not very high or very long". In fact, Dr. Armstrong put it this way: "I think this good growth will last until at least January or February."

The last year, Mr. Speaker, has been marked by one very remarkable achievement. It is one to which one of my colleagues made reference earlier today—though he was having difficulty in meeting the requirements of your ruling at the time. I refer to conversions of almost mass productions to the idea of economic planning.

E. P. Taylor is calling for a federal ministry of planning. W. S. Kirkpatrick, who is the new president of the chamber of commerce and the head of Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company, declares that our present plight is the result of a lack of planning, and now we have been deluged by Macaulay plans. There are plans here; plans there; plans everywhere, but, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you that there are two kinds of plans.

On the one hand there is state assistance for a continuation of big business planning and that is what most of these spokesmen are really calling for. On the other hand there is genuine economic planning with the government giving a vigorous lead in mapping out the objectives of the nation and then developing the most effective working partnership of private, public and co-operative enterprise to meet those objectives.

In the latter, the genuine kind of planning, full employment and the welfare of the people are the stated objectives of economic activity. In the other, profits are still the prime motive and full employment, when achieved, is merely the fortuitous by-product of this kind of planning.

Indeed, the hon. leader of the Opposition, one time last year in his very frank and honest way, put the point well. He declared that he was opposed to economic planning, for that is socialism, said he. What he is in favour of is economic co-ordination.

The Toronto Star editorial came out with another version of it the other day—economic direction. Well, Mr. Speaker, economic co-ordination or economic direction is merely a nice euphemism for not doing enough to meet the situation, which is what both the Liberals and Conservatives will do—and as a result we shall continue to have high levels of unemployment in this country.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, from this main theme to consider the position of two of the main groups in our economy at the present time, the agricultural industry and labour. First let me deal with the agricultural industry.

Agricultural industry today, as the hon. Prime Minister acknowledged in his comments, is faced with rather a serious position, if not a new one. It is the product of this relentless cost-price squeeze which has been going on since the peak of wartime prosperity that was reached in 1951. Periodically we hear from those who want to project the rosy side of the picture that there has been an increase—a fractional increase it should be added—in cash income of farmers. But what they constantly neglect to emphasize is the even greater increase in the cost of production that the farmer has to contend with, so that the net income of farmers continues to drop. The result of this, Mr. Speaker, the long-term result of it, I think, is something we should take a look at. And I must confess that I was impressed with discovering it for myself anew this past summer when I took the opportunity, for reasons that I will not bother the House with at the present time, to visit in rural areas throughout most of southern Ontario—indeed in all of the counties from Ottawa to your own home areas of Essex, Mr. Speaker.

I recall on one occasion when I happened to be in the Seaway valley that I was speaking with a person in one of the little communities some 15 miles away from where the great development of the Seaway had taken place. I was rather startled to be informed by this person, who had a very close relationship with a little church in that area, that there was not a single parishioner in this little church that had indoor plumbing in their homes. When I went away and pondered this, it struck me, Mr. Speaker, as being a very illuminating and rather sad comment on the society in which we live. Here was a little community no more than 15 miles away from an area where by the application of modern skills and technology they had altered the historic course of a mighty river, they had dammed the waters as they flowed from the Great Lakes down into the sea and had made a lake and a power plant which is producing some two million horsepower each year to go out and run our industry and light our homes. Yet 15 miles away they had not succeeded in applying sufficient of these skills and modern technology to get indoor plumbing into the homes of the families which, not only themselves, but their fathers and their grandfathers before them, had pioneered and done the work in this country.

As I pondered this kind of thing even further, Mr. Speaker, I recalled a feeling of disbelief on my own part when I read some of the results years ago of the census that was taken in 1951. I have a recollection, for example, of the fact that there were almost a quarter of the homes in this country that they claimed did not have indoor plumbing. So I went back to check on this and I came across some figures that I think the House would be interested in.

I emphasize for the moment that these are 1951 census figures. They had three breakdowns in the statistics that they gave for the province of Ontario—these are not national, they are for the province of Ontario. The first one had to do with no inside piped water into the homes and, without going into the figures themselves—I will just give the percentages—the results of the census in 1951 were that 18 per cent of the homes in the province of Ontario had no inside piped water.

When you moved from the overall figure in the province to the position in rural Ontario, the 18 per cent had risen to 54 per cent with no piped water in their homes; and if you moved from the rural to the farm sector of the rural community—in other words eliminating the towns and villages—59 per cent of them had no piped water in their homes.

There was a second indication of living standards—homes with no bathtubs or shower. Believe it or not, they were 27 per cent of the homes in the overall in the province of Ontario. But again when you moved out into rural Ontario the 27 had jumped to 68 per cent, and when you moved to the farm section of rural Ontario the 68 per cent had jumped once again to 74 per cent without bathtubs or showers.

Then there was another paragraph which you might be interested to know, dealing with toilet facilities. This was broken down, Mr. Speaker, into four columns. The first one was “flush toilet, exclusive,” the next one was “flush toilet, shared,” and the next one was “chemical toilet,” and the next one was delightfully referred to as “others.”

What I want to refer to for the moment is others, which might be translated into “no inside toilet” of any kind. What was the situation? 22 per cent of the homes in Ontario had no inside toilet of any kind. In the rural area the 22 per cent had jumped to 62 per cent, and in the farm sector of rural area, 70 per cent.

Now, what more graphic proof, Mr. Speaker, of the extent to which rural Ontario has not shared in the progress of the last 25 years? I emphasize once again that these are the figures from the 1951 census and I have sought to ascertain whether or not the new figures from the 1961 census are available and am told that they will not be available until approximately the middle of the year 1962.

It will be very interesting to see what change has taken place in this decade. We may discover that it is not as great as we think, because once again in dealing with agriculture we have to remind ourselves that agriculture reached its period of peak wartime prosperity in the year that these census figures were taken, 1951. Since then they have been the victims of this relentless tight squeeze and therefore had relatively little extra money, beyond the requirements for buying new machinery and keeping their farms up to date, to be able to survive economically. They have had very little left to be able to build the living standards within their homes.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, just before I leave that comment I was making on rural Ontario, I think it should be frankly acknowledged that if that kind of a situation were to exist in an urban area—say, here in the city of Toronto—that it would certainly be described as a slum. It is certain that all social workers and all other interested people in the community would be focusing attention on it and it would create such concern that there would be a move that likely would be followed by pretty immediate action for redevelopment to remove this kind of condition. But in the rural areas people with these living standards have to live on from year to year with no immediate prospect of them likely being bettered.

Now, the attitude of this government, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in approaching not only the problems but the consequences of these problems that I have just been spelling out, is what disturbs me most. For example, I was rather interested when this new government was formed, that in the Cabinet shuffling one of the men dropped from the Cabinet happened to be one of the farm representatives. Here is a government whose basis of power rests in rural Ontario. The overwhelming majority of the seats which established their power in this Legislature, are from rural Ontario, and there have been relatively few farmers in the Cabinet.

In fact, I happened to be in a service club a year or so ago when one of the farmers in the Cabinet quite frankly said that he was appointed and given the post as Hydro Commissioner at that time, not because he knew anything about Hydro but because they wanted another farmer in the Cabinet.

Well, here we have the dropping of one of the few farmers in the Cabinet. I think it is a symbol of the attitude of this government, the real attitude of this government, towards the problems of rural Ontario.

I was out yesterday—which explains my absence from this House, I must confess I would like to have been in two places at the same time on that occasion—attending the annual meeting of the Huron County Federation of Agriculture, and one of the people who spoke rather briefly there was the local Conservative federal member, Mr. Cardiff, who, I believe, is parliamentary secretary to the federal Minister of Agriculture. I was interested in the fact that he stressed, when he was acknowledging the limitations on the extent to which the government had been able to meet some of the needs of the farmer, the fact that agriculture is a smaller and smaller sector of the economy and he finds it increasingly difficult to get the government to face up to this problem.

I think this was accurate. This is the kind of problem agriculture also faces when dealing with this government.

Let me give another example, and this is the whole approach to marketing. I am not going to thresh over all of the old straw that we had a year ago, but there is one aspect—the restrictive clauses of Bill 86—which this government has made part and parcel of the farm marketing legislation that I do want to touch on. Every time I and others in the Opposition got up and talked about this we were assured by the then hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) that the farmers in the province of Ontario were not unhappy about Bill 86. In fact, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), the newly appointed Minister, got up and vigorously defended Bill 86 in the House. Well, I had my serious doubts as to whether this was an accurate reflection of the farmers' view.

But, Mr. Speaker, my doubts have gone, I am convinced beyond any shadow of doubt now that the overwhelming majority of the farmers in this province regard this bill to be what it is, an unwarranted intervention on the part of government; Tory paternalism, which, in effect, treats the farmers of this province as adolescents who cannot really be trusted in the exercise of legislative power that is granted to them. This is what I found to be unanimously, or almost unanimously, the feeling among farmers.

Yet we have to recall, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill 86 was brought in when the farmers, at least the hog producers among them, were in a battle with the packers, and this government chose to side with the packers—P.C.'s, you know, Packers' Chums—they decided to side with them as against the hog producers when they were trying to get greater control of the market.

It is also rather ironical, Mr. Speaker, that within the past year we have had a report of a combines investigation into the packing industry in which we now have solidly documented the extent to which the packing industry has its prices rigged through the efforts of the dominant company, Canada Packers. I wonder, as the government read this report, and thinks back on the manner in which they sought to frustrate the efforts of the primary producers to get greater collective bargaining strength, what their views are.

I am also interested, for example, Mr. Speaker, in the fact that the government is now moving to acknowledge a long-standing request of organized agriculture for the establishment of a department of co-operatives. They did not, as is usual, concede the request fully. What they did was to set up a co-operative section within The Department of Agriculture. I want to suggest though that this kind of minor departmental shuffle is not really the important thing. The important thing behind the forms of the department is, once again, the attitude of the government, and this is what disturbs me.

For example, the most important co-operative venture that has emerged in this country in recent years has been FAME, the efforts of the primary meat producers in this province to build their own packing plant. This is not a new idea, Mr. Speaker. The farmers in the province of Quebec today have meat packing plants which they own and control co-operatively, processing some 35 to 40 per cent of the meat produced in that province. If you go to little countries like Denmark you will find that 80 to 90 per cent of the meat that is processed there is handled through producer-owned and -controlled packing plants.

So this was not a revolutionary idea. And yet when the idea emerged in the House, right from the very outset we found the attitude of the government to it, so magnificently expressed by the previous Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), that he had "never heard of anything so nonsensical in his life." But that kind of attitude—he may have gone, somebody interjected to say he had gone—but the same attitude continues.

Last fall we had, the more I think of it, a calculated effort on the part of this government, or one of the agencies of this government, to frustrate the efforts to realize this new packing plant. I am referring to the decision of the Ontario Securities Commission which blocked the sale of debentures.

I was interested in attending the annual meeting of the same co-operative just about two or three weeks ago to discover that the intervention of this government on that occasion—creating for at least a time the chaos that it did in the campaign that had been mounted by these producers—the intervention of this government cost the farmers of the province of Ontario close to $50,000.

In other words, $50,000 of the money that they had raised to launch the whole campaign to begin with—all of their literature, all of their promotion—went down the drain in the debenture sale and they had to start all over again.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to contrast this kind of thing and the attitude of the government towards it, with that of another Torv government, the one in Nova Scotia. In recent years the farmers of Nova Scotia have moved towards the building of their own meat packing plants. Yet when they launched their campaign they were assured in advance by the government that for every dollar of share capital that they raised, the government would guarantee them $2 or $3 in loans to be able to build their plants and get into operation. In contrast to that kind of working co-operation, there is this government with its attitude of "nothing more nonsensical" to begin with creating chaos in the early stages of the fund-raising venture; and even now, an undercurrent of opposition, which I find as I move across the province, is often centered in the local Conservative organizations in many parts of the province.

I ask you also, Mr. Speaker, to contrast by way of attitudes of government, the kind of thing that happens where a government is genuinely interested in co-ops. If you will forgive me, I will take another example from that banner province of Saskatchewan. Years ago—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Only three superlatives in a speech.

Mr. MacDonald: Banner is not a superlative. The hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) is too far away from his grammar.

Mr. Speaker, development of the oil industry in the province of Saskatchewan was proceeded with on the basis of a checkerboard system so that when drilling took place in any one of the checkers on the board, and oil was found and therefore there was a fairly good assurance that there was oil available in the neighbouring checkers, what this government in Saskatchewan—that was genuine and sympathetic to co-operatives—did was to give some of these checkers to the co-operative movements in the province. As a result, in the co-operative movement in Saskatchewan there is an oil industry which goes all the way from taking the oil out of the ground, to the refineries which they built to refine the oil, to carrying it in co-operative trucks, to the retail co-operative agencies, to the farmers who are using it in their machinery on their farms.

Farmers there can feel that this resource which is under the ground in their province is not something that is being exploited in the fashion that is happening in neighbouring Alberta, for example, by big oil companies, but rather they themselves have a share in it. This is the kind of thing that can happen when a government wishes to assist people to enter into a programme of co-operative enterprise as a contribution to economic development.

There is one other item on the farm front, Mr. Speaker, that I want to touch on. It grows out of the observations of the hon. Prime Minister with regard to farm machinery legislation. The interesting thing about farm machinery legislation that is now being discussed in the province of Ontario is that it is to meet a problem that is by no means new. Farmers have grumbled for years about the cost of farm machinery. Indeed back in the 30's when the economic pinch was very great there were quite a number of investigations to look into the cost of farm machinery. They have grumbled in many instances about the inadequacy of farm machinery to meet the particular condition in a certain province. They have grumbled more recently about the difficulty in getting parts so that if perchance they should have a breakdown on late Friday afternoon, they find that they cannot get parts for their machinery until Monday and they lose the whole weekend in the rush of the harvest season—something which is pretty desperately important when you have the kind of weather conditions that we had this past year. So this is not new.

Indeed, in the province of Saskatchewan a man like Tommy Douglas, who works with the people to solve their problems, passed a farm machinery Act in that province in the year 1949. And I am interested to note that that farm machinery Act in Saskatchewan comprises all five of the principles which were spelled out by the executive of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, when they raised the matter with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) a few weeks ago.

Mr. William Tilden, the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, in a recent issue of the Rural Co-operator, in discussing this issue, concludes thus:

Saskatchewan has a farm machinery Act and certainly farmers in the west have indicated approval of it. There is every reason to believe that Ontario farmers will be just as appreciative.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this is an old problem and the solution is one that we do not need to pioneer, because I repeat, and I point this out to the hon. Prime Minister, that the five principles that have been suggested by the O.F. of A. executive are the basic principles of the Saskatchewan Act. They are not just the one point, for example, that appears to be the point of concern in the Liberal bill that is now standing on the order paper, namely that of the provision of adequate parts.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will agree that our approach to this problem of having a look at it before we do any—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that I do agree with this approach. That is the point I am getting to. In the light of the fact that the pioneering has been done, instead of this government taking its courage in its hand and bringing in a bill and letting us debate the bill—and if we wish to amend it, surely, we will have the opportunity to amend it—what is the government doing? They are going to call a meeting on December 7—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Of the people most interested before we plan the bill, Mr. Speaker, that is what we are going to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, just let me remind the hon. Prime Minister what he himself said the other day. He said we will talk about it and we will hear the representations made on December 7. And then he kept the door open, he said then we may set up a select committee to look into all the difficulties involved in this.

Well, this is really opening the door for the farm machinery companies to get in and exaggerate the problems that are going to have to be coped with so that we will have a select committee run for two or three years and perhaps the farmers will get their bill at the end of that period.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is indicative, once again, of the approach of this government in coming to grips with problems of agriculture. They do not need to delay. There is no need for procrastination. All they need to do is get the statutes of the province of Saskatchewan, where they have had ten satisfactory years of operation, as testified to by the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and adopt that bill to meet the needs in the province of Ontario and bring it into this House and let us get on with the matter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will look after the needs of this province and we will let the province of Saskatchewan look after itself. That is the reason we are doing it the way in which we are doing it. We are not going to accept holus-bolus—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will leave the farm sector of my remarks and move now to the other great body of workers in this province, to be found in the unions of this province.

I am constantly amazed at the continuous flow of comment from people, comment that is of a malicious nature with regard to the role of labour in the province of Ontario at the present time. If I can just take one example of this from an old union baiter from away back—the Globe and Mail on November 27. I find Norman L. Matthews, that ex-president of the Liberal Association of Ontario, delivering a speech to an organization in this city, and it is not surprising to discover that he was meeting in the Royal York, and this is what Mr. Matthews is reported to have said. "In the past two years there have been instances of labour union lawlessness in Ontario which previously would have been thought impossible." He said this resulted from an increasing union power "which has made legislators reluctant to deal with acts of violence and coercion by trade unions in the way they would treat the same crimes by individuals," a statement which is utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

He put part of the blame for this on "the sector of management that helps increase union power by agreeing to such forms of union security as the compulsory dues check-off." In other words, here is an ardent and leading Liberal of the province still arguing against dues check-off and union security. He proceeds—as did, incidentally, a number of the men as they were aspiring to the leadership of the Conservative party—he goes on to state that in many cases union leaders have abused their powers and have used them to exploit the workers. And of course he always—as did the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) and others—he always picks on the teamsters union.

The abuses brought to light in the teamsters union would not have been possible if it were not for the high degree of union security granted to these unions.

Trying to smear the whole of the union movement with the sins of one sector of it. Well, Mr. Speaker, what I think these gentlemen must take a look at is the fact that in the instance that they usually pick to smear the whole labour movement, the labour movement has moved. They are coping with their problem. If you go to the United States of America where Hoffa lives—you would almost think he lived here—you will find that Mr. Hoffa has been thrown out of the trade union movement. Indeed, he is in a running battle with the trade union movement, launching $1 million suits against the heads of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. What I sometimes wonder is: when are some of these people who spend so much of their time berating the trade union movement going to take a look at the same kind of illegality and abuse of power that goes on in the business world?

I was interested just last week to read in the Toronto Daily Star the comments of a judge when he sentenced the former president of the Electrical Contractors Association of Ontario to $7,500 for conspiring to run a combine. In sentencing him, Mr. Speaker, he made this comment: "In my view what was done in this case verges on the tactics used by racketeers and gangsters."

I look forward to somebody—on the Conservative side of the House preferably—drawing attention to this kind of thing and stressing it.

A few weeks ago I arrived in Galt on the very day on which a man who is head of an electronics industry out there, which is part of the whole electrical industry of this North American continent, who had apparently been very, very critical of myself. In discussing the combine law in the Dominion of Canada, this man went on to make these comments:

Mr. Rapsey branded the Canadian Combines Investigations Act as an importation from the United States, and the rest is a direct quote, Mr. Speaker: "where they have recently been throwing a lot of Christians to the lions to amuse the populace."

Here were the heads of the electrical industry who had combined to gouge the public of the United States of America of untold millions of dollars; for the first time they had been sentenced to spend a little time in jail as well as pay fines, and some of their colleagues on this side of the border were weeping these great tears and describing them as Christian gentlemen who were being thrown to the lions to amuse the populace.

It is this approach to such illegality in the business world that is never mentioned while gross exaggeration is made of the alleged illegality that takes place in the trade union movement.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, during this past year we have seen an epic battle take place in the province of Ontario; one of the epic struggles of the trade union movement throughout the whole history of the labour movement in this country. I am referring to the struggle that was put up by the immigrant construction workers this past summer. When the social history of this nation is written, I think you will find that struggle is going to find its way beside the Winnipeg strike and others in which the workers of this nation have fought and won their rights.

But what should not be missed, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that government neglect —this government's neglect—was responsible for the conditions which produced that violent explosion. Just let me recall to this House a sequence of events which took place during hearings of the select committee on labour more than three years ago.

A certain witness had testified regarding alleged violence and intimidation of the teamsters union in attempting to "organize" gravel pits north of Toronto. This witness was immediately put on oath, his testimony was submitted to the hon. Attorney-General's department, which acted with exceptional speed in appointing Mr. Justice Roach as a one-man Royal commission. Here was an example which the hon. Attorney-General recognized as providing an opportunity to smear the whole trade union movement with the alleged sins of a few—and the government seized on it.

Some weeks went by, however, and the Ontario Federation of Labour returned with another brief. This was a brief in which they spelled out the illegalities that had taken place in management's participation in labour-management's relations. There had been endlessly repetitive evidence with regard to what unions had been doing and so the Ontario Federation of Labour came back just to get the record back into perspective.

I have their brief here. It is some 19 pages of solidly documented instances of illegal action on the part of management. I just want to read one portion of one page because it is very relevant to this epic battle that took place this past year:

Canada is not always the promised land for immigrants. Bruno Zannini, who founded a union for new Canadian workers, conducted a survey of bricklayers soon after his Local 35 was chartered. His survey revealed that 85 per cent of the new Canadian bricklayers he organized never received holiday pay, compulsory under Ontario law. They had never seen a holiday with pay book or the stamps. Fifty per cent of them had never heard of unemployment insurance and their employers had never deducted the worker's share or paid their own.

Most of these cases revealed outright chiselling by employers; three out of four worked for 12 hours a day including Sunday, a practice banned by law; workmen's compensation, especially needed in the construction field, was a joke—employers who were not deducting income tax payments could not be bothered making payments to the compensation board. A common practice was to pay a worker with a post-dated cheque, when he went to cash the cheque the bank stamped it N.S.F. Although wages were pitifully low, when the worker could collect them, the men were cheated on the hours worked. If they worked 72 hours a week they were paid for 50, and if they rebelled the threat of deportation hung over their heads. Men daily work in fear of deportation.

So reported Mr. Zannini.

He was alarmed at the number of new Canadians who were trying to save every penny possible so that they could return, so they could leave and return to their native land. "All they prayed for was enough money to get out of Canada," he said.

The O.F.L. brief went on: "At least 20 per cent of the firms employing new Canadian bricklayers made income tax deductions for the total hours a man worked, although they deprived him of at least a tenth of his rightful earnings. According to their books they paid a man for his work on the job, but the worker took what he could get."

I could go on, and on, Mr. Speaker. The interesting thing is that when this was presented to the committee, I suggested that we had no alternative but to refer it to the hon. Attorney-General's department for action. After all, we had moved in precisely the same way when charges were made against the unions. But what was the result of my suggestion?

I could not even get a seconder for my motion, not even either one of the two Liberals on the committee would second the motion. I invite this House, Mr. Speaker, when they read in newspapers of Liberal M.P.'s suffering the self-imposed hardships of a week living with Italian immigrant families to recall that neither of the Liberals on that committee were willing to second the motion which would have lead directly to investigations to get the full facts and bring an end to this shameful exploitation.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Well, one cannot speak—

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to direct my main fire at the Liberals. As usual they were only an accomplice in this old party deal and I am quite willing to believe that even if they had seconded the motion the Tory majority would have killed it.

Thus it was, Mr. Speaker, that this government was responsible, with an assist from the Liberals, for the perpetuation of the conditions which produced the violent explosion in the construction industry. If the select committee on labour and this government had done its duty there would have been no need for the Goldenberg investigation that is now underway. It would have been done three years ago and the shameful exploitation and hardships imposed upon fellow Canadians would have been halted.

That hardship did not end and has not ended now. Just let me illustrate it with one case which I drew to the attention of the public a week ago—the kind of thing that still goes on.

This will take me just a minute, Mr. Speaker, and then I will move adjournment of the debate, but it is an integral part of what I am speaking about. This is the case of a new Canadian, who was unemployed for a year prior to last June. So he went to the city of Ottawa; he answered an advertisement in the paper in the city of Ottawa. He got a job with a certain garage in the city of Ottawa.

He was forced to post a bond of $400 as a guarantee of his integrity. And then he signed a contract in which his prospective employer would give him $50 a week for the first month and $75 a week after that.

Well, Mr. Speaker, after two weeks he was laid off and he was given three cheques for the amount of $435, post-dated. But there was no money in the bank. In fact, one of the Ottawa papers, in publishing my comments last week after a statement to the press, claims even the operator of the garage is a fictitious name. And yet there is nothing which this man can do. He can take court action, which will cost him more money. Mr. Speaker, I will just read to you the last paragraph of his letter to me:

I went to the priest, the police, to a lawyer, to my union, unemployment insurance office, the Italian Consulate, the immigration office, the labour board, the better business bureau, the small wage claim, and everybody turned me down. But I do not want to let this matter be dropped. I was victimized and cheated. People laugh in my face and I want justice. I just beg you to help me.

If there were ever a continuing cry of the exploited, there it is. And yet there is no law in this province to cope with this kind of thing.

Our Fair Employment Practice law? I have talked about this thing with Louis Fine, and Louis Fine quite frankly said, "I cannot do anything about it, it is outside our jurisdiction, but if you give me the details the next time one of my men go into Ottawa, I will have him look into it."

Well, I have not sent the details to Mr. Louis Fine because I think this is a matter on which something should be done at the legal level so that a man—who was exploited in this fashion by an employer who himself should have been putting up a bond as a guarantee of his integrity instead of filching the worker of $400—there surely should be a law to protect workers from this kind of thing.

So it continues.

Well, Mr. Speaker, so will I continue tomorrow; and I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, we will proceed with any of the orders on the order paper tomorrow and the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1961

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Power Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which amends a section of The Power Commission Act, which has provided up to this time that the Commission of Ontario Hydro shall consist of not less than three and not more than six, of which two may be and one must be a member of the executive council. The amendment provides that the commission shall be not less than three and not more than six, of whom two may be members of the executive council.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. members of this House a report that has been placed on their desks, concerning the Metropolitan Toronto system of government.

This is a 90-page document prepared by The Department of Economics with the co-operation of The Department of Municipal Affairs at the request of the special committee of the metropolitan council on metropolitan affairs. It is essentially a fact-finding report and is objective in nature. I am sure it will be useful in stimulating and crystalizing our thinking on the subject.

The Metropolitan Toronto system of government established by this Legislature in 1953 has been an outstanding success, but all of us know that the growth of Metro area and changes in basic conditions have raised questions of representation and economic balance. This report considers the financial effects of amalgamation, or of a four- or five-borough system of government on each of the 13 municipalities now in Metro.

Between 1954 and 1960 the assessed population of Metro increased from 1,253,000-odd to 1,527,000-odd, for an increase of 22 per cent. In the last seven years North York, Scarborough and Etobicoke have doubled their population, absorbing more than 90 per cent of the population growth in the whole Metropolitan Toronto area. Each has one vote on the Metropolitan Toronto Council.

The anomaly is that these three municipalities under the present system would have, by 1970, a combined population of 950,000 people, or nearly half of Metro's then total population, and close to half of its total assessment, yet would have only 13 per cent of the representation.

This report, Mr. Speaker, does not contain any recommendations, nor does it reflect the views of the government of Ontario. It is submitted as a study document to assist the special committee of Metropolitan council in any future deliberations.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, rising out of the statement of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass), I wonder if he would care to advise the House whether or not he proposes to introduce any legislation at all reforming Metro along the lines of this report; or any other thoughts that the hon. Minister might have.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might say that at the present moment I can only answer the first part of the hon. member's question by saying that I have had as little opportunity as he has to study the report, which was presented to me yesterday, so I am not in a position to say whether there would be any action on the part of this government arising out of the report.

With respect to legislation to be brought before this House concerning Metropolitan Toronto by the government, I may say that undoubtedly there will be legislation brought in during this session of the House regarding Metropolitan Toronto. As to its contents and its nature I am not in the position to say because the last meeting of Metro council for this year has not yet been held and it has been the policy of this government in the past, and I am sure will continue to be, that we do wish to have the views and the wishes and the conclusions of Metropolitan Toronto Council placed before us before we finally formulate any legislation for consideration by this House.

Mr. Singer: Is it reasonable to assume then, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no changes in the Metro system of government unless the Metro council requests it?

Hon. Mr. Cass: The hon. member may draw his own conclusions, sir, from what I have said.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wonder if it would be in order to ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) when I might expect the answer that he promised me about a week ago when he made a statement to the House with respect to the temporary service on Highway 401?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I made a note of it at the time the hon. member brought it to my attention. It got mixed up in my files, but yesterday I requested Downsview to prepare a report for the hon. member.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I am prompted by the blackout, which I hope will be temporary, to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a question in relation to the changes in the Hydro Commission, announced in the paper this morning. Does he not feel that inasmuch as the House is now in session that it would have been at least courteous to have announced these changes in the Legislature rather than in the newspaper?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) attempted to make an announcement here concerning some policies on Hydro the other day and was practically booed out of his seat. However, I will make a note of the hon. member's remarks for future cases.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE REVISED STATUTES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves second reading of Bill No. 1, An Act to confirm the Revised Statutes of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FISH INSPECTION ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 12, An Act to amend The Fish Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BAILIFFS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 14, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-61.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I might say that these bills would normally go to the committee on legal bills following second reading.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I could not catch the remarks of the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I was making the usual announcement about the committee on legal bills dealing with these types of bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORONERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 15, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 16, An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, unless the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) wants that bill to go to the committee on legal bills, it seems to me we could let it take its normal course. It is merely providing for a Deputy Crown Attorney in York. If that is agreeable then this will not go to the committee on legal bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 20, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 23, An Act to amend The Mechanics' Lien Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE REVISED REGULATIONS OF ONTARIO, 1960

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 26, An Act to confirm the Revised Regulations of Ontario, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would not think there is any reason for those two bills, the consolidation of the statutes and regulations going to committee on legal bills unless—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) could send that Crown Attorneys bill to the committee on legal bills?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I mentioned a moment ago—

Mr. Singer: Yes, I know, but we missed—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is it the wish of the Opposition that it should go?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as far as I personally am concerned, it would not matter but the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) has just advised me that he would like it to go and I would make that formal request, on his behalf.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 28, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves second reading of Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE AIR POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 31, An Act to amend The Air Pollution Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

AMALGAMATION OF DEPARTMENTS

House in Committee on Bill No. 5, An Act to amalgamate The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and The Department of Commerce and Development.

Sections 1 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 5 reported.

ONTARIO PARKS INTEGRATION BOARD ACT

House in Committee on Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act.

CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 7, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, this brings up the point that has often been argued in this House. I could never understand why, when a bill of this character is before the Legislature, why the government would not be in a position to say what hon. Minister the department was going to be under, rather than say that the hon. Minister shall be a member of the executive council designated by the Lieutenant-Governor. Do you mean to tell me now that you do not know what hon. Minister it will be, and if you do know, why do you not say so in the legislation?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Well, I would say to the hon. member who has spoken, the convenience of working it in this way is, for example, where an hon. Minister becomes ill or in some way is unable to act or a change has been made, no action can be taken in the department because there is no legal way of having someone else act on his behalf.

Mr. Oliver: That would apply to all departments.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This may apply in all departments, but here in this particular case relating to conservation, it is impossible to transfer conservation from one hon. Minister to another in the event of incapacity. In this instance, you will have to speak to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) as to the intention of what hon. Minister is to administer the branch dealing with conservation. But it was designed to introduce this section so that this could be transferred from one department without having to amend the whole Act.

Mr. Oliver: Well, there may be reasons but I do not think those are the ones.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Did the papers not already announce which hon. Minister it was going to be—I saw where Dr. Lord, the chairman of the Metropolitan conservation authority, said today it is in The Department of Lands and Forests.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is possible that Dr. Lord has made that statement. I cannot be responsible for his statements.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to say—and I think it is a matter of common knowledge—that we are going to transfer the conservation authority to The Department of Lands and Forests. This is simply a method of doing it that allows for a certain amount of flexibility. We on this side of the House are very interested in flexibility and this is the method by which we have chosen to do it.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, was there any thought of transferring that particular branch to The Department of Municipal Affairs, because it is mostly through the municipalities that the conservation authority branch operates?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, there are many advantages to having the conservation authority in The Department of Lands and Forests and I believe that this is where the conservation authorities were originally. This will provide for a high degree of co-operation between the conservation authorities and The Department of Lands and Forests. The Department of Lands and Forests is, of course, the best equipped department of the government as far as research facilities are concerned, as far as technical experts are concerned. All their facilities, under the amalgamation that we propose, will be available to assist the conservation authorities in the work that they are doing.

Now I think this is very logical, I think it is very workable and I think that it will lead to greater efficiency and will be of distinct assistance. It is our purpose in making the shift to provide assistance to the various conservation authorities throughout the province who are really doing such a tremendous job.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, there is just one brief comment I would like to make on this. The other day when we were discussing the future role of the public accounts committee, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) saw fit to withhold action until a select committee which is looking into precisely this kind of matter had made its report.

Now that committee, on which both he and I happen to be members, has given a great deal of discussion to parks and conservation, to the fact that the jurisdiction over them is scattered through a great number of departments. I am therefore a little curious about another inconsistency on the part of this government: when it moves in advance of the committee having made a report to the House and decides that it is going to do it in this way.

I am not objecting to it. I think the logical place for conservation is in The Department of Lands and Forests, though it does have relationship with municipal affairs, but I am just a little curious as to why he is jumping the gun and why the hon. Prime Minister was not ready to jump the gun on an even more obvious point of getting the job done with the public accounts committee.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, we are not jumping any guns. This is a matter of government administration and frankly it is a relatively simple matter, as the hon. member admits. He admits also that he has no objection to what we were doing and it is the logical place to put it.

On the other hand, there is no parallel between this situation and the question of the function of the public accounts committee. In dealing with the function of the public accounts committee, we are contemplating—when I say we, I am now referring to the committee, to the select committee, of which I happen to be a member—the discussion there contemplated somewhat I would term rather drastic changes in the function of this committee and our government set-up. There are no drastic changes involved in what we are dealing with in this bill.

Therefore, I do not think that the hon. member can draw a parallel and say that we are beating any guns or jumping any fences or whatever the expression was that he used. As far as the public accounts committee is concerned, I would like to see the recommendation of the committee brought forward and I would like to see that recommendation considered in this House because it is, as I say, a matter of some quite complete change in the policy and the function of the committee. That is an entirely different matter than this where we are merely putting our house in order to get on with the job government.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word. There is no better place, in my view, for this responsibility, and I have had the pleasure and honour of working on the oldest conservation authority in Ontario since its inception. Our work is practically 100 per cent with Lands and Forests.

When we ask for advice or help from anybody on reforestation and river development and so on, it is always The Department of Lands and Forests from which we get the support and help. To my knowledge they are the only department with that type of experience.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) mentioned municipal parks. That is a different idea altogether. I certainly think they should go under municipal affairs. But these are different, these must in my view be under Lands and Forests.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

THE PARKS ASSISTANCE ACT

House in Committee on Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Parks Assistance Act.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Chairman, barring the ever-present possibility of incapacitation on the part of an hon. Minister, could the government leader tell us who will be the hon. Minister to administer this particular bill?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, this bill has named the Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay), but I think—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, it will be the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner).

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, we had a bit of a debate last year on this bill and the government at that time was most insistent that this bill be left with The Department of Commerce and Development. I am very glad to see that the government has shown a little enlightenment and did not take too long to do it. All the reasons that we got last year apparently have gone out the window. It made sense just a year ago when this was just a new bill and it makes just as much sense today.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 8 reported.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 9, An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, on this bill, you are turning all your officials in forestry into Ontario provincial policemen. Now, is this to be an automatic procedure; just because you are a member of the forestry branch, are you automatically a member of the O.P.P.?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Chairman, if I may explain to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr.

Chapple), at the present time certain officials of The Department of Lands and Forests, including the district forester, the superintendent or other person in charge of the provincial parks and every forest ranger, while they are within the boundaries of a provincial park, have all the power and authority of a member of the Ontario Provincial Police. That has been found over a period of years to be most desirable.

On some occasions it has been found desirable also that a person who is a conservation officer should have the same authority as his co-workers in the provincial parks. And all we are asking for is that the title of the conservation officer should be added to those who have authority within a provincial park, to those who already have such authority.

It is purely a matter of routine, in my estimation, for greater facility and ease of maintaining law and order and all the other things that our department people have to do while within a park. They will have no such authority outside the boundaries of a provincial park.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think I can agree with the hon. Minister that it makes some sense for remote sections of the province that foresters should have that power. But when you extend this to conservation officers! Many of these conservation areas are in pretty substantially built-up areas—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: The hon. member is on the wrong track.

Mr. Singer: Just wait till I finish! Many of these conservation areas are in substantially built-up parts of this province—Heart Lake and so on—there are several of them within the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto and not too far from Metropolitan Toronto. If the government plans to cloak conservation officers in these areas with all the powers of police officers, I think that we should have the positive assurance to this House that these conservation officers will be given complete training as policemen.

Now it may well be that this is important, these conservation areas in the middle of built-up locations certainly need policing, but in the various Metropolitan areas there is a good force—the Metropolitan Toronto police force—and in the surrounding townships, in Chinguacousy and Toronto township, Markham and Vaughan, there are police forces. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie) knows this. There is a real danger, to my mind, of clothing conservation officers with powers of policemen unless they are properly trained. It could lead to some very serious difficulties.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the hon. member is terribly confused this morning. He is a like a friend of mine who said he never wakes up until 11:00 o'clock in the morning irrespective of what time he gets up.

If he would only read the Act, and as a well-known member of the bar I would suggest that is the best and the first thing to do, he would see that this has nothing to do with river valley conservation authorities. It has effect only while in a provincial park, and provincial parks are set aside by the proper legislation. It has nothing to do with river valley conservation authorities at all, metropolitan authority or any other kind.

Mr. Troy: I wish I had the authority of a conservation officer, I would do something. I am sure that the bill would be a little more understandable if in Section 1 after "line" you put in a comma.

As you look at it and read it again—this may be Grey Cup weekend but we are still not in the mood. It says:

Section 9 of The Provincial Parks Act is amended by inserting after "ranger" in the second line "and conservation officer" all part of the same section, "so that the section shall read as follows."

I presume that you are including in this bill the words "and conservation officers." That is what the hon. Minister has said, to bring him into the ambit of the Act so that the conservation officer has the authority that the other officers already have. I think that section would be more intelligible if you had a comma after the word "line."

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very important point and I think the hon. member might move to amend the section in the terms he has described.

Mr. Troy: Well, I thank the hon. Minister very much. With that advice from the hon. Minister, a distinguished member of the bar, I so move.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of the amendment, please say "Aye."

Those opposed, say "Nay."

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last evening at six of the clock plus five, I had just reviewed the situation within the construction industry, particularly in the Metropolitan area, and the fact that this situation was not a new one—though it had been revealed in all its ramifications just this past year—because the details of it had been given to a select committee some three years ago. That select committee and this government refused to move so that they were in good part responsible for the perpetuation of the conditions which are now being looked into three or four years later by the Goldenberg commission.

I also pointed out that this kind of exploitation continues in many ways and cited a case of Giovanni Ariginello, an unemployed chap here in Toronto who had gone to Ottawa to get employment, got two weeks employment and meanwhile was bilked of some $400 plus his wages for that period.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that most of the difficulties we are facing are rooted in The Department of Labour itself—its operations and administration. Many times in this House when we have been considering the estimates of The Department of Labour, we have pointed to the extent to which it is completely out of date; that its Acts are not being administered even when they do have some relationship to modern problems.

I was rather interested, Mr. Speaker, to discover that those general charges that we had documented in some instances were very, very solidly documented once again when the report of the Royal Commission on Industrial Safety was brought down just a short time ago.

Hon. members will find for example on page 3 of the report reference to some of the Acts and regulations of the department being "archaic and outdated." Now I do not know if we used those words but certainly they are an apt description. On page 4 there is a reference to the fact that one of the Acts, The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act, which one of my colleagues has discussed a number of times in recent years, is generally "antediluvian"—a pretty harsh term coming from as responsible a body as a Royal commission.

We have on a number of occasions referred to the complacency of this department and the fact that it just was too smug in the face of the problems that kept recurring. I was interested to read on page 7 of the report this delightful understatement:

The testimony of the officers of The Department of Labour generally with respect to the adequacy of the Acts, their enforcement and the number of inspections and inspectors required, indicates a degree of satisfaction that is inconsistent with the requirements of keeping pace with the rapidly growing industrial technology.

I repeat, it is a delightful understatement, but what they are saying is that this department is just smug and complacent, with regard to its inadequacies. Perhaps the best example, without going into any more detail at this point of this particular report, was its references to the whole problem of industrial safety on pages 21 and 22, where they point to the fact that this Act has been in effect for some 45 years; that portions of the Act—the regulations relating to it—have never been clear. They report that the attitude of the associations which have been given the responsibility for safety by the Workmen's Compensation Board is one of complacency with respect to their present functions which are largely educational.

On the next page they point out that ten years ago this government set up a commission, the Roach Commission, to look into industrial safety. This commission made recommendations which have been sitting on the shelf gathering dust and now ten years later exactly the same kind of recommendations are made again.

That, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, is about as solid a documentation as you want of the kind of criticisms we have been making of The Department of Labour. The fact of the matter is that the operations of The Department of Labour are hopelessly inadequate for a great industrial province like the Province of Ontario.

Our horse and buggy department has wandered willy-nilly into the traffic of our modern world oblivious to its shortcomings and complacent about its actions. In fact, in this department complacency has become a disease of almost epic proportions, and I am hoping that with a new hon. Minister—though I express this hope with some trepidation—we will get at some of these problems that have not been looked into.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to another topic. I am sorely tempted—I shall steel myself and discipline myself against doing this—but I am sorely tempted to preface it with a story of the emergence of the New Democratic Party in this nation and in this province during the last year. I know that I shall make no converts here. Hon. members missed the inspiration and the excitement that was testified to by critics who came to scoff and remained to be impressed at our conventions, and so on. . . . All of this is extremely important.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. Mr. Speaker, now I am provoked into taking a moment or so to enlighten hon. members. I have here, for example, quotations from the press who attended our national convention for one solid week. Let me quote one of them for example: Norman Campbell of the Ottawa Citizen:

It was the hardest working, most faithfully attended political convention ever held in Ottawa as well as being the largest in point of official delegate registration.

I refer to the Ottawa Journal, a good Tory paper:

So ended what may be considered one of the best attended, best organized, best publicized political conventions ever staged in Canada.

This will prove that a newspaperman who came there critical went away profoundly impressed.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, let me give just one final quote and then I remove the pain and suffering from this revelation of truth to the Tory back benches. This is a comment by Norman Smith. He happens to be a good Conservative appointed to one of the northern commissions that looks after—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): What is the date of the clipping? Before October 27?

Mr. MacDonald: The clipping was immediately after our convention in August. Here is the quotation:

This reporter looks back on the founding convention of the New Democratic Party with a strange kind of elation: It was a humdinger. The N.D.P. is going to do things. My elation is not that of a party member, it will neither surprise nor sadden them when I say I am not a party member, nor do I plan to be, but the feeling of warmth that ran through me as the convention hall throbbed with a genuine fervor, with an awareness that democracy was showing some life. The N.D.P. is going to do things for itself and its people.

I did not plan to do this, Mr. Speaker, but I was provoked by my colleagues in the House who are thirsting for some information about this great development.

There is one aspect of this development which is a matter for consideration of this House—the financing of political parties—after all the comments that have been made with regard to it by aspirants to the leadership of the Conservative Party and by some of the peregrinating ministers of this government who are touring the province in various capacities.

An hon. member: Would the hon. member give us the meaning of that word?

Mr. MacDonald: Peregrinating? That is somebody who wanders around not knowing exactly what he is doing, where he has come from or where he is going.

Let me start, Mr. Speaker, with what may seem to be an irrelevant point but I think I can prove to hon. members that it is very relevant. During the course of the campaign for the leadership convention, one of the aspirants to the leadership of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) made this comment:

I ask myself how in the name of Heaven can we expect to change the evils of our government and over-taxation if the expenditures being made during the campaign are representative of the kind of government these men expect to lead.

He showed his audience a brochure put out by the hon. Minister of The Department of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) entitled "Dedication, experience, responsibility."

"And I have added extravagance," the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe said. "You may say that I am the candidate of the little people."

Well, apart from its demagoguery, Mr. Speaker, sheer demagoguery, I was also interested to see that when the same hon. member got to speaking to the convention he added to it even greater demagoguery. He said, for example:

I contend that money taken from the pay envelopes of the workers under the guise of union dues must not and should not be used for the furtherance of any political party. It is an evil thing. It is an evil thing that employers are forced to collect money from pay envelopes to be passed to a political party with whom they have nothing in common. It is an evil thing that workers should be forced to support a political party with whom they have nothing in common.

I just wonder, Mr. Speaker, if one could paraphrase this. Is it an evil thing when management makes compulsory collections of money from consumers in order to pass it on to their political friends? Because this is where they are getting their money.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York Humber): There is something burning. There must be a short-circuit.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no short-circuit at all. No short-circuit at all. If it is evil that money which is part of union dues by a democratic process should be used for the financing of the party of their choice, why then should the consumers of this nation have to pay money on every product they buy, money that is going to be given by management under the table to finance a party with which the consumers have nothing in common?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Let them contract in, then, instead of contracting out.

Mr. MacDonald: However, let me proceed with the comments of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. He goes on in characteristic fashion, maligning the trade union movement for sheer political purposes:

I want to go on record that if I am elected your leader, the president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters will not dictate policy here in Ontario. I will not stand for dictation from Mr. Hoffa or anybody else out of our country in labour matters. It is my intention to make a thorough study of gangsterism and dictatorship in the union movement in Ontario.

I wish the hon. member displayed a small measure of the same enthusiasm about investigating gangsterism in the electrical companies and the electrical associations, and many other parts of management.

Mr. Speaker, I say this as much in sorrow as in anger, because I learned to have a great respect for the same hon. gentleman when he sat in that Chair and fulfilled the role of Speaker for a number of years; I had a respect for him because he was very fair. I do not need to tell hon. members that a Speaker is subject to a good many pressures from many directions and that it is very difficult to be fair throughout and I became convinced during his tenure of office that this man would do everything possible to be fair in the exercise of his responsibilities.

For that reason I was profoundly disillusioned that this man should make this kind of a campaign when he was aspiring to the leadership of the political party that now holds the government because, Mr. Speaker, his campaign was definitely a combination of moss-back Toryism and cheap politics from the word go.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have a suspicion that the people in the government party of which he is a member, considered it even cheaper than some of us on the other side of the House who had to withstand the indignity of some his attacks. So much so, I think, that in the process he has assured himself of a back bench perpetually in the government.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member will fully understand and appreciate what I am saying this morning because if I may borrow a phrase from him, "I am just simply nailing his political hide to the fence." That was his phrase. However, I do not want to dwell on his views any further because he is not in the Cabinet and I do not know what influence he is going to have on this particular issue.

I want to get to a man who presumably may have something to do with this issue, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). As far back as last March the hon. Attorney-General started going around this province making statements such as the fact that the new party was going to be financed by "extortion." The hon. Attorney-General stated last March, in all the solemn terms of which he is capable on occasion:

Many I am sure would have reservations about not only the wisdom but the validity of such a system of financing. If such a policy were adopted in this province it would raise a serious question of public interest to public policy.

In an interview after his speech, so the Toronto Telegram reported, on March 24, the hon. Attorney-General said he would not comment on whether Ontario might legislate against such a fund-raising activity, but said he thought the courts will accept a law British Columbia is passing barring political donations.

Then the hon. Attorney-General went on in his leadership campaign. He went into Peterborough proclaiming his theme that "I intend to hit and hit hard." He is a wonderful fellow, he has not yet figured out the difference between a fighting leader and a leader that goes around picking fights.

However, when the hon. Attorney-General went into Peterborough he had it revised slightly as to "scription by extortion"; and another phrase, "It was dangerous to the very roots of democracy."

The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, about the danger to the roots of the democracy—if I may go back to the comments of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe—if it is dangerous to the roots of democracy that the aspirant of the leadership to the party should be buying his way into power, as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe said of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, is it not equally dangerous that a party should be buying its way into power, particularly when the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe was living off some of the buying process during all the years in which he has been fighting Conservative election campaigns? This is sheer political hypocrisy on the part of the hon. Attorney-General and other spokesmen in the government.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): May I ask—

Mr. MacDonald: No, the hon. Attorney-General may not ask. He has had all the chances to this stage, he can just sit down and keep quiet. He is the centre of a hurricane, and the centre of a hurricane is a place of inaction and silence.

Mr. Speaker, let me proceed. I do not intend to have the bluster of the hon. Attorney-General interrupt me at all. I have got the floor.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Just do not talk about me.

Mr. MacDonald: I will continue to talk about the hon. Attorney-General because he is the focus of suspicion and inaction and most of the trouble in this government at the moment. Make no mistake about it, I am going to continue to talk about him a great deal.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: All the hon. member ever produces, though, is suspicion.

Mr. MacDonald: That is the kind of Tory speech this province has been hearing for too long.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying before I was interrupted by the hon. Attorney-General that comments of his are sheer political hypocrisy because this government, in fact the old parties, traditionally have been financed by big business interests. Let me give the hon. members one of the more recent instances of testimony.

There is a gentleman by the name of Scott. He was organizer for the Liberal Party provincially and then he became organizer of the Liberal Party nationally. Now I do not know exactly what he has become. Perhaps in fulfilment of the old adage that those who cannot teach, teach teachers; maybe those who cannot organize talk about organization. That is what he is doing a great deal of at the present time, and writing articles.

In the course of writing one of his articles in Maclean's magazine early in September, he pointed out how the old parties were financed. If hon. members will read it, they will find he documents it solidly. He comes up with the conclusion, which he must know something about, that the Tory party fought the last federal election on $11 million. The Liberals were not quite so well off, they only had $8 million; and they got most of it from the business world. This from a man who was an organizer and right in the centre of things.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that this is going to cause a lot of outcry in both the Liberal and Conservative Parties. I am reminded once again of that old comment of Henry Truman, when somebody said:

"Give them hell, Harry,"

and President Truman said,

"I am not giving them hell, I am just telling them the truth and they think it is hell."

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): No comparison at all.

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, the thing that intrigues me about the approach of the hon. Attorney-General to this whole thing is that the hon. Attorney-General heads a department whose known function is to treat everybody fairly, that justice shall be administered equally; and this is precisely, of course, what the hon. Attorney-General does not want to do.

He wants to have two rules. He wants to have one rule for the financing of his own party in which they will raise money secretly from whomever they please and nobody knows anything about it. He wants to have another rule in which his opposition party, or one of his opposition parties, will have to bare the facts of how they are going to be financed. Well, we do not object to baring the facts, but it is passing strange that this kind of approach should come from the hon. Attorney-General of the province of Ontario, that he in effect should be going across this province trying to legislate against his political opponents. This is precisely what he is doing.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Nobody said anything about legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I have the floor? I think I should have the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to comment without interruptions of the puerile and destructive nature that I usually get and I do not intend to tolerate them. Thanks.

Last winter, Mr. Speaker, an hon. colleague of mine in this House introduced a bill which could meet and resolve this situation very readily. It was a bill that presented one small amendment to The Election Act, that henceforth the central funds of political parties would be subject to a public audit. In the course of that debate the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) got up, and with his halo fairly glistening, informed this House he knew of no contributions from the business world to the campaign of the Conservative Party. From the other side of the House the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) got up and he too said that he knew of no contributions that came from the business world to his party.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest this year that if the hon. Minister is the least bit worried about this, my hon. colleague is going to introduce the same bill once again, and if the hon. Minister really wants to solve this thing and put everybody on an equal basis so that at least we will know where the funds are coming from, just support this bill.

We, Mr. Speaker, are proud of the way the New Democratic Party is financed. I do not come ashamedly at all. It is open and above board. It is in our constitution.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. members that the present speaker is the fifth who has taken part in this debate. The four previous ones had good attention from the House and I would ask that the same attention be given to the present speaker and all speakers.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not objecting to their lack of attention, I am objecting to what is accompanying their attention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was saying that we are proud of the way the New Democratic Party is financed. It is set down in our constitution so that all the world knows how it is financed.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Has the hon. member heard of John Lesage?

Mr. MacDonald: Have we heard about John Lesage? I am not interested in John Lesage; I am interested in the hon. leader of the Opposition and his operations in this province.

The New Democratic Party is financed by contributions and memberships from its individual members and contributions from its affiliate members.

Mr. Speaker, I may just enlighten the House on this one point in case the government is contemplating legislation to deal with the situation. Let me tell hon. members the procedures that are followed in making decisions with regard to affiliation. Notification is given in the normal fashion of an item on the agenda of a trade union meeting or whatever other organization it may be—for there are other organizations, fraternal and otherwise, that are affiliated. It is debated at a meeting and after the debate is held, if there is a majority vote, they then affiliate. When they affiliate they do not get contributions that amount to $8 or $11 million. They do not get contributions of something over $700,000 such as the Liberal Party got from one company, the Beauharnois Construction Company, a few years ago, on which we have documented evidence. No, they make a contribution of five cents per member per month, Mr. Speaker.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are some people in these unions who are not supporters of the New Democratic Party. The constitution of the New Democratic Party lays down in very firm terms that any person who so desires can contract out so that no contributions will be made on his part. All he has to do is to sign the necessary slip or indicate it to the appropriate officer—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! I would like to point out to the hon. members that this debate is open to all hon. members to take part. All hon. members, I understand, will have an opportunity to speak and I would ask that the hon. members as they are speaking be given attention.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, Mr. Speaker, the democratic process in coming to this decision is doubly protected. They start out with a majority vote, which is normally the way the democratic process works, but the constitution lays down one further step that anyone in the minority, who disagrees with the majority vote, can contract out so that there is no payment on his behalf.

Now, that Mr. Speaker, is the way in which the new party is financed, and we invite the public to take a look at it. However, Mr. Speaker, when they have done that, I suggest the next thing they should do is take a look at how the old parties are financed and ask exactly the same question and demand that government, instead of having several rules, should have the same rule and make certain that the financing of these parties should become public property too.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, to note a few weeks ago a Gallup poll in which it indicated, if I recall correctly, something in the range of 80 per cent of the people of this country feel that the financing of political parties should become public knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, there is another comment with regard to the financing of political parties, that I will come to a little later in another context.

I want to move now, Mr. Speaker, to some comments on the crime situation in the province of Ontario. At the moment, Mr. Speaker, we have the Morton report before us. There has been a great deal of criticism directed at the Morton report, some in editorials, some from the Liberal Opposition in this House.

In my view much of this criticism is somewhat misdirected. The Morton report was compiled under pretty strict terms of reference. It was asked to spell out the operations of crime in a general way in the province of Ontario and then to examine how these problems are coped with in other jurisdictions and to suggest legal procedures whereby they might be coped with in the province of Ontario.

In other words, it was not the function of the Morton report to go beyond these legal terms of reference and to document the existence of organized crime or to draw any moral conclusions with regard to the existence of organized crime and its threat to society. The authors of the report stuck to those terms of reference.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think it is our duty in this House to go from the general observations of the Morton report to their application in the province of Ontario at the moment, and take a look at the evidence. This is what I want to do in the first portion of my remarks.

We do not have to go back very far, Mr. Speaker. In the last year or so we have had, for example, evidence of violent killings, indicative of the tie-in with organized crime. Just let me remind the House of these very briefly:

Early in 1960, there was a case of a man coming into the office of a Bay Street broker and seeking from this man a cool $1,000 a week simply as protection—part of the so-called protection racket. When the man objected and in effect told the gentleman to get out of his office, the man went out and said, "You simply have not learned your ABCs." He came back within five minutes into this crowded Bay Street office and with four secretaries looking on, and in broad daylight, two hoodlums walked in swinging their blackjacks. They slugged the man into unconsciousness. A few months went by and we had another case that was reported in the Toronto Daily Star. Lorne Gibson, a 35-year-old ex-convict was forced to stand against the wall of a garage in tiny Milan Street where three bullets were pumped into his back. His death remains a mystery and the Star adds, "It was Toronto's first gangland killing since 1944."

In other words, Mr. Speaker, let us note the emergence of this pattern of violent attacks. We have had the Bluestein beating, of which there has been so much heard that I need add no more. We have had the mysterious beating up of the United Church minister out in Etobicoke—whether or not it has any relationship to crime nobody knows. With $2,500 offered as a reward, the case stands unsolved.

We had, just a few weeks ago, two people murdered in a downtown boarding house, or apartment house, in the city of Toronto. The evidence seems to be very conclusive—in fact charges have been laid and arrests have been made—that it ties in with international crime. We have had still another case—that of Alberto Agueci, a resident of this city, who was beaten up and his body burned and mutilated because of his involvement in organized crime.

Let us go one step further, Mr. Speaker. We have had comments from such responsible people as Chief Mackey, who pointed out that gamblers now rule bingo in the province of Ontario and he warns that they now have a yearly take in the neighbourhood of $6 million after all the prizes are paid for.

Hon. members periodically pick up the paper and read stories such as this one on October 4, 1961, in the Toronto Daily Star, that a $3 million betting headquarters had been found in the Keele Gate Drive area of North York.

Going back a little, there is a report in the paper of an O.P.P. investigation into gambling in the province of Ontario, indicating that the probe found gambling in 27 centres throughout the province of Ontario. This is not just the normal friendly game of gambling; let us make that clear.

Where were these centres? Commissioner Ward H. Kennedy of the O.P.P. listed them: Barrie, Brantford, Chatham, Guelph, Hamilton, Kitchener, Niagara, Oshawa, Almonte, Brampton, Dundas, Fort Erie, Georgetown, Grimsby, Milton, Oakville, Perth, Preston, Simcoe, Thorold, Tillsonburg, Uxbridge, Crystal Beach, Metcalfe, Norwich, Port Credit, Sutton—this is the kind of evidence of which we have had so much.

I was interested to read an article that gave further details of this kind of thing, in Maclean's magazine a few weeks ago by Trent Frayne, in which he quotes Chief Mackey as stating this:

There is not a city or small town in this country that does not have bookies.

And he goes on to add:

It is estimated that the number of bookies and bookie runners in Canada is 18,000, while the number charged before the courts in a year is less than 1,000.

He quotes an eastern judge as speaking privately and saying this:

The regularity with which bookmakers appear in the courts, pay fines of a few hundred dollars and depart to take up their books where they left off is one of the most striking absurdities in Canadian justice.

It is a laxity on the part of the courts in enforcing it!

Mr. Speaker, I think it is well for us to pause—and I am going to make my point in this connection by quoting from Trent Frayne's article—and note how crime is becoming established through professional gambling.

At the outset let me emphasize this point, which is very well known but one we should bear in mind: professional gambling is the heart of organized crime. In fact the point was made very well in a Brooklyn grand jury report in 1959, which was reported by Mr. Frayne:

Gambling is the very heart-beat of organized crime. Actually if you scratch the professional operator of a gambling venture you find the narcotics pedlar, the loan shark, the vice game operator, the white slaver and the murderer.

In other words, here is the financial heart of the whole organized criminal world.

Then in a very graphic way, Mr. Frayne indicates how organized crime is built up. At the outset he cites cases of relatively innocent bookmaking in the city of Toronto:

The bookmaker in the branch office of an insurance company in downtown Toronto not far from the R.C.M.P. headquarters, is a well made blonde girl in her middle 20s. She is the kind of friendly community servant that all bookies would like to be classed with and usually are. They simply take bets from men in the office who cannot wait to get out to the track and pay them the track price the next day if they have won. On a recent Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday she booked $58, $36 and $42 respectively; her book for the three days was $136 of which $14 went back in $2 bets—bettors who won—and $122 went into her bank account.

There is stage one, Mr. Speaker, and what we have got to face up to is either enforcing the law or revising it, because the police just wink at this kind of thing. In wide-open fashion, there are bookies operating in Queen's Park right here. Right here in this building, there are bookies operating!

An hon. member: Did the hon. member buy one?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I have never bought one in my life and I do not say it proudly.

I just never get out to the racetracks and I do not frequent them from afar.

Mr. Frayne goes to the next step, Mr. Speaker:

As the dumb blondes go, this girl is a Texas Guinan, but as a bookmaker she is little better than a gifted amateur. Her next step, if she adopts the classic road to the top in her adopted profession, is to acquire a cigar store, a lunch counter, or a dry cleaning shop as a screen for her trade, a "sheet writer" to record bets that come in by the telephone; and, if she prospers, a contract with an American firm that wires the results of races at all the tracks on the continent as soon as they are run off. She might even sell cigars, although most bookies have little regard for their putative occupations. "I know a guy," says racing writer Joe Perlove, "who has this dry cleaning business but if you brought in a suit he would smack you square on the head!"

Well, that is stage two where the individual operator gets tied in with the developing organization.

What is stage three? Well, Mr. Frayne puts it very graphically.

In time a gifted bookie can graduate from his store front entirely to run his business sensibly, under a club charter from the provincial government. These charters, though, countenance members gambling with each other on the premises, but do not stretch to telephone bets from a wide public as Toronto police pointed out when they took a smart businessman named Max Bluestein, proprietor of the Lakeview athletic club, to court last December. The evidence at Bluestein's trial was that the club he ran with two other bookmakers was booking an average of $37,000 a day in illegal bets for well over $13 millions a year.

So there you have it, Mr. Speaker, from the individual to the tie-in with the organization, to becoming established with the approval and the knowledge of government departments—certainly with the inaction of government departments.

Then we get into the international links, Mr. Speaker. What has the evidence been in the last year with regard to the international links? We have, for example, the Toronto Telegram of April 22, 1961, quoting the U.S. Justice Department:

The F.B.I. and the Bureau of Narcotics, say that they have been fighting organizational crime in Canada and the United States for 20 years and have not been getting anywhere.

This, Mr. Speaker, raises a very interesting point—the number of times we have to find out about organized crime in Canada from American sources. They have been fighting it for 20 years and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has only got around to fighting it in the last 48 hours. In fact, he just learned of its existence about 48 hours ago.

Let us take another example, Mr. Speaker. The Toronto Daily Star on August 22, where it reported that "the New York State crime probers told the Senate subcommittee today that Toronto bookmaking is big time and linked to U.S. gamblers."

But let us turn now to a very authoritative person, Commissioner Harvison of the R.C.M.P. who came into the city of Toronto a week or so ago and made a rather remarkable statement. What Commissioner Harvison said in that speech was not something that was new in his public announcements, because as far back as last June he had made the statement that Canada was being invaded from the United States by "powerful corrupting and vicious crime syndicates."

But he spelled it out a bit more on this occasion when speaking to the Canadian Club. He apparently had come right into the city of Toronto to speak ostensibly to the Canadian Club, but in reality his words obviously were directed to the hon. Attorney-General.

Because what he said was this:

Crime syndicates in the United States have infiltrated Canadian gambling, narcotics, trafficking, counterfeiting and protection racket enterprises and seek to spread their evil influence in Canada.

He went on to ask why this was happening. He pointed out that the F.B.I. in the United States and The Attorney-General's Department there are vigorously prosecuting the leaders of organized crime and those operating it. So they are moving up to Canada, because they think these are greener fields in which to prosper and to invest their illicit gains. He pointed out that Castro has chased the gamblers out of Cuba and that they too, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: May I—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I continue to quote from Commissioner Harvison?

Mr. Speaker: Let the member have his point of order.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My point is this—on a point of order, that is what I am moving on—the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is reading from a speech, he is taking certain excerpts, and I am going to ask him now if he will—I have a copy of the speech here—but if he will read the bottom of page 5, the top of page 6, particularly the centre of page 6. I will give the hon. members one sentence:

None of these operations brought the power of the syndicates into Canada

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) wants to make his speeches, he can make them on his time and not mine.

Mr. Speaker, I have attempted briefly to document from sources that are public sources, available to anybody, the extent of organized crime. I want to emphasize once again that our problem has been that the people who are responsible for coming to grips with this have just refused to recognize its existence. That is basically our problem.

The hon. Attorney-General has been playing a game of make-believe for the past year. But not only the hon. Attorney-General—and this is where it becomes even more serious. For example, this year when word came from the United States—this is in August—commenting on charges before a Senate Committee in the United States, that there were phone links between Toronto and New York and gamblers and bookmakers were in big-time business in Toronto, Fred Gardiner immediately rushes into the picture and said:

I do not believe one word of it, gambling here is kaput. Ever since the Max Bluestein incident, gambling and every other racket has been 100 per cent under control here.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is exactly what Chief Mackey told me yesterday at noon.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, will you please have that hon. gentleman keep his seat?

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker will maintain order.

Mr. MacDonald: I draw your attention to a third incident, Mr. Speaker, and that is when Chief Mackey made his comment that bingo had now come into the control of organized gamblers in the province of Ontario and that their yearly take was some $6 million after prizes. What was the reaction of Mayor Nathan Phillips? He immediately launched a counter offensive. "Lay off bingo" was his cry. Here we have the chief of police pointing to the fact that bingo is part of organized crime and the mayor of all the people in the city of Toronto immediately demands that he lay off bingo.

Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that statements like these from the hon. Attorney-General, from the Metro mayor, from the mayor of Toronto, are precisely the kind of protection that organized crime wants and needs in order to get established in this country.

They are almost criminal in their irresponsibility. This is lulling the public into a sense of satisfaction with regard to the situation when others have tried to point out its seriousness. I have talked to Chief Mackey no more than 48 hours ago, sitting beside him at a luncheon and I will not reveal the confidences of that discussion but they are not completely in line with what the hon. Attorney-General said just a moment ago.

The consequences of this, Mr. Speaker, are what I now want to discuss. We have the crime, the evidence of it; we have the attitude of top Tories, the hon. Attorney-General, Metro mayor and the mayor of Toronto, toward it. What disturbed me yesterday was the kind of lighthearted approach in one respect, that even the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) took, because while he said we are going to prosecute these men vigorously—that was nothing new for the hon. Attorney-General has been saying he was going to prosecute them vigorously all the time he was saying that there was no problem. Then he went on to kind of dismiss what had been presented in this House as a rehash of information that was available in the papers and evidence submitted in the courts, as though it was not important.

Well, there was one comment in the Morton report in which they might have gone beyond their terms of reference and pointed to the long-term problem and danger of this, and I want to read that comment..

From an examination of the problem, the committee is satisfied that there is grave danger, if the present illegal gambling operation is permitted to continue, that either domestic or foreign criminal elements will prosper to such an extent as to undermine the very nature of our society.

Those are pretty serious words, Mr. Speaker:

the very nature of our society.

Commissioner Harvison, Mr. Speaker, has also pointed out once again how this threat was being established, when he said this:

The second step, when big crime syndicates move into a territory, is buying protection from prominent officials.

Now I want to pause here, Mr. Speaker, for a moment because this is a relatively new development in the province of Ontario, in the proportions that we now have to face it. It is an extension of the American pattern of crime and I think it is useful, in fact I think it is necessary, that we in this House should take a look at certain aspects of the American pattern of crime, because there is every reason to believe that they are going to be duplicated here in the province of Ontario. So let us look across the border for a moment.

The head of the U.S. Department of Justice's special group on organized crime declared about a year ago, and I am quoting here:

The underworld gets about $9 million of the estimated $47 billion spent annually on illegal gambling. Fully half of the syndicates' income from gambling is earmarked for protection money paid to the police and politicians.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, here is a U.S. Department of Justice special group on organized crime flatly asserting that there is a cool $4.5 million being spent in the United States to corrupt politicians and the police as part of the whole establishment of organized crime.

Let me go to another phase of it in the United States. Alexander Heard has made a study of campaign contributions and financing of political parties in the United States, and he has estimated that organized crime currently pays for 15 per cent of campaign expenditures at state and local levels. In fact, he has documented figures in which he points out that back in 1952, that would have been some $16 million, a figure which was ten times the national contribution of organized labour to politics and political action in the United States. Now we are getting this situation into perspective.

I want to say to Cabinet ministers who are going around today crying havoc about labour support for the New Democratic Party, through contributions of five cents per member per month, arguing that it is conscription by extortion, dangerous to the very roots of our democracy. Perhaps their cries are to distract attention not only from the size and source of their own campaign funds but, also, from something even more insidious, something that threatens to undermine the very nature of our society—as Professor Morton puts it.

In view of the documented case of campaign contributions by organized crime in the United States and establishment of the same pattern of organized crime in Canada, it is pertinent to ask what proof the old parties are willing and able to give to the people of this province that their campaign funds are not being augmented by contributions from the leaders of organized crime? The case is even stronger for a public audit of the central funds of political parties along the lines suggested by the amendment introduced to The Election Act by one of my colleagues a year ago; and it will be introduced again this year. If political parties are not recipients of contributions from organized crime, then the obligation falls upon them to provide the proof; not simply by verbal denial of the fact, for that is not good enough, but to open their books to public audit.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): May I ask, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member reading from something, or is this his own idea?

Mr. MacDonald: These are my own ideas.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All right, I just wondered.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right. When I am indicating a quotation, I will indicate it as a quotation.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the N.D.P. concept of justice.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): To make them publish their accounts; what are you hiding?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am willing—does the hon. gentleman know who made contributions to the Conservative Party in the last election?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, how can he say that there were no gambling monies going into his contributions?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member is saying that a man is guilty until he is proven innocent.

Mr. MacDonald: How can the hon. Minister say that there were no contributions to your funds?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Unless they are willing to publish their accounts and let the people of this province see for themselves, we have the right to say that the pattern of American organized crime is being duplicated here, and we have the evidence that in the United States 15 per cent of the funds at the state and community level are coming from organized crime. So either put up or shut up in terms of where they are getting—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the N.D.P. concept of justice.

An hon. member: Everybody knows where our funds come from, where do the hon. member's come from?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would ask once again that the hon. members give all members in this debate equal consideration.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, let me carry this one step further. Campaign funds are not the only kind of protection money that is spent by organized crime. They move directly to corrupt politicians and law-enforcement agencies, as has been pointed out—and union leaders, agree.

When the Kefauver committee exposed the operations of organized crime in the United States—operations which we have since learned extended international links into Ontario and are carefully masterminded by secret meetings of big-time gambling leaders, such as the Apalachin strategy gathering that was held—Thomas E. Dewey, then governor of New York State stated this, and I am quoting, Mr. Prime Minister, from Thomas E. Dewey:

This would not happen were there not definite links between big-time gambling racketeers and those in high office.

Indeed, the point constantly emphasized in American reports, and here the hon. Attorney-General might heed, is that we have to reckon not only with the existence of organized crime but also with wealthy and firmly established criminal classes. In the words of the American Bar Association report on organized crime, the gambling industry in the United States has and I am quoting:

acquired control of an enterprise of fantastic proportions with all the power that flows from the control of great wealth. The result has been a new type of criminal, living in luxury, flanked by expensive attorneys and advisors, able to cut deeper into our social structure by corrupting weak officials than he ever did by open defiance and violence.

Events during the past few months in Ontario have revealed a set of gamblers in Ontario living in luxury, defended when charged by the top criminal lawyers of the province. The American Bar Association's comment obviously has application here. Indeed in Ontario this situation has already become even more blatant. The company records of the hon. Provincial Secretary's department reveal that at least one of these top criminal lawyers is a business partner with the admitted professional gambler in so-called legitimate enterprises which—there is every reason to believe—are financed by the illicit gains of organized crime.

There is no mystery as to who this person is. It is David Humphrey. His name has already been mentioned in that connection. How many more of these top criminal lawyers, who are the constant defenders of these professional gamblers when they come before the courts, are involved jointly in business enterprises with them, we do not know. The hon. Provincial Secretary's records do not provide all of these details.

But in the light of Governor Dewey's statement that this could not happen were there not definite links between big-time gambling racketeers and those in high office, I suggest that the public is entitled to a full explanation on a number of situations. Since these involve the government or departments of the government, or agencies thereof, getting the full facts on these situations is possible only through an independent commission.

Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of ways in which a government or agency can be involved. One I would describe as being involved by negative assistance; that is they are simply doing nothing by not fulfilling their duties. Mr. Speaker, if I may pause and just emphasize this point for a moment, this is what makes the detection of organized crime particularly difficult, because the protection money that is paid is very often paid not to get somebody to do something but merely to get somebody to do nothing. If they happen to be in the appropriate government department or law-enforcement agency it is desperately difficult to be able to spot and to pin down the responsibility for somebody whose act is a negative act. He is doing nothing instead of doing something. So you have this negative kind of assistance.

On other occasions, there has been active co-operation.

Let me draw attention for a moment to some of the negative kinds of assistance. There is the situation, for example, of government-licensed social or gaming clubs. The newspapers have repeatedly commented on this. The hon. leader of the Opposition has solidly documented this situation. The prima facie case for a full investigation of the failure of The Department of the Attorney-General and that of the Provincial Secretary is now absolutely conclusive.

How could Max Bluestein and a couple of bookmaking partners operate government-licensed Lakeview athletic club for so long, averaging $37,000 a day in illegal bets or well over $13 million in a year? How?

As the Toronto Daily Star pointed out in a front page story by Jocko Thomas last May 26, a big time Toronto township gambling club was able to continue its operations under a provincial charter for months, even after Premier Frost had personally been informed of it by the Toronto township police chief Garnet Magill. What is the explanation for this—or even more important, for any other such clubs which are still in operation?

However, Mr. Speaker, we have got to move not from only negative assistance by doing nothing to something even more serious. There are allegations that within The Department of the Attorney-General some have moved from the negative to the active participation in the gambling world, and this is a desperately serious situation and set of allegations.

Portions of the Scott diary that were not revealed in court refer to fixes being made at Queen's Park and senior officials of The Department of the Attorney-General being involved, even to the extent of being paid $800 a month. The hon. leader of the Opposition chose not to name the officials whose names were mentioned in the diary. Mr. Speaker, naming them is neither here nor there. The term "senior officials" encompasses a very small number of people. At the moment the offices along Bay Street and the halls of Queen's Park are buzzing with whispers concerning this matter.

If in addition to this fact, Mr. Speaker, it is true, as the evidence suggests, that the hon. Attorney-General did halt the Ontario Provincial Police investigation, then the situation becomes even more serious. When the Ontario Provincial Police conducts an investigation in which the evidence dug out involves high officials in The Department of the Attorney-General, then it is no time for the investigation to be halted or for the evidence to be withheld from the public.

Mr. Speaker, I say this. If these men are not guilty they have every right to have their names cleared and cleared as quickly as possible. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, to maintain public confidence in as important a department as that which is responsible for the administration of justice, it is absolutely necessary that those doubts be resolved. The present situation is an intolerable one.

This is perhaps the most important matter which the hon. Prime Minister tended to slur over yesterday when he stated that the evidence given in the House was merely a rehash of what had appeared in the paper or had been submitted to the courts. The fact of the matter, in this instance, is that the evidence was withheld from the court and it would be interesting to know who was responsible for the withholding of that evidence. Only an independent inquiry can resolve this situation. It is impossible, with the government and its departments involved to this extent, that the situation should go on without being resolved, or that they themselves should be able to resolve it. You need an independent authority.

However, Mr. Speaker, let me move on. I want to refer to the role of the Liquor Licensing Board in this. Pierre Berton solidly documented just how far off-base Fred Gardiner was when he said that organized crime was "kaput" in this country with an article that was carried on August 25. I am not going to read this article, Mr. Speaker, it is a very illuminating one, but he sent out a housewife who is one of his operatives, operative 67, who spent two days moving around the city of Toronto, and in the course of two days placed 24 separate bets. He details all the elaborate ways in which crime is going on. He concludes in this fashion:

There is nothing particularly startling in what the operative did. Scores of others do it every day in Toronto. It is only significant really in the light of the curiously bland public statement such as that of Mr. Gardiner that organized crime is kaput.

But then Mr. Berton went on. He said:

If a housewife can place these bets this easily in Toronto, one wonders how is it that the bookies can continue to operate. How can private clubs with their own tickers catering to known criminals continue to hold and get a licence when honest restaurateurs all over town cannot get so much as a wine licence for a steak house?

How is it that a sleazy lounge with bookies behind the bar and prostitutes at the table can continue to enjoy the protection of the Liquor Licence Commission?

A lot of very good questions.

An hon. member: When did he write that?

Mr. MacDonald: Four months ago while you and the government were sleeping. A lot of good questions which the government should answer, Mr. Speaker, or preferably a Royal commission should get the answers, since once again the government is involved.

Let me add one more specific case. Last spring the Town Tavern was spotlighted in a blaze of publicity on account of the brutal beating of Max Bluestein. But right in the midst of this publicity the proprietor of the Town Tavern extended his holdings by the purchase, along with others, of a restaurant around the corner complete with liquor licence. In fact, I think it is a very safe statement to make, Mr. Speaker, that there would have been no purchase if there had been no liquor licence.

A place like the Town Tavern does not become the meeting place of known gamblers without the knowledge and ultimately the approval of the proprietor. Yet right in the midst of the public furor over the Bluestein beating the Liquor Licensing Board gave the proprietors of the Town Tavern a lucrative assist in extending their holdings. How can that be justified? I put that question to Judge Robb when he was before the select committee on government organization, and his explanation was that the board had no reason to delay granting the licence because appeals on the charges arising out of events in the Town Tavern might take years.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the argument that the Liquor Licensing Board was under some obligation for a quick decision which favoured the applicants is eminently unconvincing. Many applicants have been waiting for years to get a Liquor Licensing Board decision. Why the haste in this case?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: How can the hon. member blame the applicant?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Have any charges been laid against the applicant?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Ministers would listen they would see why I am blaming the applicant.

For the moment, Mr. Speaker, let me conclude with presenting to the House one further situation. Feeley and McDermott held extensive mining claims in the Big Duck Lake area in the Thunder Bay district. In September of 1959 they were involved in the incorporation of a gold mining venture known as KRNO Mines Limited, with David Humphrey as president. Shortly after the incorporation McDermott tried to interest at least three brokers in the company using the name of a person high in The Department of Mines who was stated to be interested in the area and would be sending in a geologist to have a look at it.

A departmental geologist did make a survey during the summer of 1960. On page four among the acknowledgments is the following paragraph. I have the report right here, let me read directly from it:

During the course of the field work valuable assistance in the provision of camp facilities and transportation by helicopter was rendered by J. P. McDermott and V. T. Feeley of KRNO Mines Limited. On several occasions the use of the helicopter facilitated the examination of the mineral deposits in the area and the traversing of sections where access was difficult.

Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable situation. Does The Department of Mines usually work in such an intimate way with mining promoters in geological surveys, particularly when the promoters involved are self-confessed professional gamblers? The danger of the leaders of organized crime digging themselves into establishment in legitimate business is an extremely important phase of this whole problem.

That is why, when the proprietor of Town Tavern buys with the assistance of the government a licensed restaurant around the corner, it is of some relevance. Yet the hon. Minister's department was working hand in glove with known professional gamblers.

Mr. Speaker, there is another intriguing feature to this report. Printed at the bottom of the front cover of the report is this notation: "This report has not been edited in order to allow immediate publication." Surely it is very strange that a technical report would be rushed into publication without the usual editing. Clearly the professional geologist whose name stands on it was unhappy about something and was seeking to protect himself.

Why the unseemly haste? Well, I will suggest an answer, and perhaps we should have it investigated to be confirmed or elaborated on. Feeley and McDermott held the vendors' shares of KRNO Mines. One week after the geological survey was released, was rushed into print without editing, by coincidence or otherwise KRNO Mines filed its prospectus with the Ontario Securities Commission, applying for permission to release the vendors' shares for public sale.

The interesting thing here, Mr. Speaker, is that those familiar with mining have long considered the mining possibilities in the Thunder Bay district, especially for gold, to be slim indeed. The area has been prospected many times and the favourite quip in the trade is that all the gold in that district is to be found along Bay Street. This geological survey has every appearance, Mr. Speaker, of having been rushed into print just before Feeley and McDermott were about to seek permission to strike gold by bilking public by sizeable sums through the sale of the vendor shares that they controlled. Unfortunately, between—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): I come from up there and—

Mr. MacDonald: Why is the hon. Minister so anxious to defend these men?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am not defending them.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does he not let me present the facts and—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Because the hon. member is telling lies.

Mr. MacDonald: Why is the hon. Minister of Mines interrupting so much? I would think that silence on his part would be most appropriate.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member would not be happy unless he was down in the gutter anyway. Carry on.

Mr. MacDonald: Unfortunately between the time KRNO Mines made application for public sale of stock and the hearing by the Ontario Securities Commission, the news began to break of Feeley and McDermott's involvement with organized crime, and allegedly other serious ramifications of it, and so the application was turned down. I am informed that Feeley and McDermott since have lost interest in the whole venture.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is a final phase of this subject which is perhaps the most disturbing of all. Our society and civilization is built on the rule of law. When law enforcement agencies become corrupted, then indeed, as Professor Morton has warned, the very nature of our society is being undermined.

The evidence of corruption of the judiciary and other law enforcement agencies in the United States is so widely documented and known as not to require elaboration. But what is the situation here in Ontario? Obviously the threat is a very real one. The bribery case involving the O.P.P. is now sub judice, but the evidence is so replete with testimony alleging corruption of various arms of the law enforcement agencies that it cannot be ignored and should not be ignored in this House.

The case of alleged bribery of a juror was dismissed for lack of conclusive evidence but the circumstances could not help but leave an uneasiness in the mind of any serious-minded citizen. We have had evidence presented to this House of a planted jury, of circumstances where, by strange coincidence, men who got on the jury in that trial happen to be involved with the company which was going to promote the stock of the mining firm that Feeley and McDermott were in.

The hon. Prime Minister cannot simply dismiss this kind of thing. This is at least prima facie evidence of the corruption of the judiciary and other law enforcement agencies in this province, that must be looked into. The hon. leader of the Opposition has placed on record the reported attempts to bribe Magistrate Joseph Addison with $50,000 prior to the trial of a well-known gambler. This has been in the papers, and so has the fact that efforts were made on three occasions to influence Magistrate Fred Thompson on a case involving another gambler who was before him. It is inconceivable that the hon. Attorney-General would have done nothing about these serious threats to the integrity of our judiciary.

After all the public discussion these matters have provoked surely some public statements from the hon. Attorney-General as to what he did in these cases is long overdue. But the threat does not end there.

Richard Hayward of the Toronto Telegram is one of the most knowledgeable and reliable reporters in his field. On November 10 the Telegram carried a front-page story by Mr. Hayward. I assume the hon. Attorney-General reads the Toronto Telegram, and I am wondering why we have not had something from him on this.

The opening paragraph of Mr. Hayward's story was this: "There is organized crime in Ontario and municipal police chiefs could help the Attorney-General expose it if they want to." That is the end of the quotation for the moment.

Mr. Hayward had canvassed the situation with police chiefs across the province, reported their understandable reluctance to give details, but then he went on, and I am quoting from Mr. Hayward's article:

One told me that a known gambler had been vouched for by a police chief so that he could obtain a charter for his social club.

This is a highly inappropriate point for the hon. Provincial Secretary, who has gone out. . . . He cannot speak, Mr. Speaker, he has gone out.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I certainly can on a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think it was very unfair but typical of the hon. member to make a remark like that. I am going out not because I want to, but because I have to fulfil another duty and it will be the first time I have ever left the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, let me read—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: May I ask the hon. member to withdraw that remark?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to withdraw any—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is imputing the motives of my leaving this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order! It is highly improper for hon. members of this Legislature to impute motives to other members. If any hon. member leaves this Chamber no other member can impute the motive for his leaving.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, earlier in this debate the hon. Provincial Secretary has been constantly interrupting and saying "we are doing everything, we are on top of the job, we are looking after it" and then when I read from a story that was carried on the front page of the Toronto Telegram which said "One police chief told me that a known gambler had been vouched for by a police chief so that he could obtain a charter for his social club"—all I added was that it was highly inappropriate that the hon. Minister should be out when I was saying this kind of thing; he should be in the House here to listen, because I am providing evidence that I want some action on.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: What kind of evidence is that?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister will sit down, I will repeat it. I said that this man is a highly reliable and knowledgeable reporter in his field and he published this on the front page of the Toronto Telegram, which is a Tory supporting paper. If this is not prima facie evidence enough for the hon. Provincial Secretary to get out of his seat and do something, instead of being a negative participant in the establishment of organized crime, then I do not know, and I shall continue to present my case.

I continue with a quote from Mr. Hayward:

Later the same gambler is reported to have paid for part of a reception held by the chief. I saw this police chief. He admitted to me that he took money from the gambler but only for one round of drinks. Another chief said that he had been told by a big-time gambler that he was "paying off from here to Toronto." He added that although he knew who was getting the money in Toronto, "it would cost me my life to reveal it." Still another police chief said he knew of gamblers using an airstrip in his community to fly back and forth from Toronto for gaming purposes. In another city a police sergeant was told if he continued his harassment of certain gambling houses he would be taken care of. He did, and was. After one more raid the sergeant was assigned to permanent desk duty but not until he had been offered a bribe which he refused.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting, still quoting:

The chief of another city told of gamblers' political influence. He gave details off the record.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: All hearsay evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is about time the hon. Minister collected some of the hearsay evidence and did something about it. This is smug complacency, a negative assist to these people to get established.

It is absolutely incredible, Mr. Speaker, that such accounts should be published without any statement or action by this government. I assume the hon. Attorney-General, as I said before, is reading the Telegram and therefore I ask: Why his silence, because that was published on November 10.

The United States Attorney-General Robert Kennedy has declared, and I am quoting, "If we do not, on a national scale, attack criminals with weapons and techniques as effective as their own they will destroy us."

Contrast that with the complacency of our hon. Attorney-General who has had to be badgered and beaten by events, by the public, by the press, by the Opposition, before he would even acknowledge the existence of organized crime.

The hon. Attorney-General's record in this connection is one of indescribable irresponsibility. It is almost beyond belief that with this record he should have been re-appointed to the post of Attorney-General in the new government. If the circumstances within the Tory party following the leadership convention dictated his re-appointment then, Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that the welfare of the Conservative party has been given precedence over the welfare of the province of Ontario.

The case for a Royal commission is now absolutely beyond dispute. Government agencies and departments of this government, according to evidence that is now before the House, are involved. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of situation which must be resolved. We must have the full facts, the public are entitled to them, and because the government is involved they themselves cannot do the investigation.

I would say that the case for a Royal commission is now conclusive to everybody—except those within the government who, if they continue their present approach, leave the public with no other alternative but to come to the conclusion that they dare not let the full facts become known, because it will blow the government right out of office.

I turn finally now, Mr. Speaker, to some amendments which I would like to move. I would like to preface it with these comments. I doubt whether there has ever been an occasion in which a political party in this country is speaking with such a babel of voices and such a confusion of policy as the Liberal Party at the present time. For example, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition got up in the House last year and made a very impassioned plea for mass immigration to this country. The day afterwards his federal leader went into the city of Hamilton and said, in effect, that now is not the time for mass immigration. And I was very interested to see that just two or three days ago, when Walter Gordon was speaking here in the city of Toronto, he said, "I do not support immigration under present circumstances." One wonders what is the policy of the Liberal Party on immigration.

I was interested to note the other day, for example, that the federal leader of the Liberal Party attacked the New Democratic Party for its policy of bringing old age pensions up in line with the cost of living today, namely $75 a month, and said this was impossible and heaped scorn on this story. I was interested in it because just a year or two ago I sat and listened to the hon. member for Bracondale (Mr. Gould) make a plea in this House that not the federal government but the provincial government should be paying pensions of $75. If it is not possible for the federal government to finance the $75 pension, what about the voice of the Liberals who want it to be done provincially?

And health insurance! We all know that the Liberals have been talking about health insurance since 1919. We all know that they fought eight elections and won seven of them before 1957, and during the 38 years they did nothing about it. By 1955 they had backed away from their policy altogether.

A year or so ago in this House the Liberal Party introduced a motion in which they called for the establishment of a province-wide health insurance programme that would be prepaid, et cetera, et cetera. They did not clarify the nature of the programme so we moved an amendment that it would be "government-sponsored," and automatically the Liberals got into a battle in which their true interests with the Tories were revealed. They opposed the idea it should be government-sponsored and voted with the government to end a debate on their own motion.

Confusion in strategy as well as a confusion in politics. It is interesting to speculate as to what their policy is today on health insurance because undoubtedly it is an important matter. If they have been talking about it since 1919, it must be an important matter, yet it is not included in their amendments.

Finally, Mr. Speaker—perhaps the epitome of the confusion—we come back to sales tax. After promoting it for three or four years last spring they suddenly did a switch and tried to catch the political wind by opposing it in the House. More recently they have come out with a position that can only be described as supporting it with certain revisions. Heaven knows what their policy will be a few months from now.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I was not able to follow the tortuous explanation of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) when he said that he was not going to call for a Royal commission to investigate crime because somehow or other that would mean that the back benchers of the Conservative party would have to vote against it. Since they traditionally vote against an amendment to the Throne Speech, this meant it would not be a good thing to put it in there. Now, I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the back benchers of the Conservative party are putting the welfare of the province of Ontario ahead of the welfare of their own party, they will vote for a motion to have an investigation of crime in this province, and therefore it should be part of a want-of-confidence motion.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I move seconded by the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn):

That the amendment to the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House be amended:

(a) By striking out clauses 1 and 2 thereof and substituting the following:

1. That the government has refused to appoint a commission to conduct a full, untrammelled public inquiry into the organized crime in this province in all its ramifications, has otherwise failed to take adequate steps to protect the people of the province against this deadly menace, and has indeed, by its negligence and its refusal to face up realistically to the known facts, permitted organized crime to extend its foothold in the province.

2. That the government has not seen fit to eliminate the retail sales tax and to rely instead on more equitable and progressive methods of raising money, such as corporation and income taxes, revenues from natural resources and a weight-distance tax.

(b) By adding thereto the following:

And this House further regrets:

1. That the government has failed to disclose any genuine awareness of the imperative need for comprehensive social and economic planning to provide continuous economic growth, full employment and balanced development of all sections of the province.

2. That the government has failed to act decisively and with a due sense of urgency to remedy the gross neglect of adequate safety precautions in important sections of Ontario industry, particularly the construction industry, and has thereby permitted the safety and even the lives of countless workmen to remain in jeopardy.

3. That the government has announced no plans to encourage farmers' economic organizations but on the contrary is continuing to hamstring such organizations with restrictive legislation, thereby undermining the position of the independent farmer and the family farm.

4. That the government has not seen fit to proceed with a programme of health insurance, covering medical and other related services as well as hospital services.

5. That the government has failed to develop a co-ordinated welfare programme designed to help all those in need regardless of category or residential qualifications, and in particular, has failed to establish welfare allowances on a budgetary basis in line with the Ontario Welfare Council's suggested minimum income and to negotiate an agreement with Ottawa for a cost-sharing arrangement to replace the present multiplicity of specific grants.

6. That the government has not announced any intention to proceed with a bill of rights for this province.

Mr. J. H. White (London South) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, on Monday we will proceed with some other orders on the order paper, there are some second readings of bills that have not come up yet, and we will proceed with the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.50 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from Holy Rosary School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the township of Etobicoke praying that an Act may pass providing that the provisions of The Public Parks Act shall not apply to the township.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass incorporating the board of governors of the Hamilton civic hospitals; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Toronto praying that an Act may pass respecting payment for services installed in advance of development of land.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. C. T. Rollins, from the select committee appointed to prepare the list of hon. members to compose the standing committees of the House, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that the standing committees on public accounts and on conservation, lands and forests ordered by the House on Tuesday last, November 28, be composed as follows:

Committee on Public Accounts—Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Fullerton, Gomme, Gould, Grossman, Guindon, Hanna, Haskett, Hoffman, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morrow, Myers, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Price, Reaume, Rollins, Rowntree, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, Trotter, Whicher, White, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on Conservation, Lands and Forests—Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brunelle, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Johnston (Parry Sound), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, McNeil, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Price, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Sopha, Spence, Sutton, Troy, Whicher, White, Wintermeyer—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Election Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, there are two questions I would like to ask, on both of which I have given notice.

The first one is to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts): In Saturday's issue of the Peterborough Examiner, there appears a letter from Inspector Allan Stringer of the OPP in reply to allegations that he had tipped off gamblers with regard to undercover work against them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at your suggestion I shall not give the substance of the quote. But what Mr. Stringer in effect has said is that "over-zealous underlings" of the hon. Attorney-General have been responsible for digging-out information with regard to organized crime in this province, information which the hon. Attorney-General has then just proceeded to use as a "stepping stone to higher places." Would the hon. Attorney-General comment on this and indicate what action he proposes to take in the light of Inspector Stringer's letter?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has considerably shortened the quotes he had in the—

Mr. MacDonald: At the request of Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: However, my answer, which may not be quite as apparent without all the quotes which I would have appreciated having, my answer is simply this: my comment is that the material as quoted appears to me to be garbled nonsense. Insofar as there may be matters concerning discipline internal to the force, the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police has the matter in hand.

Mr. MacDonald: Garbled nonsense! Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask as a supplementary question: the garbled nonsense is in reference to Inspector Stringer's statement, is it?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In reference to the material which the hon. member presented to me preliminary to his question, which I answered accordingly.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, my second question was to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). The hon. Minister informed the House last Tuesday that a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture will be held on Thursday, December 7, and as quoted in Hansard, its purpose was for the hearing of recommendations of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and any others who may be interested, relative to an agricultural machinery Act in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I happened to meet some top officers of the Ontario Farmers' Union last Friday here in the Parliament Buildings and discovered in talking with them that they were unaware of this meeting. Since the hon. Minister has stated that this meeting was for the purpose of hearing the views of any others who may be interested—and they are so interested as to have passed a resolution at their convention—will he inform the House who or what organizations have officially been invited to attend this meeting?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member, I thank him for his advance notice of this.

I might say that a letter was forwarded under date of November 29 to the president of the Ontario Farmers' Union. This was the day following the day the announcement was made in the House, if I am correct. It may not have reached him. I have a copy of the letter right here, it is dated November 29, and addressed to Mr. Melvin L. Tebbut informing him of the meeting and asking if he would like to send a representative to the meeting.

I cannot understand how he did not know, but he might not have been home to have received his mail; or perhaps it is someone else to whom the hon. member is referring.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture was advised on the same date, as well as the Ontario Retail Farm Equipment Dealers Association. We have a letter confirming their notification.

I have great respect for our gentlemen in the press gallery and I am sure that the reporting of this has reached many people in the province, some of whom have called suggesting they might like to come. To any of those who want to come, the meeting is wide open.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motions:

Bill No. 5, An Act to amalgamate The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and The Department of Commerce and Development.

Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act.

Bill No. 7, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act.

Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Parks Assistance Act.

Bill No. 9, An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act.

Bill No. 10, An Act to amend The Forest Fires Prevention Act.

Bill No. 11, An Act to amend The Forestry Act.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves second reading of Bill No. 17, An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LEGITIMACY ACT, 1961-62

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 21, The Legitimacy Act, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MASTER AND SERVANT ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 22, An Act to amend The Master and Servant Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MAINTENANCE ORDERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 25, An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DENTISTRY ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves second reading of Bill No. 29, An Act to amend The Dentistry Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CANCER ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 32, An Act to amend The Cancer Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves second reading of Bill No. 33, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves second reading of Bill No. 34, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 35, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, may I first take this opportunity to extend my thanks and appreciation and my compliments to you, sir, for the able manner in which you perform your very onerous duties. I feel confident that my remarks this afternoon will be of such a nature that your duties will be very light in controlling the House.

The purpose of my remarks is to attempt in my own way to give to you, sir, and to the hon. members of this House some facts and information relative to the operation of a number of the branches of The Department of Lands and Forests. We have in this department many different functions to perform and I felt that it would be more advisable if I might be given the opportunity to deal with a number of these things at different times during the session of the House, so that one would not have to listen to matters relating only to Lands and Forests and its operation all on the same day.

One of the problems of forest management, of course, which is one of our prime responsibilities, is that even with this province's great productive capacity regeneration and growth of desired tree species on cut-over land is most imperative. Hence the advanced plan of forest management which has been advanced by the department's officials and staff is vital to meeting future needs of the people of Ontario, even though our forest lands have the productive capacity to meet the new demands of industry in the near future without any intensive utilization.

It is estimated that Ontario will have a population of eight million people by 1975 and that the demand for timber from Crown lands will double by 1980, or in about 20 years.

Management plans, which are required from all licensees holding 50 square miles or more, must provide for the orderly regulation of development, harvesting, regeneration and treatment of the area under licence. In case of the Crown management unit, the management plans are prepared by department foresters and are kept on file here in our office and through our different district offices.

These management plans may vary from a scheme for the development of potential timber values in the hinterland; to active, realistic operational prescriptions to meet clearly stated objectives of established industry in areas where the available timber and the market demands are nearly in balance.

This department manages 148,000 square miles of the province's productive forest, of which 82,000 square miles is under Crown timber licence to the forest industries. The total net volume of timber cut on Crown timber licences is in the neighbourhood of 350 million cubic feet, with a stumpage value of $12 million. The cut is about 90 per cent in coniferous forest and 10 per cent hardwoods.

The allowable annual cut of coniferous growth on Crown land equals 700 million cubic feet; the annual allowable cut of hardwoods equals 520 million cubic feet. The total allowable annual cut equals 1,220 million cubic feet, which is over twice the actual cut of coniferous timber and 15 times the actual cut of hardwood.

The broad objectives of the timber branch are to manage the Crown forests of Ontario so as to provide the established forest industry with its present requirements, to meet the needs of expansion, and to provide, by sale and licensing, a supply of timber for new industry and new utilization up to the volume of allowable cut.

In order to meet these objectives, the timber branch conducts forest surveys and compiles the forest inventory, prepares its own management plans and analyzes and approves those furnished by industry. It operates 11 nurseries producing 50 million trees annually, conducts silvicultural operations for stand improvement, and operates a licensing system for the sale of standing timber. In short, the main functions of the branch are timber production and sales.

In addition to responsibilities on Crown lands, the timber branch also manages 143,000 acres for counties, municipalities and conservation authorities, known as agreement forests, all managed under the terms of specific agreements. The branch also conducts a forestry extension service, which is concentrated mainly on private woodlots in southern Ontario, but some 85,000 persons—land-owners, mostly farmers, and some others—are interested in this extension programme.

The organization of management planning and forest inventory has been based on the characteristics of the forest associations found in Ontario. A realistic silvicultural practice is being carried out, on the basis of these associations. The methods used in planning and inventory have been influenced basically by the existing and probable markets for timber products, the mass production techniques of the logging industry, the cost of regeneration and the present economic development of the forest industry. The best principles of textbook forestry have been advanced in our new plans.

Our forest industry and management planning is integrated in structure, so that there is hardly any line of demarcation between them. Management planning in Ontario under the revised methods now in effect takes into consideration the experience gained in the last 15 years or more in the intensive use and analysis of plans and inventory which were completed during this period.

The preparation of normal yield tables and extensive work on cull studies has supplemented the forest inventory to a large degree. In the reinventory programme now in its fourth year, normal yield tables are used exclusively in determining volume and increment, for annual growth. The first forest resources inventory was begun in 1946 and completed in 1957. Reinventory commenced in 1955.

This reinventory programme provides for re-photography every ten years. The inventory is designed to meet the demands of the method of management which will probably be a form of clear-cutting over 75 per cent of Ontario, with provision for regeneration, either artificial or natural, assisted by the modification of cutting methods.

Re-photography of approximately 18,000 square miles annually will cover the total exploitable forest area of 180,000 square miles in ten years. This inventory method—which by the way is done by aerial photography—is fast, flexible and relatively inexpensive. It records the basic data in a form that permits ready access for statistical purposes, and provides the detailed stand information required as a basis for management planning.

Management planning is concerned with the rational utilization of forest resources as well as the organization and maintenance of the forest for sustained yield purposes. During the transition from the unmanaged to the managed forest abnormal conditions exist and the management plan, if it is to be of any value, must achieve the best possible compromise between what is economically possible at a given time and what is technically desirable.

Therefore during this period of conversion, the management plan must strive to achieve the following broad objectives:

First, it must strive to meet the economic needs of the existing forest industries and the forest requirements of the present generation.

Second, it must promote the utilization of surplus forest resources through the establishment of new industry.

Third, it must strive to lay the foundation, through long-range plans, for an approach to the balanced or normal forest so as to secure sustained maximum production.

The trend of Ontario's forest industry has been upwards since 1958. In 1960, Ontario pulp and paper mills surpassed all previous records with an output of about $495 million, a seven per cent increase over the previous year. Newsprint production was up over seven per cent; in fact this part of the forest industry has the highest annual rate of growth in output since 1946.

The production of woodpulp was substantially ahead, too, and the volume of paper board, and book and writing paper was up more than four per cent over 1959.

The United States continues to be by far the largest market for Ontario's newsprint, using about four-fifths of the output. Exports to overseas countries have reached a record level and are expected to continue rising; I would say that the overall newsprint prospects are good. By the same token, the healthy state of the pulp and paper industry has stimulated logging operations, so that there was a nine per cent increase over 1959 in the volume of wood cut on forest lands.

This is a very important industry. The immense value of the pulp and paper and lumber industries in the provincial economy can easily be realized when it is pointed out that they employ more than 26,000 people—about 21,000 of them in pulp and paper—and pay salaries of about $110 million.

When we include industries that are wholly or partly dependent on wood, we find some 80,000 people employed in Ontario, receiving salaries of upwards of $315 million and with an annual output of about $600 million. Pulp and paper and lumber industries together spend annually more than $31 million for fuel and electricity; several hundred millions are invested in plant and materials. The sale value of factory shipments of pulp and paper products approximates $443 million.

Proper forest management is vital when we consider that forests cover nearly three-quarters of our province. Our 200 million acres of forest land represent more than 15 per cent of Canada's forests. Of this, almost two-thirds is productive and supports a great many industries using wood in manufactures. More important still, 90 per cent of our forests are owned by the Crown—the people of this province—and are administered for them by the Ontario government.

Our presently accessible merchantable timber is estimated at nearly 85 billion cubic feet, and its predominant Crown ownership favours our system of province-wide planning and management. Our department has made great strides in promoting complete utilization of forestry products and eliminating waste.

For example, by suggesting—and that is not quite the right word, because I think we are a little bit more forceful than that—but I use that word—by suggesting the installation of chippers in saw-logging operations with the chips being shipped to pulp and paper mills, we estimate that about 250,000 tons of chips will be utilized this year—enough to supply a mill the size of the one at Iroquois Falls. A very few years ago this good material would not have been utilized.

As the economics of the industry improve, we are confident we can accomplish more in this field in promoting new industries in pulp and paper, hardboard and industries of that type.

One of our other great responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, is that of protecting the forests from ravages of insects and of our worst enemy, fires.

This past year has not been a good one insofar as fire damage is concerned but I think it will prove to be not as serious as was first anticipated. Lightning fires, mostly during the months of June and July, were responsible for 99.2 per cent of the forest fire losses in Ontario this year and represented 34.5 per cent of fires in the province.

The 527 fires which occurred in June and July accounted for 1,170,165 acres of the total 1,184,998 acres burned during the fire season, reaching their peak in northwestern Ontario around the July 1 weekend. However, 80 per cent of the areas burned in northwestern Ontario were north of the area that would be logged in the foreseeable future. It consisted of mature or over-mature trees. In some of the damaged areas natural regeneration is already occurring.

You might say that immediately after the fires were extinguished our foresters were in the area analyzing the damage and planning the salvage of the salvageable damaged forest. Lightning strikes tended to occur in bunches and the fires they cause are most difficult to control. Of the area burned during the season only 3,318 acres were privately owned.

Fires and acreage burned in other months were held to comparatively small losses. For instance in April we had 98 fires burning 1,125 acres. In August we had 253 fires involving 8,300 acres. In September 32 fires involving only 41 acres.

Now it might be of interest to you, sir, in the House, to know some of the fire causes, that is other than lightning. Settlers caused 79 fires damaging 543 acres; campers had 289 fires involving 3,000 acres; the railways 64 fires involving 163 acres; logging operations 19 fires involving 2,516 acres; mining operations only 4 fires. Careless smokers caused 200 fires involving 1,016 acres. Road construction a very small figure of 15 fires and only 14 acres. Incendiary fires were 31 in number and involved 914 acres. Unknown—12 fires involving 914 acres and miscellaneous, which are fires caused chiefly by children playing with matches and fire-crackers, involved 140 fires and 1,503 acres. During the past fire season, and particularly during June and July, the efficiency of our forest fire protection agency was put to the test, and I feel that the organization came out with flying colours. The facility of movement of our forces on a province-wide basis, the well-trained fire crews, the thousands of pieces of equipment, the co-operation of the citizens and the operating companies, all proved their mettle under stress and strain.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): At the time of the fires in the Sioux Lookout area—I ask this question because I have just come back from a little visit up that way and I was informed that the closest the fires got to Sioux Lookout was 35 miles. I was also informed that The Department of Travel and Publicity was making announcements and publishing advertisements advising tourists not to come near Sioux Lookout.

I wonder, was it the hon. Minister's department that told The Department of Travel and Publicity that such be the case—that there was an immediate and present danger to Sioux Lookout and to the tourist resorts in that area?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Under the Act I have the authority to close off any part of the province for fire protection purposes and during the year it happens that certain areas are always closed off to travel. This year was no exception and certain areas of northwestern Ontario were closed to travel. I have not heard anything about anyone being advised by The Department of Travel and Publicity as to whether they should travel or not travel, and so I am not in a position to give a very definite answer to the hon. member's question. I do not know anything about it, but it often happens that we do close off areas of the province to travel during the high hazard season.

Mr. Speaker, I turn now to one of the other very important functions of Lands and Forests—our parks for the people programme. This programme is looking forward to future recreational and park needs and in many areas across the province, lakes and other attractive features are being set aside for the development as required. Six new provincial parks were opened this year; 79 now are fully operating; others are not yet ready for top park status.

With public demand for parks growing year by year, the department's policy under this programme will be steady and continued expansion of the provincial park system. New parks operating this year are Bon Echo in the Tweed district; Fitzroy in the Kemptville district; Ojibway at Sioux Lookout; Turkey Point in Lake Erie; Samuel de Champlain in North Bay district and White Lake in White River district.

Every effort is made to develop the park system, to retain their natural features so that picnickers and campers can get back to nature as a relief from the stresses of urban life. For this reason the major reserves provided in all parks with sufficient acreage are proving most popular with visitors and then in some of the larger provincial parks, wilderness areas are being retained. I have had the pleasure of receiving many letters of commendation from persons who have availed themselves of the park facilities; for instance, one camping family after a vacation in the Pinery which is in the Lake Huron district expressed pleasure and commendation in a letter sent to me.

The Pinery which has 4,340 acres is located on Highway 21, five miles south of Grand Bend. It has a natural oak-pine forest, sand ridges and dunes accumulated over the centuries in an area not previously developed and it also has an excellent beach on Lake Huron.

Of the Pinery the delighted visitors wrote:

Several things contributed to a very enjoyable stay. Firstly we were impressed by the lovely location and well-thought-out layout of the campsites. We enjoyed the peacefulness of the park despite the fact that it contained a very large camping population.

We appreciated the excellent facilities provided. We were most impressed with the helpful and courteous park staff. You and your staff are to be commended on the Pinery, and we are grateful to the province of Ontario for preserving such sites for the general public. We would appreciate it if you could pass on our thanks to the parks superintendent.

We have many other areas set aside, areas that are deemed suitable for future park purposes, and this, Mr. Speaker, will give you some indication of the continuing development projected for the provincial parks system. They extend right across the province and from Kenora district down to Lake Erie and many other parts of Ontario.

In developing the park: after acquiring or choosing the site, a master plan for each provincial park governs development with consideration for its location, its natural features, anticipated use, the anticipated visitation, and major and minor uses. So each park, therefore, is planned and developed individually in view of its optimum use in the interests of public recreation, and in view of the natural environment.

I realize that in southern Ontario we are perhaps facing our most serious need for park facilities but much has been done through government assistance in various ways. We have conducted a survey, for instance, in a radius of 50 miles from Toronto and Hamilton, and we have come up with some rather interesting statistics.

There are almost 8,700 acres of recreational land in this area owned and operated by conservation authorities. The Niagara Parks Commission has 2,800 acres, and Metropolitan Toronto has almost 1,300 acres. I know that my colleague, the hon. member for Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Daley) who is the chairman of the parks integration board, will report this information to the Legislature in greater detail when he has the opportunity to report on the work of the parks integration board.

Some people who are interested in possible refinements of our present parks send suggestions which we appreciate very much; but some of the suggestions have been that we should install laundromats, showers, electricity and waste drains for trailers, and so forth. Now, I do not want to eliminate the eventual possibility of these services being installed, but our thinking at the present time is to retain some semblance of true camping atmosphere in our parks, and I am inclined to think that the vast majority of park users think along these lines. We must draw the line somewhere and block efforts to create a Coney Island or Luna Park in some of our parks.

Other services incidental to our parks programme include the facilities provided for canoe trips. Many trippers enjoy these facilities in quite a large number of our parks. They have made some suggestions in connection with improving the cleanliness on the canoe routes, the portages particularly, and so this brings to light the problem of providing quality recreation of a wilderness type for large numbers of people, and it may well call for public education and additional staffs for patrol and guidance duties.

The park attendance this year, Mr. Speaker, was a record 6,215,300 people to the 79 parks open to the public and where records are kept. There have been many visitors who have availed themselves of the facilities available in some of the parks that are not completed, where the establishment is not completed, and we have not included these numbers in the figures I have just quoted. The figure of 6¼ million is rather an interesting one in that it represents one-third of the whole population of Canada.

There has been an extraordinary increase in the number of campers—a jump of nearly 50 per cent over last year—which, to me, indicates that the need for more parks and more camp sites will continue to be felt as the popularity of camping spirals to an unpredictable peak. The same applies to canoe trippers in our bigger parks who have increased in number by 62 per cent over last year.

In view of the annually decreasing area of public hunting ground, the parks branch has been co-operating with the fish and wildlife branch of The Department of Lands and Forests to provide hunting in some provincial parks. This is another instance of the value of the integration of all efforts geared to the use of natural resources in the department. This year waterfowl hunting has been continued in Rondeau, Presqu'île and Darlington Parks, Holiday Beach Park was added this year, and Long Point Park was included in the managed waterfowl stocking in the adjacent marshlands.

Pheasant hunting of stocked birds was introduced at Sibbald's Point, Darlington and Presqu'île parks this year, while deer hunting in Clyde and Bruton townships, now part of Algonquin Provincial Park, was permitted to continue under certain controls, including the limiting of the number, as well as the location of hunt camps. A moose season was declared open in Lake Superior Park. Although figures are not yet available, it is anticipated that the results will be such as to warrant the continuation of this added park activity.

In a number of our parks we must assist nature in re-establishing itself, and as an instance of that I will quote what has been done in the Pinery Park which is a large area on the shores of Lake Huron, long known as the most southerly area of red and white pine in Ontario. In our parks management programme we are planting this area with red and white pine. Examination in preparing the park's development has shown that much of the soil was covered with scrub hardwood and that indiscriminate cutting practices and repeated fires had removed the pine trees, damaged the soil and spoiled the aesthetic beauty of the land.

To remedy this situation our department embarked on an extensive tree planting programme to work the area to its natural state. Red and white pine have been planted in all the open areas and the low quality hardwoods underplanted with white pine. These two species were chosen because they are native to the site and in keeping with the natural beauty of the park. The programme has involved planting 1,065,000 seedlings since 1957.

Our parks for the people programme provides enjoyment and fine recreation for the summer. Then in winter many of our parks provide employment for quite a large number of our people.

We estimate that this coming winter there will be an expenditure investment, I would say, of close to $1 million in work being done in our provincial parks. This work will provide more camping, parking and recreational space and more trailer sites, as well as road improvements, docks, boat launching ramps, more wells and sanitary facilities and beach and other necessary work.

Completion of the last link in the Trans-Canada Highway around the north shore of Lake Superior brought a tremendous influx of visitors to the northwestern part of the province. It also gave a great impetus to camping. Camp unit days, for instance, in the Port Arthur district were up 125 per cent and in the Sault Ste. Marie district the increase was 300 per cent.

Winter work in the provincial parks is being concentrated in areas of heaviest use in relation to facilities that were available last summer. Enlargement of facilities is regarded as required particularly from Sault Ste. Marie west through White River, Geraldton to the Lakehead and the extreme northwest. Work commensurate with their heavy use is also required in parks in the Lake Erie, Lake Simcoe and Parry Sound districts in southern Ontario.

In 1946 the then Department of Game and Fisheries was amalgamated or integrated with The Department of Lands and Forests and I would say that the whole operation has been most successful.

I would now like to report on some of the activities of the fish and wildlife branch.

Much interest was always evidenced by our people and certainly yourself, Mr. Speaker and hon. members of the House, in receiving a hunting report.

I should like first to deal with the deer hunting report. The impact of the deep snow winters of 1958-1959 and 1959-1960 on the eastern Ontario deer herd was once more clearly revealed in the preliminary results of in 1960 deer hunt. Where the winters were severe, hunting this year was poor. An unhappy coincidence brought unfavourable hunting weather to most of the hard hit areas, making the hunting even worse.

In the more southerly districts where winter mortality was less severe, fairly good hunting weather prevailed. The combination brought hunters better success than has been experienced for the last few years.

In the area from Sault Ste. Marie to North Bay, the gloomy forecasts of The Department of Lands and Forests officials proved only too true. There was the expected small improvement over the 1960 hunt, because of the mild winter just past, but hunting remained generally poor. Yearlings and two-year-olds were conspicuous by their absence at some of the checking stations near North Bay. These were the age classes most affected by the deep snow. The poor hunting weather south of Sudbury along the north shore of Lake Huron added to the frustration of hunters.

On Manitoulin Island, where the snow had not been so deep, success at the end of the first week was running about 20 per cent. This is slightly low for Manitoulin, I am advised by my biologist.

There may be another reason and it may be partly due to the fact that dogs were prohibited for the first time this year and also partly due to the warm, dry weather which made hunting difficult. Despite the weather though, some of the local residents who knew the deer runways did very well. I suppose the hunter, like the fisherman, must know his hunting area.

In Lake Huron district, success on the Bruce peninsula dropped this year. This was also due to poor hunting weather. The age distribution of deer taken from this area shows very little distortion, due to the deep snows.

In Parry Sound, the hunter success maintained the upward trend of last year despite the effects of the winters with deep snow. In 1958 the success in Parry Sound was 29.3 per cent. In 1959, following the first severe winter, the success dropped by about 20 per cent. Even though the 1960 hunting season followed a second deep snow winter, success rose slightly to 23.4 per cent. This year hunters were aided by fairly good hunting weather and preliminary figures indicate the hunter success will be about 25 per cent.

The hunting success in the Lindsay district was about equal to that of 1958 and the best since that time. Apparently the good hunting weather compensated for the winter losses sustained in this district and allowed good success.

Tweed and Kemptville districts were little affected by the severe winters. Both showed normal age distributions with 38.9 per cent yearlings and 24.9 per cent two-year-olds in Tweed.

Pembroke district, farther north, is not in so happy a position. It has suffered losses of deer similar to those in North Bay, Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie districts. Many dead deer were found in the spring surveys of 1959 and 1960.

That these severe winters reduced the available deer can again be shown from the deer ages. Only 24 per cent of the deer shot in Pembroke district in 1961 were yearlings and only 17 per cent were two-year-olds. The same reports are found pretty well throughout the province.

In so far as fishing is concerned, I am not in a position to pass any remarks about that since we have very little statistical information available because we have no resident angler's licence in this province. So we have few methods of amassing any large amount of statistics. In some cases we do obtain and carry on a qualified census in areas where research projects are undertaken.

One of the other services maintained by Lands and Forests is that of establishing hatcheries and providing hatchery-raised fish to supplement the high standard of fishing. Fish management is certainly one of the largest programmes we conduct in this department with the possible exception, I suppose, of enforcement and biology.

The department now operates 18 fish culture establishments including eight rearing stations for brook, brown, lake and rainbow trout; eight pond stations for black bass and maskinonge; one jar hatchery and two hatcheries for culturing early stages of lake trout. All the pond stations used for culturing warm water fish in summer are also used for carrying cold water fish in winter.

In addition to the department hatcheries, one is being developed by The Department of Commerce and Development, and there are 18 private hatcheries operating under permit from the department to produce trout for sale for restocking privately owned waters.

In southern Ontario there are at least 10,000 privately operated multi-purpose farm ponds whose owners sell fishing rights. They purchase stocks of fish from private sources or have their own facilities for maintaining fish stocks.

The objective of the department is to provide fish of the best possible quality at the lowest possible cost. This objective is maintained throughout the complete cycle of events, from spawn-taking to the time the fish are released from the hatchery to public waters. The use of pellets as a supplement in the diet has meant a considerable saving in the cost of feeding, a substantial item in the rearing of trout. Growth, reproductive function, vigour, etc. are kept under careful surveillance to offset any unfavourable development.

Hatchery operations in Ontario are comparable with the best features of these operations in federal and other provincial or state agencies. Adjusting hatchery water temperatures upwards stimulated the growth of rainbow trout and aurora trout. Self-cleaning ponds, fish planting from aircraft, perfected stocking policies and management are some of the improved methods of fish husbandry in use to assure the greatest return of hatchery fish to the fisherman's creel.

The hatchery production of whitefish, yellow pike-perch and black bass for restocking had been greatly curtailed on the basis of research information. The operation of whitefish and pike-perch hatcheries, known to have contributed little, if anything, to fish production, was discontinued for biological as well as for economic reasons.

I would also predict an expansion of private enterprise in this field, particularly as legislation authorizing trout produced in privately owned ponds to be sold for human consumption has been provided. Licences for this enterprise are now available from the department.

The Department of Lands and Forests stocks waters free of charge, provided they are open for public fishing. Posted streams and streams of which less than 50 per cent are open to public fishing are not stocked by the department.

In 1954, the American Fisheries Society, one of the most renowned of its kind in this field, adopted a North American fish policy which was endorsed by Ontario. One of the principles set forth in this policy was, and I quote:

Food, game and forage fishes reared at public expense, should be stocked only for public benefit.

"Open to fishing" does not mean that fishermen can trespass over private property without the owner's consent. If a stream is stocked by the department and is subsequently posted, or public fishing prohibited, stocking is discontinued by the department.

Applications for fish for stocking private waters on the basis of purchase of the fish are referred to private hatcheries. If they are unable to provide supplies of fish, the department considers these requests if surplus fish remain after commitments to public waters have been satisfied.

Our present plans are to provide for an inventory and classification of all waters, particularly those currently under management. This, we feel, will greatly facilitate and improve the hatchery planting programme in Ontario. But we must not be content with inventory only, because basic research is most important and should tell us why the fish planted did survive or why they did not survive.

A site has also been purchased at Sault Ste. Marie for an experimental hatchery and fish culture training centre. There, experimental studies on fish nutrition, selective breeding and assessment of planted stocks of fish are among studies to be undertaken. This training will be primarily for our own hatchery staff. It may extend in the future, but at the present time we are concerned with training our staff and those who have given evidence of great interest in this type of work.

One of the further functions of Lands and Forests is assisting the production of fur pelts by local trappers. One of the activities which we have assisted here is the work being promoted under the auspices of the Ontario Trappers Association with respect to the fur sales. This organization, with our support, will again this coming fall and winter hold a number of fur auctions. These will be on December 12, January 19, February 27, April 10 and May 25.

We recently opened another area in northern Ontario to beaver trapping after it had been closed for some time. After a three-year closure, beaver trapping on a quota system has been reopened in the Indian band areas adjacent to Big Trout Lake. In this large area in the centre of Patricia central district there are approximately 275 Indian trappers who depend largely on trapping for their livelihood.

Beaver is not only a source of revenue for those people but it is also very important as food. During the years when the beaver season had been closed, I think it was rather fortunate that a high population of wild mink in that area helped ease the economic situation.

The beaver die-off occurred in this area between 1949 and 1952. A disease known as tularemia was found to be present among the beaver and it decimated the beaver in those areas.

The department then live-trapped beaver from other parts of the province and transplanted them to this part of northern Ontario. About 800 animals were transplanted in three summers.

This year aerial surveys and ground examination where possible have indicated that the increased beaver population warrants reopening the trapping season. It is considered that the restocking would by now have produced a large population of strong, healthy, active beaver which will continue to multiply.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my remarks are of interest to you and to the House and that I may be privileged later on during this session to present other information on the activities of The Department of Lands and Forests.

At this time, in conclusion, I would like to pay tribute to the very excellent staff which this department has, these people who give willingly of their knowledge at all times. I would say that they recognize their great responsibilities as the caretakers and managers of the birthright of all our citizens in the natural resources of the kind Providence has bestowed upon us.

Applause.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with others who have already spoken in extending my very best wishes to the Speaker, whom I think is doing a very excellent job. As a matter of fact, I think he improves with age. Probably that trip that he had overseas this last summer helped him. Being from Essex, I have, as you know, a very real interest in you; in your present and your future; and so I hope along with the other hon. members that you have a very happy year.

Now, I want to say a word also about your family, whom I have known for a long time and have always found to be very fine people. I want to do it every year because it is true. We people from our part of the world are, as you know, very warm-hearted. It is not very often that we have any arguments, only about once every third year, sometimes every fourth year. When we do we generally have a good one.

There have been some changes made on the opposite side of the House and I suppose if I might I should run down them in a hurry. There is the odd one who is not here, of course, as usual.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Where are they all? No Cabinet there at all!

Mr. Reaume: I think, though, that for the most part, the changes which have been made have been made for the better. As a matter of fact, I think it would be an honest statement that it could not be any worse than it was.

There is no question about it that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), I think, has a very hard job. He is going to make an attempt to fill the shoes of a man who has served this province and served it well for a long time. I do not want to make his job any harder than I have to—

I beg pardon? I cannot hear the hon. Prime Minister. Would he mind speaking up? Honestly, I did not hear him.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I will write the hon. member a note.

Mr. Reaume: As a matter of fact, I was just about to wish the hon. Prime Minister luck in his new work. I think he is really going to have to have all the good wishes that he can get.

Now, one thing that puzzles me in the change-around in positions of the Cabinet—in the shuffle, I do not know what happened to the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), whether he got what they call an Irish promotion or just got kicked upstairs. He wound up, as I understand it, as the official water boy for the party.

Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday in this House the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) made what I thought—and I am certain that hon. members will all agree—was one of the finest speeches that has been made in this House for a long time. All of us who are acquainted with him know him as a friendly man, as a man who does not go out of his way for the purpose of trying in any way to injure anybody. Certainly he is the type of a man who is first of all an honest man.

I noticed that throughout the long time of his speech, two hours and a half, that the hon. members of the House—on both sides of the House—gave him a good hearing. I want to thank the Speaker too for having allowed him to go on with his important work.

His speech, I would say, was important because it was evident that he had spent a long time on it. His speech was important because it brought to the attention of the people of this province a very important matter. I think it laid on the doorstep of those in power a problem that they themselves and nobody else can now properly deal with.

There is not any sense in we over here making any more attacks on the chief law enforcement officer of this province. He now, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, is no longer a man of any importance. He might just as well occupy a position in the back row. He has lost his effectiveness. The matter we must now lay in the lap of the hon. Prime Minister of this province.

The hon. Prime Minister of this province is a comparatively young man and; I think, an able man and a man who wants to do a good job. I say to him that if he wants to do a good job the first thing he should do right now is to institute a Royal probe on the matter of crime in the province.

Years pass by and they go by quickly. This very same party in power now has been in power for some 18 years and I can remember quite well during the term that I was mayor of the city of Windsor it did not take much prompting on anybody's part for the people on the opposite side of the House at that time to institute a probe.

I want to say that I am not sorry, that I think in very many of these cases a probe serves a very good purpose. But I am certain of one thing, that if a probe served a purpose in the instance of a community of which I was at that time the head, then there are a thousand times more reason why there ought to be a probe now.

Hon. members may feel sure that the people of this province are not going to sit still. There is an obligation, and a real one, on the part of the hon. Prime Minister and those who follow him to get up in this House and in a loud voice let themselves be heard.

The hon. leader of the Opposition, I want to say again, had no intention at all of injuring or harming any innocent people. The difference between the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is as different as night and day. In one case, the speech coming from the man who heads our party was a speech based on facts. He would not have made that speech only that he felt it was a duty on his own part. We have sat in this House for years and have heard time after time the hon. member for York South tear the characters of people apart, not caring who they were, giving no thought at all to the person involved or their family.

But this is a different sort of a man who made this speech last Wednesday. There can be no line of comparison as between the hon. member for York South and the man who leads our party. I want to put that on the record.

As proof of that fact, with all the hollering and all the character assassination in which this man indulged, in the month of June, 1959, he came back with these great, big, five men who sit over here. That goes to show what the people of the province think about them. The N.D.P.—the “no down payment” party!

I want to urge again the importance of instituting a Royal probe and letting the chips fall where they may.

Last summer a group of pink-eyed socialists had what they called a convention in Ottawa, and I happened to be in Ottawa that week—not at the convention. I had no problem getting a hotel room at all, there was plenty of space; and I heard the hon. member for York South the other day expounding in this House the brand new theories of a new party, the democracy and what it stood for and all the fine people that were there. Some of us have been in this business for a long time and we go back a ways.

It was some 35 years ago that a different group, and yet maybe part of the same group of pink-eyed socialists, at a meeting in the west were going to change the whole country around. I again remember the words of Woodsworth then. We hear them now from the little man from the west with the sports pants, echoing those words again: “I believe in the two party system but one of the old parties must die.”

That was 35 years ago, and as we thumb over the pages now as history goes by year by year, we find that the party that died by their own hands—by their own hands—was the party that was going to make certain that somebody else died.

So this year, assembled in the city of Ottawa, a few of those pink-eyed people from the west who had been kicked out of public office in the west—not by agriculture, not by the farmer, but by the unionist himself in industrial ridings of the west, unemployed as they were—they took it upon themselves to form a New Democratic Party. Well, I just want to explain to hon. members how new it is and how democratic it is. It is a shame that they even call it a party.

It is so new that the principles of it are the same principles of the old C.C.F., and it smells just as bad. They have not changed a thing.

Democratic? Let us get down to that party, the democratic party.

I always thought that Canada—the country where I was born and to which hundreds of thousands of other people have come from other parts of the world—I have always thought and I am certain that they think it is a democratic country. I do not think they are looking to these people to change it very much in the way that they would want it changed.

Let us point out one thing, however. They claim that they have the backing of the trade unions in the country. First of all I want to say, and I will use myself as an example, that I come from a highly organized and industrialized part of the province, from the very same part of the province as two other Liberal members in this House. In the automotive part the Liberal candidate in each case ran first and the N.D.P. or the C.C.F., or whatever you want to call it, in each case ran third.

I heard the hon. member explain how they extract dues from the union men. There are a few things he did not explain, and I want to explain to the House, Mr. Speaker, that a long time before our hon. friend from York South even knew that there was such a thing as a union in Canada, I was fighting for them and still am. Before I explain this, I want to say also that I am not opposed, Mr. Speaker, to a union affiliating itself with any party, nor will I vote for the enactment of any law that will stop the union from giving its dues to any party. That is its own affair and I shall always fight for the right of union members to do that sort of thing if they wish. But let us analyze for a moment how it is being done.

First of all our friends of the N.D.P. say that they trust the unions, that they are friends of the unions and the unions are friends of theirs. Well, they do not trust them enough to put the contributions on a voluntary basis; that is for sure. The unions—the union men who walk up and down our street and I am sure other streets in the province—do not like the N.D.P. or anybody else sticking their hands in their pockets, and that is exactly what the N.D.P. are doing. They are sticking their hands in other people's pockets, Mr. Speaker, without getting permission of those people.

Take for instance a local of 4,500 people; a quorum in that local is 100. The N.D.P. knows that. It is not very hard to pack a meeting of 100, and so they do it. They pack the meeting, the affiliation is made and they get their hands in the working man's pockets. But now they say: well, if the working man does not want his money to find its way into our pockets, and that is where it is going, then all he has to do is to sign a chit or write us a letter and we will stop that. We will stop putting our hands in his pockets.

The working man does not want to write a letter nor does he want to sign that chit because if he does, everybody in that plant knows that he has signed it. This man is not going to fight with a bunch of big-mouthed people just over a dime or 15 cents; but if these fellows are so democratic—and everybody now is so anxious to use that word, Hitler used it, Mussolini used it—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): You are using it.

Mr. Reaume: Cuba now has a democratic government; but if they are so democratic then I have a suggestion that I will make: why do you not—you five hon. members with the big mouths—why do you not allow each and every trade union across Canada to hold a secret vote, first of all whether or not they should affiliate with your party, and second whether or not they want to give their money to you? You will not agree, you will not agree.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, when a union takes a strike vote they take it by secret ballot. Now, in the affiliation of a union with a political party all I am asking is that the union man of this province be given the right to cast his ballot secretly. There has been no secret ballot among the rank and file members of unions and hon. members know it. I am asking them to agree that each and every local union across the province be given the right to vote secretly as to whether or not they want to affiliate with their party and whether or not union men want the N.D.P.'s hands in their pockets. That is all I am asking; you do not agree to that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask that the speaker be given every attention and we will proceed very well. It does not appear to me that the speaker needs any help with his speech.

Mr. Reaume: I think we can trust the union men and women across the province.

Mr. Bryden: That is why we are not worried about it.

Mr. Reaume: That is what you have said in years past but you get beaten all the time.

Mr. Bryden: We are still not worried. We are quite happy to let the unions themselves determine the way they want to make their decisions.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, you know when our hon. leader was making his speech in the House on crime the other day I looked over at the expression on the face of the hon. member for Woodbine, and he looked like one who had just been weaned on a very sour pickle.

Mr. Bryden: That was your eyesight.

Mr. Reaume: For a man who thinks so much of the auto workers that he has a car made in a foreign land, I think he should quieten down for a little while.

I want to say that insofar as I personally am concerned, and I think I can speak for my party, my party has no thought, nor have we ever had any thought, of extracting funds forcibly from anybody and that goes for criminals as well. I have never read a headline in a paper so bad, and I did not think there was an hon. member in this House who would be so dishonourable as to intimate that anybody in this House, regardless of what party, would take campaign funds from a criminal, or from any source of crime.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. member ought to read the records on organized crime.

Mr. Reaume: Has the hon. member read them?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

Mr. Reaume: He is right in there then!

Mr. Speaker, I think we need not worry about this type of thing; we need not worry about the policies and principles that they follow. They have taken ethics and put them in the ash can and before we are finished with them they will be right in on top of their own ethics.

We realize, and I want this to be put down clearly in the records, we realize we follow the philosophy that was established some 30-odd years ago in the west. We know that this New Democratic Party whose members do not know what the word "democratic" means, we know how badly they hate us in our party. I want to inform the government of the province that we know the hatred that they have for us is far greater than the hatred they have for the government.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Reaume: Because they know that they must first hurdle us before they can get over there. I want to tell hon. members who is in bed with whom—

Mr. MacDonald: The Tories are in bed with the Liberals.

Mr. Reaume: There are hon. members in this House who have told me to my face, privately and personally, that the hon. leader—if you can call him that, I will call him the hon. member from York South—that in the election of June 1959, this man who calls himself a leader of a party, approached certain members of the government or the Tory party and put the proposition to them in cold turkey, and here is what it was!

Would the hon. member like me to put a C.C.F. candidate in his riding, in order that we can split the vote and help him? If he wants me to do it, I will do it!

An hon. member: He had no choice.

Mr. Reaume: But to the credit of the Tory members of Parliament of whom I speak, they said they wanted no part of the hon. member's filthy deal.

Mr. Bryden: Where was this supposed to have happened?

Mr. MacDonald: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the hon. member rises on a point of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this statement is a complete fabrication for which the hon. member has given no evidence and he can give no evidence.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, I have made the statement and I stand back of it. At the appropriate and proper time I will produce the evidence; there is no question about it.

Mr. Bryden: And when will that be?

Mr. Reaume: It is none of the hon. member's business. I will produce it when I want to. I make the decisions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: It just goes to show how much ethics and how much principle these birds have!

Mr. Reaume: That statement stands; it all goes to show the type of tactics that they employ.

Mr. Bryden: That the hon. member uses!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member ought to know, he uses them!

Mr. Reaume: Make no mistake about it, the only way to handle them is the very same way that I intend handling them, and as I have always handled them in my own riding.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. member not fight the Tories?

Mr. Reaume: Because the only language that they know is to fight fire with fire. Now we do not have to stoop, we do not have to stoop, of course—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is down there now, of course, he does not have to stoop.

Mr. Reaume: —to the ethics and tactics that they employ. They are so hungry for public power that they will do anything and I just want to say—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is too low down.

Mr. Reaume: If the hon. member was any lower his head would be dragging on the street. I was going to say something else, Mr. Speaker, but in any event—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it is obvious who the hon. member is worried about anyway. We do not hate the hon. member, we just—

Mr. Reaume: Why should we worry about the hon. member? He always runs third.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member has looked pretty worried for the last while.

Mr. Reaume: We have won every time, have we not?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Look at Peterborough!

Mr. Reaume: Look at the books!

Mr. Speaker, on the business of contributions to parties, it is a well-known fact that the government in the province of Saskatchewan for a long time past has been taking contributions from oil companies, breweries, mining companies. If that is not so, let Mr. Douglas—and not the office boy—let Mr. Douglas stand up, wherever he wishes and make a statement that what I have said is wrong—

Mr. Bryden: Well, it certainly is wrong. Not one word of truth in it.

Mr. Reaume: It is public knowledge that it is true.

Mr. Bryden: There is not a shred of evidence. It is completely false.

Mr. Reaume: There is nothing lower than a hypocrite.

Mr. Bryden: Another unsupported statement!

Mr. Reaume: I do not want to hear from an office boy and I have mentioned a name in the House.

Mr. Bryden: It is completely false.

Mr. Reaume: It is public knowledge. Oh, Mr. Speaker, my little friends over here—

Mr. Bryden: Why does the hon. member not prove that it is true?

Mr. Reaume: I am just mentioning that fact because it is true. The hon. member knows it is true.

Mr. Bryden: Why does the hon. member not prove it, if it is true?

Mr. Reaume: I just said, if it is not true have him deny it.

Mr. Bryden: Why does the hon. member not challenge someone who is here?

Mr. Reaume: I do not want to hear from the hon. member; I do not want to hear from him, who does? The hon. member does not even know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Reaume: I have done that, he can answer for himself.

Mr. Speaker, in ending I want to say this, that I have a tremendous amount of faith and confidence in the unions of the province. Although these fellows may be allowed to get away with the business of putting their hands in other people's pockets, there is no question about it that the average rank and file unionist in this province, when he gets behind the curtain, he like many, many hundreds of thousands of other good people will vote as he wishes—

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reaume: He does not want to be told and he will not be told. In my own area the president—and this is by way of informing the hon. member—the president of the North Essex Liberals is vice-president of the Ford local, which is a pretty good union—

Mr. MacDonald: Which by vote has endorsed the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Reaume: Because the hon. member's group packed the hall!

He is not one of them. We will take our chances when the time comes. I am just asking that when the hon. member introduces this bill that has to do with contributions to political parties, I would ask if he would amend it and legislate that the trade unions of the province be allowed to hold a secret ballot on whether or not they affiliate with the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: They are allowed, we know that right now. The hon. member does not know the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Cowling moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

House in committee of the whole; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the east gallery and in the west gallery, students from Flos Township School Area No. 1, Elmvale.

We also welcome today on the floor of the House to the Speaker's right, Mr. Joseph A. Gillis, a member of the Michigan State Legislature.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of the united counties of Medora and Wood praying that an Act may pass authorizing the division of the township into three wards and the election of the council by wards.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass relating to assessment of cost of private drain connections and to permit licensing and regulation of use of untravelled portions of the highways.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, that it do stand adjourned until 3:00 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the time for depositing private bills with the Clerk free of penalty be extended to Tuesday, January 16, 1962; and that the time for presenting petitions to the House be extended to the end of the first week after the resumption of the present session in 1962; and the time for introducing private bills be extended to the end of the second week after such resumption.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS ACT

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Bills.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present a report made to me as Attorney-General by Eric Hamilton Silk, Assistant Deputy Attorney-General, of certain studies of the jurisdiction of county and district courts and related matters.

I would say in tabling this it is a report of a study of the jurisdiction of the county and district court which he commenced early this year. While the report is based principally on the results of more than 50 meetings held throughout Ontario with lawyers, judges and court officials, as well as members of Parliament, the Senate and the Legislature and representatives of labour and of trade and industry; the recommendations made are fortified by studies made of court conditions elsewhere in Canada, as well as in England and several states of the union, and by Mr. Silk's long experience with our courts both as counsel appearing in them and in his administrative roles.

The report, comprising some 144 pages, contains recommendations calculated to reduce legal costs and render the civil courts more accessible to those having occasion to use them.

While the primary recommendations urge (1) an increase in monetary jurisdiction of the county and district courts; (2) greater powers in the county judges in their capacity of local judges of the Supreme Court; and (3) a vesting in them—that is, county and district judges—of divorce authority, which latter of course can only be affected by Dominion legislation, certain of the other proposals are regarded as more basic.

Mr. Silk recommends the establishment of the office of chief judge of the county and district court. This he considers as essential to the successful vesting in our secondary courts of the proposed increased powers. The principal purpose of the proposal is to ensure a movement of the judges among the counties as circumstances may require and would result in a more efficient use of available judicial services.

Recognition of the present status of our juvenile and family courts by instituting a plan of providing them with their own bench comprising legally trained, provincially appointed judges is also recommended. Presently these courts are presided over principally by judges and magistrates whose main responsibilities are in other courts.

In somewhat the same connection, relief of the county judges, particularly in the larger centres, of their division court responsibilities is also recommended.

The plan would develop a system of provincially appointed division court judges. It is not unlikely that should the plan be adopted, the division court and juvenile and family court responsibilities would be combined in a single appointee in some areas.

The report urges that members of the county court bench be relieved of administrative and other responsibilities which tend to challenge the time available for the judicial functions. Establishment of a panel of impartial arbitrators with legislative recognition in order to ensure high calibre personnel is regarded as being indicated by existing arbitration practices which demand a substantial amount of the time of some of our judges.

The report proposes schools for court officials at various levels in line with the system presently being instituted following the report of a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Silk that completed a study of the Ontario coroners' system a year ago.

A streamlining of the appeal process in the magistrates' courts; provision in the mechanics' lien proceedings for disclosure of the position of the respective parties before trial; and a review of the responsibilities of the county and district judge where he is appointed as a persona designata, are among the recommendations made.

Recommendations for a thoroughgoing review of the cost structure in all the courts and for the court sittings in a place other than the county town where circumstances warrant it, are features of the report that indicate the thoroughness of the study and the directness of approach of the reports.

A review of some aspects of our division courts where small claims are handled brings forth a strong recommendation for a resurvey of all post-judgment processes by a committee of experts with a view to avoiding abuses, reducing costs and rendering the collection process more efficient. Court room accommodation of many of these courts is a matter which appears to warrant attention.

Touching on certain features of the magistrates' courts, the desirability of having Crown attorneys extend their activities beyond criminal hearings is urged in a review of the present practice of having police officers act as prosecutors.

It is urged that magistrates, Crown attorneys and police alike should regard traffic offences in the light of their real importance. This is in line with the established policy of the department in its effort to reduce the accident toll on our highways.

The problem of bringing cases to trial promptly in the Toronto area in both Supreme and county courts is dealt with separately because of the heavy backlog that persistently maintains here. Special procedures are suggested, although a sparsity of court rooms and other physical facilities at the moment seem to be principal contributing factors.

In conclusion, Mr. Silk reminds of the progress that has been made in the simplification of court procedures over the years and commends continued study and constant improvement towards rendering our courts of justice ever more available to the public. The report concludes, and I quote:

When one considers that for the average layman the first fear that stands in the way of seeking justice in the courts is the cost of litigation, it is manifest that each improvement in the process of simplifying procedure renders access to our courts of justice a little less forbidding.

I am following the course of tabling the report in the Legislature in order to provide the fullest opportunity for all concerned to study the recommendations made.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to address a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts):

(1) Professor Paul Fox, appearing last night on the programme "Viewpoint", stated that the hon. Minister of Justice for Canada (Mr. Fulton) had sent to the provincial hon. Attorney-General a draft of the proposed method of amending The British North America Act by the Parliament of Canada. He said that substantial agreement had been reached with the provinces on the method of amending. Has the hon. Attorney-General received such a draft?

(2) If so, does he propose to make it public?

(3) Is it the government's intention to ask for representations from interested persons or bodies as to the method of amendment of The British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the questions, I would say that I did receive yesterday a copy of the draft bill from the hon. Mr. Fulton, a draft bill intituled An Act to Provide for the Amendment in Canada of the Constitution of Canada.

This bill purports to be drawn as a result of substantial agreement in principle by all the participating parties at the various conferences; including the last one, when this was settled in principle. When I say "settled in principle" I do not mean settled by governing bodies in principle; I mean settled by the people who were assembled there to take something to their respective governments for consideration of the governments concerned. That is the position it is in at the moment.

Copies will undoubtedly be made available; there is no reason that I can see why we should not have copies for any hon. member interested to study it in advance. In due course I would anticipate that some approach will be made through the Legislature to discuss the bill and to deal with it in whatever way the government may recommend.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question which I would like to address to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), a copy of which I have submitted to him.

A constituent of mine who operates a garage informs me that one of his mechanics, who had worked for five years under the supervision of a licensed mechanic and whom he describes as one of his most competent men, failed his examination when he sought to get his auto mechanic's papers because of difficulties with the English language. The man in question is a new Canadian of Italian background. The employer who has interceded with me on behalf of his own workman states that this mechanic had been informed that he will not be able to try the examination again for another two years.

Will the hon. Minister state whether the regulations of his department do bar a man for two years from trying again his auto mechanic's papers when language difficulties are the problem? Is a knowledge of the English language essential to this trade? Or could the examination be taken again with the help of an interpreter?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) for his question, because here is something where I think help should certainly be given.

I say in answer to the first part of his question: is there a bar? There is no bar. Actually the regulation is there to attempt to find out not whether the man can speak English but whether he has the necessary background of experience and ability and competence in order to carry on as a mechanic. So I can give the hon. member the assurance that—and he has already been kind enough to give me the name of the person in question—it will be followed up and every opportunity will be given to him immediately to try the examination again.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a very brief comment if I may, I think the hon. Minister should make certain that this kind of information is not given out by officials of the department—that a man is so barred when the regulations do not bar it.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how this happened because after receiving the question from the hon. member for York South, I discussed it with the previous hon. Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Daley). He tells me this has been his custom in the past, where there is some kind of language barrier or impediment, he did not hesitate to say we will use an interpreter, or some other means, in order to assist this gentleman—the applicant. That can be done in this case.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett), a copy of which I have already provided to you and to him, and which reads as follows:

With regard to a report appearing in the press on November 22, 1961, to the effect that the executive of the Metropolitan Toronto Council had agreed unanimously to arrange a meeting with the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions, to clarify the responsibility for setting salary scales for employees of Metropolitan Toronto or Don Jail: (1) has such a meeting been held as yet; (2) if so, when may an announcement of its results be expected; (3) if not, when will it be held?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, for the courtesy of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) in giving me notice of this question, I express my thanks.

The question has three parts: (1) Has such a meeting been held as yet; (2) if so, when can the announcement of the results be expected; (3) if not, when will the meeting be held?

Has the meeting been held as yet? The answer is "no".

Part two, if so, when can an announcement be expected? The first part of the answer is in the negative, so part two washes out.

Part three, if not, when will such a meeting be held? I would answer "as soon as possible."

Mr. Bryden: May I ask as a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, if representatives of the Metropolitan Toronto executive have been in touch with the hon. Minister about this matter? I take it from the nod of the hon. Minister that they have.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the third part was quite conclusive. I said "as soon as possible," which presupposes that an approach has been made.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question directed to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), notice of which has been given.

I have had inquiries from teachers and teacher candidates in the Windsor area as to the new Windsor Teachers College now in the construction stage. Because of delays brought about by the strike in the construction industry—and that strike, by the way has been settled—there is some apprehension that certain categories of potential teachers may be required to go outside of the Windsor area to obtain their teacher's certification. Would the hon. Prime Minister please answer the following questions:

Will grade 13 students possessing the necessary qualifications be accommodated? All of these refer to the Windsor Teachers College.

Will grade 12 students possessing the necessary qualifications be allowed to enroll in the two-year course?

Will grade 12 students who have taken two summer courses and by June, 1962, will have had two years of successful teaching experience be allowed to complete their teacher training at this college?

And the last question: is there any provision being made to accommodate the above teachers if the construction is not completed in time for September 1962?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first question is: will grade 13 students possessing the necessary qualifications be accommodated? The answer is when the Windsor Teachers College opens grade 13 students possessing the necessary qualifications will be admitted.

Question two: will grade 12 students possessing the necessary qualifications be allowed to enroll in the two-year course? When the Windsor Teachers College opens, grade 12 students possessing the necessary qualifications will be admitted to the two-year course. Should the enrolment in this course have to be limited, a selection will be made on the basis of the academic record of the applicants in grades 11 and 12.

Question three: will grade 12 students who have taken two summer courses and by June, 1962, will have two years of successful teaching experience be allowed to complete their teacher training at this college? The answer is that the students who have completed pre-teachers college summer courses first and second year, and have subsequently taught successfully for two years on temporary certificates, will be admitted to the completing year of the in-service course.

Question four: is any provision being made to accommodate the above teachers if the construction is not completed in time for September, 1962? It had been hoped that the building for the new Windsor Teachers College would be ready for occupancy on September 1, 1962. Owing to the strike, it now appears unlikely that this will be the case. Two alternatives are possible if the building is in fact not ready for use in September, 1962.

First, the London Teachers College would continue to operate on two shifts for the college year 1962-1963 and continue to accommodate the students from the Windsor area. Second, suitable accommodations for the college might be obtained in Windsor on a rental basis until the new building is ready for occupancy. Tentative inquiries have been made of the Windsor Board of Education of the possibility of temporary quarters for the college being made available.

I could add to this that we had really planned that this teachers college would be open in September and we will make any adjustments that we possibly can, but there are real difficulties in the way.

When we were building the teachers college in Port Arthur we did make arrangements with the Fort William Board of Education to rent certain space from them and in that space we were able to conduct our classes prior to the opening of the teachers college there. But it is not always possible to obtain accommodation that is suitable for classroom purposes, because it is specialized accommodation and in our school system across the province there is very little spare accommodation these days.

The other point is, of course, that the London Teachers College is horribly overcrowded and this college in Windsor was built to relieve that condition. We are anxious to get the London Teachers College back on a normal routine as quickly as possible, so I can assure the hon. member that we will do everything in our power to have some type of teachers college operating in Windsor in September of 1962.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Did I not understand the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) to say some time ago that in 1962 the two-year course would be cancelled?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, no, I did not. What I did say was that we were eliminating the pre-teachers summer course for grade 12 students. In other words we had the completing year this past summer and we did not take in any first-year people. That is what we ruled out. I did say our ultimate objective would be to end up with grade 13 entrance to teachers college, but this may be some distance in the future. I did not say that we would eliminate those courses in 1962 or 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

Vote 1101 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Vote 1401 agreed to.

On vote 1402.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, might I ask a question before you go into that vote? Was the report of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for the year 1960 circulated to the hon. members? I do not recall having received one. I did receive one for the year 1959.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot answer that question. May I take that as notice and I will find the answer.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the matter is this. I think it does have a bearing on the estimates and I would think that it might be desirable for the hon. members to have a report for the previous year before being asked to vote on the estimates of the current year. I would think it does have a bearing on these estimates. It may be that I just did not receive one. I do not recall having received a copy for the past year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am not aware of it. Perhaps the hon. member is referring to the public accounts.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: No, I am referring to this very lovely document as published by the hon. Prime Minister for the year 1959. I have a copy of it here. I would be glad to send it over to the hon. Prime Minister to acquaint him with it if he would like to see it. I have the hon. Prime Minister's report as the hon. Minister of Education; I am in error.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I can assure the hon. member that I will have that report out and available to him before the estimates of The Department of Education come into the House.

Vote 1402 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF THE PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

Vote 1501 agreed to.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, I would like to once again pay a tribute to the work of the provincial auditor. It is wonderfully satisfactory to have the confidence that we have in our provincial auditor. I know that he again has performed his duties in a satisfactory and thorough manner and it does give us confidence in the operation of government.

I may say that in day-to-day operations the provincial auditor carries on a continuous examination of all expenditures from consolidated revenue funds and in doing so countersigns all cheques and certifies there are funds available and legislative authority for each such payment. In addition, Mr. Chairman, his staff is continually making audits of revenue accounts and records of the consolidated revenue fund.

Further to his duties in connection with the audit of the government's transactions, the provincial auditor conducts audits of such boards and commissions and Crown instrumentalities as may be required by governing statutes and directives.

The estimates of the audit office have been increased by $50,000. May I say that in my opinion if the auditor needs more money to ensure that government spending is checked as efficiently and thoroughly as possible, I believe this House would wish me to assure the auditor that whatever money he needs for staff and expenses he can have. In other words, I think the House would wish me to assure the auditor that he can write his own ticket to make sure that he is able to do this immense job properly. If the $520,000 set aside in the estimates for the coming year is not enough, then I am sure we will see that more is made available.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): With the comments of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) I can agree. In particular I can agree in the observation that he made about the conscientious and able way in which the provincial auditor has exercised his responsibilities. With that we all agree, Mr. Chairman.

I would ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer whether or not in the course of the past year the provincial auditor has added to the number of boards and commissions that he audits.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I may say that he has. He now audits the books of the Niagara Parks Commission, which he had not done until this year, and the books of the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is there any expectation or intention to include Hydro in this particular audit?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I think not. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) understands that it has always been considered that Hydro would have their own auditors?

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Why is that? Why is that?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I am sure the hon. member realizes that the Hydro is a creation of the municipalities.

Mr. Reaume: I do not recognize it at all, let us not fool with it. Hydro after all is owned and operated by the province, regardless of any way the hon. Minister wants to switch it. I am just wondering why not, why is it not good practice? If the province is going to guarantee all the bonds of Hydro, and apparently is the foster father of Hydro, why then would it not be good sense if we had one auditor who audited the books of the government, every branch of the government, and also Hydro? Why are they split up?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I would say to the hon. member that we have covered this point in the House and in the energy committee on several occasions and to repeat the answers that have been given before, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission is a municipal co-operative system owned by the municipalities. The Power Commission Act provides that the officers shall be appointed by order-in-council and the auditors are the Clarkson company.

It is a very special kind of audit, almost as large as the audit carried out by the auditor himself of the province. The increased cost of this, quite apart from the need for it, would be immense. There are something like 25 full-time auditors on the staff of the Hydro at the moment doing this audit.

This is an audit which, if the audit were to be carried out by the auditor of the province of Ontario, would require an entirely basic change, or an entirely different change, in the concept of the ownership of Ontario Hydro. Until that is an acceptable proposition throughout the province and to this Legislature, it is not possible to have the Ontario provincial auditor do the audit.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Chairman, I understand that in other parts of the province, or rather in other provinces, that other governments have one auditor who audits all the books of all the boards and the commissions in the province. Now, why is it that they do it that way in other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I ask the hon. member if he would name the commission and the province?

Mr. Reaume: I am asking the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member has made a statement which is not accurate. Where there are other provinces that have boards that are true boards of the Legislature which has established them, then the provincial auditor is the auditor that does the accounts. Where the board, however, or commission, is one which has been established by the municipality there is no such analogy as that the hon. member has drawn, that I know of. But if the hon. member would like to point out to me the specific commission which stands in the same relationship to the Legislature that Hydro stands to this Legislature, I would be very interested in looking at it.

Mr. Reaume: I could name them for the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, let him name them right now.

Mr. Reaume: I will give them all to the hon. Minister, there are all kinds of them.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is not one.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if there are so many let us hear one right now.

Mr. Reaume: I will give them to the hon. Minister, I will give them all to him.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: All right!

Mr. Reaume: As a matter of fact, there has been for some reason here in the House, an effort on the part of the people in power to keep the Hydro hidden away in a little corner all by itself. I think it is time we brought Hydro right out in the open. There can be no reason in the world why we could not appoint one auditor who could be the overseer or the auditor for all the boards and commissions of the province. There can be no reason for it at all.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, the insinuation that the hon. member has made in relation to Ontario Hydro and the commissions connected with it, is not, I think, of the very highest order. But more than that, perhaps the time to deal with the question of who does the audit of the Ontario Hydro will be when I present the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, and Hydro is officially—

Mr. Reaume: I am making the observation now and I think I am quite in order. All I ask is that there ought to be one auditor for all the boards and the commissions of the province.

An hon. member: It will take more than one to handle all that debt.

An hon. member: I should say so.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): I wanted to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), he has intimated to the House that the auditor now does the books of the Niagara Parks Commission and the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I wanted to ask him in how many instances in the financial affairs of these boards and commissions does the auditor not yet do an audit? I mean, how many boards and commissions are not yet audited by the auditor of public accounts?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The Teachers' Superannuation Commission is not audited by the auditor of the province, nor is the Soldiers' Aid Commission, the workmen's compensation board or the Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What about the hospital commission?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hospital commission is audited by the provincial auditor.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Provincial funds do go into the research foundation, do they not?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then what assurance does the Legislature have that these moneys are being expended properly?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is a matter which I would say to the hon. member is also under the estimates of The Department of Commerce and Development. He will see the items there and I will show him how it is accounted for and how the money is paid in, and so forth.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then will we have the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, under these estimates, to suggest that this matter be placed under the provincial auditor? Is then the time to make that suggestion?

It would seem to me that now is when we should go into this matter. All that I have asked the hon. Minister is, what assurances do we have that this money is being accounted for properly? Now, assuming that we wish to bring this up again, will it be in order?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, that will be in order. As a matter of fact, from my point of view when we are reorganizing this department, as well as the Ontario Research Foundation, it may very well be that the recommendation that the hon. member has made is worth while. I would certainly like to look into it.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask this. Does the auditor audit every board and commission other than Hydro? We seem to have a hard time getting this out of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I have just given a list of those boards and commissions that are not audited by the provincial auditor.

Mr. Reaume: And all the others are?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Mr. Reaume: Including the liquor board? All that is audited?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Mr. Reaume: By our auditors?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I just say to the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) who asked about the Ontario Research Foundation, the budget of the Ontario Research Foundation is several millions of dollars of which there is a contribution by the provincial government, but the budget is basically contributed by private industry, so this is something that obviously has to be worked out.

The Ontario Research Foundation reports to this Legislature to the extent that moneys are given to it for certain types of research and it acts in place of the council which was washed out two, three or four years ago. Therefore, it now distributes as an agent for the government certain scholarship funds. But this is only, I would think, about 25 per cent of the money which is handled by the research foundation, which is really a being of private industry itself. So whether we are in a position to audit the books or whether the audit should be carried out initially by the research foundation and then checked by our auditor, this might be another ramification of it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, are those fees, in that they pay services rendered, rather than a donation?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is correct. The fees are calculated in such a way as to recover from industry about 75 or 70 per cent of the total costs of the foundation. So the hon. member can say they are recovered for services rendered, or any way he wants, it is industry which puts up 75 per cent of the amount to run the foundation.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRAVEL AND PUBLICITY

On vote 2101.

Mr. Reaume: I thought we were only going to deal with the unimportant departments and here we have the big departments coming on, the heavy guns.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): In the first place, may I take a moment to express my appreciation to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for making it possible for me to present the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity at this time.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister is lucky.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: There are a number of reasons for this, but in particular I think there are two that I would like to mention.

First, by giving early consideration this government is recognizing the tremendous importance of the travel industry to the welfare of all of our people and certainly to the total economy of the communities and the province of Ontario.

Second, the approval of these estimates will be a firm assurance to those fine people, and the many associations who support and contribute so much to the travel industry as a whole, of the continuance of the facilities of this department to an ever greater extent than in the past.

Therefore, you will understand, Mr. Chairman, why it is a very real pleasure, as the Minister responsible, to place before this House for consideration the estimates for The Department of Travel and Publicity. However before doing this, I would like to follow the usual custom of giving an outline once again of our responsibilities and objectives and some idea of how we fulfilled those obligations during 1961 as well as some of our plans for the coming fiscal year.

Briefly stated it is the responsibility of our department to publicize, abroad and at home, the tourist industry and the resources, attractions and advantages of Ontario; to provide information to our visitors; to ensure that a good standard of accommodation is maintained and to encourage the development of attractions that will enhance our reputation as the top vacation province in Canada; to commemorate persons, places, events, and structures of historical significance while encouraging municipalities and organizations to preserve those artifacts related to our early history: to collect and preserve government records and other documents of historical significance; and to censor films shown in public theatres and to license such theatres in the interest of public safety.

These responsibilities are interesting and challenging but I can safely say that we, and all those organizations and individuals associated with us in the tourist industry, can take satisfaction in knowing that our efforts together have been largely successful. To illustrate what I mean I would mention that in the past we have enjoyed in this province, and we have bragged about it, about 60 per cent of the total volume of foreign vacationists coming into Canada. This year, up to the end of September, that is for the first nine months, we have received 75.15 per cent of all tourists, regardless of their length of stay, and 70.5 per cent of those remaining over 24 hours. This, of course, refers to the total influx of people into Canada. Ontario enjoyed percentages to that extent this year. This is a significant increase and is a strong indication that we are moving in the right direction and are enhancing Ontario's reputation as a mecca for tourists.

Mr. Chairman, I have referred to those who are associated with us. I did so advisedly for we realize that the success of our efforts depends to a large extent upon the co-operation which we have always received, from our hon. Prime Minister, the hon. Ministers of other departments and their dedicated staffs and every member of this House as well as from the press, radio and TV and those tourist associations, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, other associations and individuals which by their dedicated efforts have helped to make the travel business the success it is today.

The travel industry is more competitive today than ever before in history. It is now the largest single earner of foreign currency for the United Kingdom and many of the European countries and they are expending ever greater amounts of money and effort to increase this market. The United States of America has become sufficiently concerned at the imbalance of the travel dollar that this year they established a U.S. Travel Service operating out of Washington with an initial budget of $2.5 million and for 1962 a budget of $4.7 million. Mexico and the countries of South America are enlarging their programmes and actively seeking tourists in the same market upon which we depend.

In order to retain our favourable position we must remain alert to changing conditions in travel patterns; to what our competition is doing and be constantly progressive in our own operations.

During 1961 we revised and revitalized many of our publications related to the travel industry and the economy generally and produced in excess of some five million pieces of material in both colour and black and white.

Our advertising campaign which is carried out in the United States and Canada uses paid space in magazines, newspapers and radio. This campaign commences in February and in various forms covers most of the months of the year.

Everything indicates that this programme has been meeting with success. Our mail inquiries up until the end of November were 261,558 as compared to 249,217 for the same period in 1960; in other words an increase of some 12,000.

In addition to buying advertising space and producing attractive publications we use every means to have responsible publications do feature articles on Ontario by bringing writers into the province and providing both writers and editors with pictures and material.

We also take part in sportsman and travel shows in the United States and also in our own province of Ontario. Where we do not exhibit ourselves, we sometimes provide staff for others so that the story of Ontario can still be presented to the public. In other words where private exhibits are on display, or at least association exhibits over in the U.S., we have often supplied extra personnel from our department to assist them. In 1961 we took part in shows in Chicago, Kansas City, New York, Cincinnati, Toronto, Port Huron, Minneapolis, North Bay, Fort William and New Jersey and provided staff at the Halle Brothers Travel Show in Cleveland and the sportsman show at Milwaukee. In 1962 we will be continuing our show programme in those centres from which we draw our greatest number of tourists.

During the summer months we provide personnel at the New York and Chicago offices of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau to give out specific information on the attractions of this province.

I mentioned to the House during the presentation of these estimates last year that 1961 would see the opening of a new reception centre to be known as the Lakeland Tourist Reception Centre and that this would bring our total number to 16. The Lakeland centre was opened as promised and proved its value during this past summer when almost 32,000 registrations were reported.

During the last session I forecast that the opening of the last section of the Trans-Canada Highway along the north shore of Lake Superior, and of Upper Canada Village near Morrisburg, would result in an increased number of tourists in these sections and this has certainly been the case.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics has provided us with figures for the 12-month period from October, 1960, to September, 1961, as compared with the same period from October, 1959, to September, 1960. These show that entries of U.S. cars at Pigeon River advanced nearly 20,000, or about 40 per cent, and entries at Sault Ste. Marie at the other end of the north shore Lake Superior route advanced more than 26,000, or approximately 21 per cent.

Just as significant are the figures showing what happened to Canadian cars which, prior to the opening of this highway, travelled the south shore of Lake Superior and re-entered Ontario either at Sault Ste. Marie or Pigeon River. Re-entries of Canadian cars at Pigeon River declined over 5,000, or 11 per cent, for this period, while re-entries at Sault Ste. Marie declined about 10,000 or 8 per cent. It is obvious that Canadians are making extensive use of this highway and our internal economy benefits to that extent.

The new international bridges at Prescott and Rainy River, both of which replaced ferries, have also had an effect on the number of cars entering from the United States. The entries at Prescott, based on the same 12-month period of October to September as used previously, have shown an increase of 21,000 or nearly 70 per cent. Also, during the 12-month period following the opening of the bridge at Rainy River the number of entries increased by over 6,000 or 81 per cent.

Hon. members may wonder when I mention the north shore Lake Superior route, Upper Canada Village and the international bridges, what we have done or will be doing in respect to these. During the establishment of the pioneer village we provided the services of our museums' advisor to the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission and worked closely with that body in the preparation of publicity concerning its opening. In addition, our publications carried reference to Upper Canada Village and the north shore Lake Superior route. Also, with respect to the latter, we prepared a special booklet as a guide to visitors travelling it for the first time.

This summer we produced two 16mm. colour films with sound, one of which was on the northwestern section of Ontario covering a region from Dryden to the Manitoba border and south to the international border, and the other one covering the Lakehead and Lake Superior area. These films will be available for distribution early in 1962 and copies will be placed with the National Film Board for distribution throughout the United States. In 1962 we plan to produce two films on eastern Ontario, one of which will cover the St. Lawrence valley and, the other, the Ottawa valley.

I might just mention that last Sunday some of our people, Mr. Chairman, might have seen "Waterway Holiday," which is a production of ours through the Fletcher Film people. It is on the Trent-Severn and was shown over CFTO-TV last Sunday between 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock. That was one of our films.

During this past year, we worked closely with 20th Century Fox for the production of a 35mm. film in technicolor and cinemascope on fishing in Ontario which will be shown in theatres throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, I have given you some idea of what we do to promote Ontario and to provide information and services to our visitors. We have an equal responsibility to ensure that the accommodation provided to our guests is of a high standard and to encourage the development of attractions which will serve as a magnet to lure and hold tourists for even longer periods.

The department is responsible for the inspection and licensing of all tourist accommodation within the province, with the exception of those hotels which are under the authority of the liquor licence board. This involves in excess of 7,000 tourist establishments providing approximately 75,000 rooms or rental units and is combined with the extremely valuable service provided by our trained inspectors who act in an advisory capacity to tourist operators on all phases of construction and operation.

That this is far from being a static industry is indicated by the fact that up to November 15 this year 217 new tourist establishments providing 1,890 units of accommodation were constructed and additions were made to 323 existing establishments which added 1,101 new units.

Renovation to existing accommodation is always going on and each year more operators are upgrading their establishments by providing better facilities than were previously available to their guests.

Another very important function of this part of our operation is the conducting of community surveys to determine the value of the industry to any particular municipality and also the needs and requirements of the tourists. This year, five such surveys were conducted in Fort Frances, Geraldton, Blind River, Parry Sound and Westport. While the results of these are not as yet available I have no doubt that the figures will be as impressive as those which I gave in my last estimate speech and which concerned the town of Kenora.

It is planned to continue this programme in 1962 and to make these surveys available to those communities which request them and are prepared to actively co-operate in ensuring maximum value and accuracy in the statistics gathered. I am happy to say that the fullest co-operation has been forthcoming whenever we have carried out one of those surveys.

We have continued our programme of commemorating sites, structures, events, and individuals of historical significance by means of official plaques. Some 100 different subjects were investigated in detail through extensive research in libraries, archives, registry offices, and private collections, as well as through interviews with local historians. Final inscriptions for about half of these were approved by the Archaeological and Historic Sites Board of Ontario. Forty plaques were officially unveiled during the summer and fall months making a total today of 268 erected throughout Ontario since the inauguration of the programme.

I have said before, and wish to repeat again, how much we are indebted to the members of the Archaeological and Historic Sites Board and its fine chairman, Mr. William Cranston, for their untiring efforts and great assistance in making this programme such an outstanding success.

The erection of plaques and the investigation of sites of archaeological and historical significance has resulted in a greatly increased interest among local residents in their own district's historical attractions. For example, we gave assistance to Dr. Wilfrid Jury in his investigation of the Willow Fort site in Vespra township. As a result of his findings there, the Barrie Chamber of Commerce purchased the property and is drawing up plans for reconstruction of this former military depot. Situated near the western terminus of Nine Mile Portage, it protected, back in those days, the vital supplies being forwarded to British military posts on the upper Great Lakes during and immediately after the War of 1812.

Support was also given to Dr. Jury in his project of locating and outlining the ruined structures which formed part of the former naval headquarters at Penetanguishene, and in his investigations of certain Huron village sites in Tiny township in an effort to locate definitely some of those visited by Champlain and the early missionaries in the early 17th century.

We also employed an expedition, headed by Mr. Walter Kenyon of the Royal Ontario Museum, to continue investigation of the ruins of a fortified structure near the mouth of the Albany River. While no final conclusions have, as yet, been reached it appears to have been erected with considerable skill along military lines, and it is believed to have been the second or third post of the Hudson's Bay Company on the Albany. It was probably built during the 1680's and abandoned in 1713 and was obviously involved in the military conflict between the French and English in that era.

This site is of particular interest since it has not been built on, or disturbed, since the early 18th century and has thus provided invaluable information on the construction methods, living conditions, weapons, trade goods and utensils of that period. An extensive collection of artifacts was recovered from the site and these will provide important information to historians and museum authorities. It is also felt that the knowledge gained from excavation of this post will prove useful to any organization contemplating the reconstruction of other early trading posts as historical attractions.

The programme of assistance to the province's public museums is being continued and by the end of this fiscal year it is estimated that some 40 museums owned by municipalities or regional conservation authorities will have received financial assistance through this department. Grants, intended to assist in maintenance and curators' salaries, are made on a matching basis and are contingent upon expenditures made by the municipality concerned.

Technical assistance is also available to all public museums, and during this year some 80 museums took advantage of this service which covers such aspects as administration, organization, display, cataloguing, preservation of material, and publicity.

The Department of Public Records and Archives has continued its important role of collecting and preserving government records and other documents, and I am happy to say that students and researchers are making use of the material in ever increasing numbers.

Also, the archives are particularly concerned with the preservation and the availability of essential records during an emergency, and have produced a programme for this purpose for the Emergency Measures Organization which, I understand, is being studied by other provinces with a view to adopting the same methods.

Mr. Chairman, in giving this report on the activities of the department during 1961, and some indication of our plans for 1962, I have left to the end, as I did in the last session, the programme of matching grants to recognized regional tourist organizations which was commenced, as you will recall, at the beginning of this present fiscal year.

The last time I addressed the House I expressed the hope that this plan would bring about the formation of tourist organizations which would fill the gap between the efforts of this government and those of communities and individuals.

While we were optimistic about the outcome of this project, we anticipated that in the first year no more than eight to 12 regions would become organized and qualify for the grant. I am especially pleased to say that the reaction throughout the various areas of the province has been excellent and up to the present 15 organizations have qualified for grants, and it is anticipated from the information that we now have before us, that no less than 22 regional associations throughout Ontario will qualify by the end of this fiscal year. This is very encouraging and is very indicative that, with a little support and encouragement, the people in all types of business are prepared to work with us in helping to make our province more attractive to our visitors and to our own people.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to sum up by saying that every indication points to 1961 as being one of our top tourist years. This is supported by the forecast of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on which we have to rely for our figures and which, on the basis of material before it now, expects Canada as a whole to receive in excess of $400 million in tourist revenue from the United States alone, and to have in excess of 30 million people cross our Canadian borders.

This will mean that Ontario will receive in excess of $300 million in United States dollars alone and that would not include travellers from other foreign countries or the expenditures of our own Canadian people, which certainly amounts to a very high figure.

Our K.O.B. advertising programme and the assistance received from throughout the province certainly has encouraged our own people to travel about our province and we feel the industry has profited very much from it.

I am sure we can look forward to 1962, and on into the future, with optimism, for greater things, for an increasing volume of vacationers from other lands, for increasing numbers of our own people and from our sister provinces, and for better facilities for this great industry that means so much directly and indirectly to the benefit of all the people of this province of Ontario. Tourism is a big and profitable business, and once again I do ask for the support of this House and in fact the support of all our people in Ontario to help us not only retain the enviable position that we hold today, but to make greater progress. Thank you.

Mr. Reaume: In the early part of the discussion the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) mentioned the fact that we were going to deal with a very few unimportant matters, rather than estimates of the departments. Now, I agree that this is probably one of the unimportant ones, but after hearing that speech I was just wondering who are we to actually say that by the efforts the hon. Minister has made, or the department, that he has really attracted any people here; he may have frightened some of them away.

I do not really think that he should brag so much about these advertisements he has put in the papers, the movies that he once in a while shows. After all, the tourist business, as he has outlined, is a big business, a profitable one and I am just wondering what the province is doing about it. It must be about five years ago that a large group of people who were in the industry appeared before our group here, the committee, in the presence of the hon. Minister, the present one, and they had a very well worded brief asking the government of the province to help them by making loans.

These people, I think, are men and women engaged in the business of trying to attract people here from other parts of the world and one of the complaints that we get from tourists, who come here, is that in various parts of the province we have not got proper places for them. Accommodations are not as good as they could be if the province would make available to these people funds in order that they might build proper types of places or fix up the places that they have.

I remember at that time the hon. Minister, after hearing the brief, and I think this is about five years ago, got up and made one of these speeches, and at that time he said: "I will take this matter up with the hon. Prime Minister of the province and you can feel sure that we will give you all the help that you want."

There has not been any help forthcoming; these people in the industry are still asking for help. I was just wondering when the government is going to take this job, this business of attracting tourists to our province, as being a big job and an important job? The head of the department says it is important, and yet the government of the province treats it as though it is not important. As a matter of fact, the hon. Prime Minister himself—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: As a matter of personal privilege—

Mr. Reaume: —as a matter of fact, the hon. Prime Minister himself, in the early part of these sessions, said that we will only deal with unimportant and—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. Reaume: All right!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member says that I said that this was an unimportant department.

Mr. Reaume: No, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member just said that.

Mr. Reaume: I said that the hon. Prime Minister said, we are only going to deal with some estimates—or rather some unimportant departments, or something to that effect. Well, all right, go right ahead and read it. The hon. Prime Minister has it there.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is not what I said at all, nor did I even intimate it.

Mr. Reaume: Well, what did the hon. Prime Minister say?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That I can only reiterate that the estimates being tabled here this afternoon are for departments that will not have a large effect on the over-all financial picture of the government.

Mr. Reaume: Well, is that not a fine statement?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: If that can be interpreted as referring to this as an unimportant department, the hon. member's powers of logic are beyond me.

Mr. Reaume: It has the effect of this. I want to say again, in my opinion, this one branch of government could be made very important but as hon. Prime Minister of the province he is dealing with it as one that is not important.

Now, I can agree, sir, I can agree with everything the hon. Minister said about this being a wonderful province; there is no question about that. I do not think there would be an hon. member in the House here who would dare stand up and say that it is not a wonderful province.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: For 75 per cent of the total tourists.

Mr. Reaume: There is no question about it. But here is the point: With the resources that we have here, and there can be no question about it that it is a wonderful place for people to come, we must look at the facts. There are one-tenth as many people here in our country as there are in the United States, and yet two and one half times as much money is spent by our people over there as by the people from over there who actually come here and spend their funds.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The trend has been changed!

Mr. Reaume: Tourism in our province is not going up; as a matter of fact, there are more people who are going to other parts of the world. Tourism in our province, I think, is standing about as it was. There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Increasing. Over 75 per cent of Canada's total.

Mr. Reaume: I know, but the hon. Minister uses some fancy figures. What I think he ought to do is to table those figures and explain to this House how he arrived at those figures.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister seems to be a little branch of government, over in the corner, operating all alone without any help at all. Now there are other branches of government that I think could help him, whether or not he has any influence—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I said in my speech that they are all helping me.

Mr. Reaume:—whether he has any influence on that in the Cabinet, of course, is questionable. But I suggest this one little thing that was announced only a week ago. In the building of highway 401—and the government has been years and years building 401. Part of 401 four-lanes, part of 401 two and still part of 401 nothing at all; consequently American people coming over here, trying to get from the border of the United States—Detroit, Windsor—travelling east in our province. It was like playing this game of on-again, off-again Finnigan.

You go on to No. 3 or No. 2; off of No. 3 or No. 2 onto 401; off of 401 again back on to 2 or 3, and back on 401. So you did not know half the time exactly where you were going.

It might be a good idea if the hon. Minister's department, along with other departments including, I think, The Department of Highways, and we might couple with that one too, liquor laws of the province—now there really is an important one that we pretty nearly overlooked.

An hon. member: There must be others.

Mr. Reaume: Now, if the government had a sane, sensible liquor policy in the province, under which tourists could get alcoholic beverages in proper places instead of the nonsensical, foolish laws that we have on our books now, it might attract tourist people to our province.

There was a wonderful thought advanced by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell). He was going to attract a great many tourists to Windsor, my home town. He had made a trip out west and visited a park and while he was out there he had seen a lot of prehistoric monsters and that attracted the eye of the hon. Minister. He became entranced. It became a romance with him so he took moving pictures of these prehistoric monsters and upon one of these trips to Windsor he thought so much of this film that a very few people were invited to the preview of a private showing, the mayor and a few of the higher officials of the community and he said, "Now, I think this would be a wonderful thing if we established a zoo, a prehistoric zoo, right in the uptown part of Windsor's area."

Well, now, here is a picture of some of the ideas of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Just imagine this, if The Department of Public Works in all its wisdom, had established a prehistoric zoo in the heart of downtown Windsor, right at the end of the exit of the tunnel, how would people have found any place to park? It is the most congested area in town; and if that had received the blessing of the people in power—I do not know whether the hon. Minister took it on his own or not—but if that is the kind of fuzzy thinking that his government is going to do, it is not any wonder that they are changing Ministers around every now and then, and probably should change them around more.

I am sure that all the hon. members of the House—and that includes those over there—are interested in doing what we can in order to attract more people to our province. But how are they going to attract them when they find their way into certain parts of the province and the accommodation is inadequate? If the hon. Minister had his heart and soul in this business of attracting tourists here—if there is any agency or anybody who ought to be helping these people, it is this department.

First of all, what they are doing is this: By not giving credit, by not loaning these people funds, they are forcing them to go to loan sharks who are charging them bonuses in order to obtain loans.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I was told exactly the opposite by the Northern Ontario Tourist Operators Association; that they are very happy with the latest arrangements whereby loans may now be obtained from the Industrial Development Bank of Canada.

Mr. Reaume: I have in my files names and addresses of people who have borrowed funds and have paid bonuses right here in Toronto, and the bonuses are high. All I am asking the hon. Minister, and they have asked this, is that the hon. Minister establish in the department some form of credit whereby these people can borrow funds and build proper places.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The Industrial Development Bank of Canada.

Mr. Reaume: There is not a branch here of the government, and if the hon. Minister will go back with me some four or five years, we had a meeting, I think it was in committee room No. 3—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We changed the government at Ottawa and they came through with the necessary legislation.

Mr. Reaume: Well, I think what we should do is to change it again. But at that time, in all seriousness, at that time these gentlemen had a brief, the hon. Minister took a copy of that brief, and I understood at the time that he was going to take this matter up with the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the Cabinet, or the hon. member for Victoria alone, who was the entire Cabinet, and the hon. Prime Minister was going to bring back a report. That was four years ago and we have not heard a report on it yet.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I did not say that.

Mr. Reaume: What did the hon. Minister say then? What happened to it then?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: They submitted their brief and I reported back to my joint board of the Ontario Travel Association.

Mr. Reaume: Who is on the hon. Minister's joint board?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Representatives of all the major tourist associations in Ontario.

Mr. Reaume: Ah, but what the hon. Minister said was this—I am not talking about some joint board. What I am talking about is this: The hon. Minister said he was going to take up the brief with the hon. Prime Minister of the province. Did he do that?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes.

Mr. Reaume: Well, what did he say?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We made arrangements with the federal authorities and they have provided the loan resources in two different ways. They are available to the tourist operators and the tourist operators told me at a convention yesterday—with some 300 of them present—that they were very happy with the manner in which money is arranged for now; that they do receive their loans and they receive them at a reasonable rate of interest.

We felt that the federal authorities should handle this across Canada, making it available to all of our ten provinces and not just single out this one province that has enjoyed the advantages of bringing in people over the years. We preferred that the federal government should do it. They have done it and the tourist operators told me yesterday they were very happy with the ease with which they now can arrange loans either through the banking facilities or the Industrial Development Bank.

Mr. Reaume: I am very, very happy that the hon. Minister explained that. Now I want to ask this question: I am assuming from what the hon. Minister said, that the policy of his people is to leave things as they are? That he is very well satisfied? That is what he has said.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, I did not. The hon. member is putting words in my mouth. The policy—

Mr. Reaume: Now, do not worm out of it.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I do not create the policy.

Mr. Reaume: Well, who does?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The government of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Reaume: Well, who is the government? Now is that not a good one? The government? The hon. Minister is part of it.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is right, but I am not the government. I am just a portion of it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Does the hon. Minister wash his hands of the responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, I do not, and the evidence is in the statements I have made that I do not wash my hands of the responsibility.

Mr. Reaume: Well, the hon. Minister ought to.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Ontario is enjoying 75 per cent of the total of Canada's travel industry.

Mr. Reaume: There is no use in talking to the hon. Minister at all then. He might as well quieten down.

May I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) then? May I ask him—the hon. Minister is finished now. May I ask the hon. Prime Minister, what is the policy of the government of the province? Is he satisfied with the credit arrangement respecting the tourist people of the province, or is his government going to institute a policy that will give them credit?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, if I can follow the question of the hon. member, he is asking me what is the policy of the government regarding this government making loans to the tourist industry, is that it?

Mr. Reaume: And if the hon. Prime Minister has a policy.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, at the present time we are setting up certain committees to investigate various phases of the economy of the province and in due course we will produce a policy covering this, and covering many other things.

Mr. Reaume: I am not worried about other things, I am worried about this one.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am glad to hear the hon. member is not, but I will just answer his question.

Mr. Reaume: Let us deal with one at a time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will just deal with the hon. member's question. In due course we will produce a policy which I am quite sure will be acceptable to the tourist industry and will meet certain requirements—which we must investigate before we do it. I cannot give the hon. member any more detail than that at the moment.

Mr. Reaume: What the hon. Prime Minister is saying is that actually there is a study being made now of the tourist problem in the province as it respects credit? Is there?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I have to be very careful in answering the hon. member. I did not say that a study was presently being made, I said that we were creating the organization by which a study would be made of this problem, as well as many other problems concerning various fields of economic activity in the province. That is precisely it. I want to be exact in what I say because the hon. member might possibly misquote me.

Mr. Reaume: I am assuming, of course, that any responsible group of people, such as you have over there, are constantly making a study of everything. I know that the hon. Prime Minister is going to encompass all the problems of the province and that he and the brain trust will probably make an attempt to answer questions on all the problems we have; but what I was asking was very simple. I was asking whether specifically you are making a study of the tourist problem now as it respects credit to these people who want to build motels, tourist places and things of that kind. Now that is not a tough problem, a tough question. Is there a specific study being made on it or not?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can be any more exact than I have been. I have told the hon. member that we are setting up the machinery and organization by which this problem among others will be studied. Now I cannot really be any clearer than that.

Mr. Reaume: If the hon. Prime Minister will look on page 38 of Hansard, in the top left column in the corner he will find this quote, in his own words; he was speaking about the estimates of these departments we are dealing with now. Here are the words of the hon. Prime Minister that he was so certain that he did not say:

Nor do they have the importance, if I may put it that way, that some of the larger departments have.

Now that is in his own words.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is quite correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reaume: Why did you put it that way?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now just a minute, if you will read what I said—

Mr. Reaume: Well, I have it right here—"nor do they have the importance—"

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is right.

Mr. Reaume: Well now, is that not a fine thing for—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In other words they are not the large spending departments of government.

Mr. Reaume: Nor do they have the importance.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I may put it that way, the importance of some of the larger departments; that relates to spending.

Mr. Reaume: Nor do they have the importance.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The whole point was that I was referring to departments whose total amounts of spending were not what one might term significant in the total budget of the province. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) knows this is the point we were debating. Now, if you want to twist it around to make it appear that I said this was not an important department, I will stand up here and debate unequivocally that I consider this to be one of the more important departments of our government. Its budget is not a large budget comparatively speaking with other departments of government.

Mr. Reaume: What the hon. Prime Minister is doing now is squirming out of what he said.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a further question? I would like to try to elicit some information with respect to this committee that he mentions is being set up. It would seem to me, sir, that this information should be available through The Department of Economics. I am of the impression that for the past number of years, surveys have been made in the province. Would the hon. Prime Minister tell us how this information will be different from that which might be obtained through The Department of Economics?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can only say the studies to which I am referring will be made by the new Department of Economics itself.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, if they will be made by this department, are they not available now? It is my understanding that this department has been making surveys throughout various parts of the province and that the portion of the province which is more particularly concerned with the tourist industry has already been surveyed. Is that correct, sir?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I say to the hon. member who has spoken that the reports to which the hon. member makes reference are reports which have been published from time to time like other reports by The Department of Economics, The Department of Economics itself. These reports are studies of the economics of the tourist industry. There are studies on the development of the Georgian Bay district; there are studies relating to the Milk Board. These are publications which are put out by The Department of Economics from time to time. This is the study to which the hon. member is referring.

The hon. Prime Minister is referring to the establishment of the new Department of Economics and Development and the creation of an Ontario Economic Council which will have a number of study groups which will study specific industries, one of which will be the tourist industry; it will study various ways and means that this industry may be stimulated. The one is the situation report of that which exists, the Economic Council and its study group on the tourist industry. The council's purpose will be to find what ways and means are available to the government, as well as to the industry itself, to stimulate it by way of whatever legislation there might be or whatever kind of assistance there may be, both for the industry to help itself as well as for the government to assist.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would like to say this Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister has given a very comprehensive answer but it seems to me that both these departments have been in existence a number of years and surely this government has not been unaware of the situation with respect to the tourist industry, which I understand is a very important segment of the economy of this province.

It seems to me very strange that notwithstanding the fact that several years and great sums of money have been expended to produce these services by The Department of Economics; notwithstanding the fact that we have had in this province a number of years a Department of Commerce and Development—and the only difference now Mr. Chairman is that these two departments are to be amalgamated—it seems to me very strange that notwithstanding the fact that the government has been fully aware of the problem with respect to the tourist industry, that they should just now be getting around to setting up a department or setting up some kind of a committee to study this problem. It has been brought to the attention of the government many times before and I think they can be criticized for being negligent if they are only now getting around to studying this problem.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The points which have been made by my hon. friend are not related. He says because we now plan a new attack on this problem we must therefore assume that nothing has been done or we were not aware of any kind of a problem before. This is patently unfair when the hon. Minister in charge of The Department of Travel and Publicity indicates the tremendous increase in the proportion of the tourist industry which has been attracted to this province. The total has increased to over 75 per cent of all tourists. Surely the hon. member would want to give even begrudging credit to an

hon. Minister who has administered, capably and well, a department which is now responsible for attracting into this province about 75 per cent of tourists and the attendant benefits these bring to the province of Ontario.

As far as the reports are concerned, in relation to The Department of Economics, these have been available both to the hon. Minister and the tourist trade, and the hon. member would know if he were closely associated with the tourist industry that these reports have formed a basis for a number of activities which have been engaged in in relation to the tourist industry. They are available to the hon. member if he would like to have a copy.

These reports are not related to the programme which, as I have indicated, will be attacked under the Economic Development Council. This is a new approach towards the revitalization of industry in this province and one cannot properly do it without accepting that the tourist industry is part of it, and attacking the industry problem in this province as a whole for the future.

To leave out the tourist industry just for fear that by including it, it may be said of us that we have ignored it in the past, I suggest is a sieve that just does not hold water. We are approaching this problem as an economic whole and that is the purpose of creating The Department of Economics and Development. We want, if we can, to approach this problem of industry in Ontario in an aggressive and creative way.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the hon. Minister has done a lovely job of stickhandling around the issue. The issue which was started originally and which the hon. Prime Minister answered was the matter of loans to tourist establishments and he gave us a great long detailed approach of the new Department of Economics and Development. But the fact of the matter is that it has been well known for a number of years that the tourist industry has been suffering due to a lack of financial assistance. I can suggest to the hon. Minister one case where excessive rates of interest had to be paid at one of the border points in this province because the operator of a very large motel was not able to obtain financing for this very important part of our tourist industry through the normal channels. I think the hon. Minister has sidestepped the issue completely, but I am glad to see that they are going to do something and that something will be forthcoming with respect to this problem.

I have several other questions, Mr. Chairman. I do not know if this is the time. I should present them. I presume we are still working on vote 2101; is that right, sir?

Mr. Chairman: That is right.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Would the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity advise the House whether any thought has been given to recommending to The Department of Transport that the licence plates which are issued to all Ontario cars, and which travel throughout North America—if perhaps some slogan were placed on these plates similar to other provinces of Canada and throughout many of the states of the union to the south of us? Has any thought been given to promoting Ontario by the addition of a slogan or something to our automobile licence plates?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of thought given to it and as a matter of fact I cannot help but agree with you that we should work out some kind of a deal, which would not cost us too much, to have that "Refreshing Ontario," "The Heartland of Canada," or some such phrase—those phrases that we use in our publications are good examples. They all bespeak of this province. No matter what you say as long as it is bright and cheerful, it applies to the province of Ontario. Ontario has everything that all of the other countries in the world have. We have it all within the boundaries of this province.

We have been giving this serious consideration but I believe that there are problems—I know there are problems in relation to the production of the licence—to get something in the way of a phrase on there and which would not interfere with the numbers of the licences, which are of very great importance as you know. As a matter of fact, I would like a suggestion or two of some very short names or words which we might use so that I might be able to meet with a little more success.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the question I thought I had asked is, has this matter been taken up with The Department of Transport and is it likely to become a reality?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I do not know. Again, I say if we had some small word that could be used indicative of the province we might be able to do something about it. It is a good suggestion.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I have here a copy of a submission by the joint board of Ontario Travel Associations regarding the insurance industry, which was presented to the legislative committee on travel and publicity, and I see two or three other suggestions here about which I should like to ask the hon. Minister at this time. I see that it is some months since this was presented and I am sure there has been time to consider the suggestions. The one I just made with respect to licence plates was included in there and I am surprised that the progress has been as slow as the hon. Minister has just suggested.

One of the suggestions was that more consideration be given to providing tourist information to the travelling public along Highway 401 which services many tourist areas. It seems to me that we set these reception centres up at the entrance to the province and then we speed the people through the province from one side to the other without any indication and without any other place where they can get this information. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether consideration has been given to providing perhaps one or two of these reception centres along Highway 401, or what has been done to provide this service to the people using that road.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned in my talk that, as I promised last year, we did construct the lakeland centre up on Highway 400, which is in the heart of the province. It serves many more, but 32,000 went in and signed their names and received information.

Highway 401 has not been completed, but I might say that throughout the province, over and above our centres, we do grant approval to many business places to distribute Ontario literature and to give out information. These places only receive approval when the municipality in which they are located recommends it.

We have moved on the one inland centre on Highway 400 which I know has proved to be a great success and very helpful because, as the hon. member has stated, people cross at the border point, they travel two, three, four, five hundred miles maybe, in this big province. You can get lost and bewildered having driven two or three hundred miles and you need a refresher course, and that is where we found that the lakeland centre up here on Highway 400 has been very helpful. People have appreciated it; we have received many letters commending us for that centre.

I think consideration will be given to Highway 401 in some manner or another. I am, as the Minister of this department, not supporting the building of Ontario information centres indiscriminately throughout the province of Ontario. I think we could clutter it up with such centres, they cost money to operate. When you get too many they become a routine affair and people do not appreciate them. We do have many locations throughout the province that have our approval to distribute information and they have signs displayed. They have been very helpful.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. Minister is going to be thinking about this matter as it applies to Highway 401, I note in a remark of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) that The Department of Highways has just got around to thinking of service facilities on Highway 401. Might I suggest to him that perhaps a little talk with the hon. Minister of Highways might not go amiss. It might be possible to put in these information centres, or to rent a very small section of the service centres on Highway 401 to distribute this information.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is now being considered.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am very pleased to see that it has already been considered. Would the hon. Minister tell me whether this is going to be done with The Department of Highways or with private people who are going to operate these facilities?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It has not reached that point yet.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): A question of detail. We were told the other day that it is under study.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The other question I would like to ask the hon. Minister is with respect to the number of tourists who have entered, or the number particularly of Americans who have come into Ontario in the present year. Does he have any figures available with respect to the number of people, and could he tell me whether or not this is an increase or a decrease over previous years?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: A year ago it was 4,320,705; these are figures that we obtained from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, it is the one way in which we can obtain figures and they are not ours so they are not fixed in any way, we get them from the federal government. 4,320,705 came a year ago. This year for the first nine months: 4,557,916 and so there is an increase on the number of people that have crossed our borders.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I asked the hon. Minister for the figures. I am sort of amused to get them though because I am referring now to Hansard, March 23, 1960, when the then hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Frost) made a great speech in which he indicated that when the exchange rate was lowered so that there was not such a penalty, that this would increase by substantial numbers. I am interested to note that there has not been much of a change other than the normal increase which has been taking place for the past number of years.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, the question I would like to ask—at Fort Erie, which is part of this system that the hon. Minister is taking care of, and doing such a good job according to his own admission—he was not boasting, he was just giving us the facts—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I work for it.

Mr. Bukator: Quite some time ago the hon. Minister may recall that he had a letter from those people asking him to do something about their reception centre at the Peace Bridge. They also suggested that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) might look into the matter and improve the conditions for the provincial police. I saw the letter that the hon. Minister received from them; they sent copies to me after they failed miserably in getting action.

I like the way the hon. Minister says that he would look after this matter in due course. These letters were similar to that; in due course—I wonder when that will be, it could be in a couple of years' time when we take over.

I was out to the opening of a pumphouse with the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), and the mayor of Fort Erie, disillusioned but still believing in the government, said, "They will take care of us when we need anything." Now, for several years he has been looking for this particular unit. I do not want to criticize the hon. Minister severely at this time, but does he recall his visit to Niagara Falls in that beautiful Brock Hotel when we had this dinner and I was his guest?

The hon. Minister was talking then about this wonderful system that we have and I agreed with him, but does he recall my words at that time, that across the river from him things were happening. They have a park there that puts ours to shame. They have started out with an estimate of $63 million, from Buffalo to Fort Niagara. Those people have improved a considerable amount of that area.

I am going to tell the people of this government that the figures of tourists in that area will decrease because of their activities there; we are missing the boat. We have the natural beauty, we have the area in which to entertain these people but they are not going to come here because the hon. Minister has not kept up with the times.

I am not going to take it any further except to say that in due course Fort Erie is entitled to a new reception centre. The hon. Minister ought to be ashamed of that unit.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, I wrote a letter to the mayor a couple of weeks ago to explain the whole thing.

Mr. Bukator: Is that not wonderful? After many, many months have passed, he finally wrote another letter to explain the whole thing. The mayor will be mayor no more; he has resigned his job owing to the promises that this government has given him, and that it has not come through with. He did not want to be defeated—he quit.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, did he? That is too bad.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I was most disappointed in the remarks of the hon. Minister and the fact that he completely left out any comment concerning the tourist reception centre in the city of Windsor. Time and time again this government has practically built the centre on their promises. Two years ago the hon. Prime Minister mentioned that the people in the Windsor area had voted against this; then he corrected his remarks and said that you will have it this year. That was two years ago and we are still waiting for it. The hon. Minister of Public Works came into the area and after presenting us with a beautiful stone zoo made the following comment. He said that there is a big need for the centre which he predicted would be comparable to the tourist information centre at Sarnia.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: When was that?

Mr. Newman: This was on August 25, 1960 and that was the date of the memorable zoo presented to the city of Windsor.

Now, if the government was as interested in the tourist industry as they claim, they would certainly have co-ordinated departments. One of the prime interests of the tourist in entering the province of Ontario is to be able to travel on decent highways. Now, the latest comment is concerning Highway 401. Certainly the tourist department is not getting together with The Department of Highways when an editorial such as this taken from the issue of the Windsor Star of December 2 reads:

SHORT CHANGED ON 401

The long missing link on Highway 401 between Cobourg and London is to be about the last completed portion of that superhighway. Provincial authorities have made much of the fact, however, that it was to be completed in 1963. Now they are reneging by half on this promise. All that will be completed in 1963 will be a two-lane strip. It will not be until 1964 that the four-lane highway is ready and as these completions normally come in summer or autumn probably will not be available to heavy traffic until 1965.

Surely you can see some of the short-sightedness on the part of this government when on the one hand they talk of the tourist industry and on the other they do not give the tourists the opportunity to travel on decent highways so they can see portions of this wonderful land of ours.

Then again, Highway 401 was completed from Windsor to a little past Tilbury, approximately 36 miles, but the chambers of commerce in the Kingsville-Leamington area had the most difficult time in getting The Department of Highways to erect signs pointing to the city or the town of Leamington, to Point Pelee National Park which is the second most popular park in the Dominion of Canada, or to the town of Kingsville.

Certainly there must be some shortsightedness on the part of the government when for the want of a sign they deprived our American tourists of an opportunity of visiting such renowned areas as Kingsville and Leamington. When I say Leamington and Kingsville I include the Jack Miner bird sanctuary, one of the unusual spots in the province of Ontario.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Might I ask the hon. member if he would send me the information in connection with where they want these signs?

Mr. Newman: The signs have been constructed since, prior to the hon. Minister taking over. But they had the most difficult time in getting them. It was only after the concerted efforts of practically all of the chambers of commerce there, that this government woke up.

Windsor, being the garden gateway to Canada, has practically more tourists entering it than any other city in Canada outside of, I understand, Fort Erie. We are located in an area where we can attract within one day's travel approximately 50 million people; yet the tourist centre that is provided for our American guests certainly does not speak too highly of the government's ideas of tourist promotion.

Across the river from Windsor you have Detroit with its innumerable conventions. Yet we do not find sufficient tourist information supplied to these convention delegates in the city of Detroit by our own Department of Travel and Publicity. I understand there are plenty of conventions across there and it is only seldom that we do see Ontario travel information in Detroit.

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): It has been brought up a couple of times this afternoon about these dinosaurs in the Windsor area. Hon. members completely missed the point of the reason for my being there on—they have the date better than I have, they say it is August 25, I am not too sure of the date. I was up there primarily to talk to the members of the Windsor city council that day in announcing a travel and publicity centre for which we are going to call tenders this winter. Construction will begin as early as possible so that it will be ready for the summer tourist season. This is the first portion of the Windsor public building, or provincial building that is, that has been talked of.

There was a section of that area we had bought that the Windsor people were very concerned about; cars were parking on it, so an arrangement was made with the Windsor city council whereby this would be sodded and the cars kept off.

I did mention at the time that I had been out west this summer and had visited a dinosaur park which was very heavily crowded, and was of very much interest to myself. I do not know whether hon. members have done much travelling or not, I have not had the opportunity of doing much myself, but on occasions when you are in a travel and publicity centre and you have young children it is difficult to entertain them. I did suggest that possibly as an attraction they might put something in this park and I did mention a dinosaur, but the story did get played out of proportion a little bit.

The interesting part to me, and I hope hon. members will pay attention to this, was that a week ago Saturday night I was watching the hockey game and during the Imperial Oil advertising I noticed that they had about 26 seconds—I do not know what television time costs, but it is pretty darn expensive—I noticed about 20 or 25 seconds of the Imperial Oil broadcast devoted to the dinosaur park out in Calgary. I think you people in Windsor are missing a very good point when you do not have something there that might interest people, whether it is dinosaurs or any type of thing.

I want to remind you people that we are building a travel and publicity centre and you are missing the point entirely. You play these things out of proportion.

Windsor is getting a good many things. I visited the teachers college there, and the technological school; there are a lot of things that the people of Windsor are getting there that are attracting tourists from all over. I still think that dinosaurs have some good points. If you cannot find dinosaurs, I will bring some of my cows up there, maybe they will look at those.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I just want to answer the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: In relation to the highways, may I say to the hon. member that we had a couple up from Florida, a Mr. and Mrs. Millar who won a contest for the best essay on why they would like to visit Ontario. He is the general manager of the radio station at Tampa Cypress Gardens, and they are a very fine couple. They are certainly familiar with the State of Florida and the facilities there, and during their ten-day tour I collected a bundle of clippings from our local papers and in every case Mr. Millar kept saying "If Florida only had the wonderful highways that Ontario has, we would really go places". That was the reaction of the Florida couple.

Mr. Newman: Has the hon. Minister been to Florida?

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say to the hon. Minister of Public Works, that after he came to Windsor and made the statement of what they were going to do with the property they had bought to establish this provincial building, namely, a prehistoric park. Within a week the hon. Prime Minister was in the city of Windsor and promised the citizens of Windsor that we would have our tourist centre, not the dinosaur park. I want to say that certainly the hon. Minister left a bad impression upon the citizens of Windsor when he promised them the dinosaur park in place of a provincial building. It just goes to show you that one hon. Minister will come to the city of Windsor and say certain things and then after that we have other hon. Ministers making other statements. Then you have the hon. Prime Minister himself come down and straighten out the whole affair. I wanted to show that sometimes the hon. Ministers should confer with the hon. Prime Minister before they make their statements.

Mr. Bukator: Could I ask a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works? He mentioned the fact that they are getting this building in Windsor and also a dinosaur, if they want it.

Is it possible that he has in his programme a small unit for Fort Erie where all these people come in? Has the hon. Minister considered that in his programme? No dinosaurs, just the building itself. Is there a possible chance we will get this building some time in the near future?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): We will give the hon. member a statue of a Liberal.

Mr. Bukator: I would not want to be that honoured. All we are asking for is a decent unit for the tourists who come in, because there are thousands come in over the Peace Bridge; a place where they can ask questions, rather than those fields we have at the entrance.

I do not want to go after the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) yet, because first I would like to talk about the entrance and then we will talk about the highway if need be. Is this in the planning stages or are they going to go on with it? The hon. Minister knows it is necessary.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Mr. Chairman, a travel and publicity centre would be a prestige type of building, but the last I had heard was that they had difficulty in getting clear title to the property that had been proposed for the centre.

Mr. Bukator: When are they going to take the building off—because they have one there now. All I want to know is what is going to be done? Is there going to be room for the provincial police, who are in a tower now, or in a type of building that looks like a cell block.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The hon. member knows the city does not want it where it is presently located.

Mr. Bukator: All I know is that they have asked me to come to you hon. gentlemen—who have their support there by the way, for the time being—to bring this about.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: If the mayor has retired, I thought the hon. member would be the next.

Mr. Bukator: He stepped down to deputy reeve, at least he is running for it. If he got a telegram from the hon. Minister now, I am quite sure he could be assured of his election.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Not a telegram, that costs money, I write letters.

Mr. Bukator: It is remarkable that the hon. Minister spent $110,000 on travelling and he cannot spend one 50-cent piece for a telegram. I will give it to him.

By the way, what is going to happen to the additional $354,000 that the hon. Minister is going to spend this year? Is there anything in the estimates for that? Maybe we have that unit hidden in there somewhere. This is not a difficult thing, the government owes the people in Fort Erie something. You all know the mayor; most of you who ran for Prime Minister have talked to the gentleman. He got up publicly the other day and said as long as we have these people in government, the Conservatives will be treated right. Now I am asking for your own to be treated right.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We recognize the need there and we are—

Mr. Bukator: I noticed many years ago that you had recognized just that, but I would ask the hon. Minister again is there possible chance he will go to work on it some time in the near future; before the next election? At least I can say they gave it to you, but I brought it about.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that the hon. Minister of Highways is in his seat along with the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity because what I have to say concerns both.

Particularly in Bruce Peninsula many of the tourist operators complain of the fact that they have a great deal of difficulty in being able to put up signs showing not only the various municipalities, the local villages or tourist areas but also they have difficulty in putting up signs showing their various places of business. Now, I would like to compare that with the situation in Muskoka. I have travelled through Muskoka and I do not think I am exaggerating at all when I say that on the corners that it is not uncommon to see perhaps 15 or 20 signs, showing where certain areas are.

Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity and certainly the hon. Minister of Highways that this is not the case in the Bruce Peninsula and in the tourist season the Bruce Peninsula can certainly be compared to the Muskoka area. It is primarily a tourist area and I feel if these signs are allowed in Muskoka they most certainly should be allowed in the peninsula. This is actually a hardship on many tourist operators.

In the Muskoka area I have seen on numerous occasions where not only the area is advertised but the person's place of business also, there is a finger sign pointing to it along the highway. And I feel that inasmuch as the peninsula, I would say from Highway 21 north, as a matter of fact, but inasmuch as this area is primarily a tourist area, that an exception should be made in the case of that area as it has been in Muskoka and I think rightly so. These people should be allowed to advertise their places of business and the tourist areas as they are in other areas.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Chairman, I think the people of Muskoka will be interested indeed, to know that an exception has been made in that district, but it will be a big surprise to them, I am sure.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I assure you I was not trying to take any backhand slap at the people of Muskoka. I am merely pointing out that it is not the least bit uncommon in the Muskoka area to see numerous signs pointing to various small municipalities, tourist municipalities. Such is not the case as far as the Bruce Peninsula is concerned. The Department of Highways has not allowed these signs to be put up, and I am merely asking, Mr. Chairman, that it be allowed in the area from which I come.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, I hear complaints from my own county—I have one of the most important tourist counties in the province of Ontario—Rice Lake, Trent River and Lake Ontario—and I hear complaints similar to those mentioned by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher).

I do not think we want to get every tourist resort having big illuminated signs, but I think there is a good deal of merit in having finger boards on our secondary King's Highways so at least a tourist coming from the States gets a general idea of where the resort is; so that you can stop at the four corners and see the finger board.

The whole matter, I understand, is under review, but I have the same problem as the hon. member for Bruce. We are considered to be in southern Ontario—in the more civilized part you see—and we are not allowed these things.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: As a matter of fact added to that, we have representation, through the kindness of the hon. Minister of Highways on their sign committee so that such things can be brought to their attention.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask either of the hon. Ministers: would it do any good to bring down people to ask you for these things? This is a very important matter, I assure you, to the people concerned. I feel that we should have the same chance of attracting these people as those in the Muskoka area; people do get lost on our back roads in Bruce county, there is no use denying it.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Realizing that I always pay strict attention to, and take into great consideration, any matters raised by the hon. member for Bruce, there is no point in bringing down a deputation.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask another question of the hon. Minister. I note in this pamphlet, to which I have already referred, a considerable amount of time has been given to the problem of overcrowding in some of the more popular resort areas. I think this admission indicates that greater numbers of tourists are coming into the province—not as many as we would have hoped for, but greater numbers—and they are coming over here in many cases with high powered boats and the peace and tranquillity which was once available to our Ontario residents at many of these smaller lakes is being disturbed. They have suggested that the hon. Minister give consideration to enforcing the part of the statute under The Tourist Establishments Act, section 2, subsection j, which states: "prescribing the maximum number of tourist establishments for any designated area."

Would the hon. Minister tell us how he goes about doing this? What has been done in the past few years? And whether or not any licences have been refused because of over-population in any particular area or not?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We have provisions under our legislation for zoning. However, there is tremendous pressure for increased facilities and in co-operation with The Department of Lands and Forests we are endeavouring to control the situation so that it does not get out of hand.

There are parts of the province where it has become pretty well developed and there are parts which are pretty much wilderness areas. Of course we are particularly concerned about holding some of those wilderness areas until they can be given further study before they become overdeveloped. Does that answer your question?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: No, Mr. Chairman, it does not answer my question. I particularly asked the hon. Minister if any licences had been withheld or refused because of an over-population in area; can he answer that part of the question?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, then, how is the department prescribing the maximum number of tourist establishments of any designated area? Does the hon. Minister not feel that there is any particular area that is over-populated? He merely said that this was a problem and yet it would appear to me that the only way that he could control it would be through the licensing; and he tells me that no licenses have been refused. Could he tell me how they are prescribing the number of establishments?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, maybe I misunderstood. There have been applications to establish refused.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The hon. Minister just told me they had not been refused.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Are you speaking of north-western Ontario, or just down in the southern part—in the highly developed areas?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, if I might elaborate: I am speaking to the recommendations contained in this submission of which I am sure the hon. Minister is aware. I will endeavour to make it more clear if I can.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Which recommendation?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have just referred to this submission, Mr. Chairman. It is the submission of the joint board of Ontario travel associations regarding the Ontario tourist industry, to the legislative committee on travel and publicity. Has the hon. Minister not seen this report?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, yes, of course.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, then I am sure if the hon. Minister has seen this report he is aware of the contents. I am sure he is aware of the fact that this group has pointed out to the government that this is becoming a problem, and I think he is likewise aware of the portion of the report contained on page 7, section 2; it merely says that The Department of Travel and Publicity enforces section 2 1(j) of The Tourist Establishment Act. Now I have read that portion of the Act to the hon. Minister and I am asking him how he is going about enforcing it. It appears to me that it is not being enforced from the answer that I have received thus far.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 102?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Oh, just a minute, Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to an answer to the question. I have asked it twice now to try and clarify it.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I recall this was discussed again when I was up at the Northern Tourist Operators Association on Monday. It is a matter of great concern to the present operators throughout this province lest it become over-populated. In the north and northwestern part of Ontario, insofar as I know, there is no over-population by resort operations—motels and so on, unless it might be adjacent to a populated community; and I would not say they were over-populated because of the increase in the influx of people.

I have spoken to no one during this past year who is directly connected with the tourist business, who did not tell me they had a good year and they made money last year. I do not think we are over-populated.

I think the matter you are discussing, or bringing to my attention as a result of the submission which was made, was the concern on the part of some of our operators who enjoy what you could call a wilderness area; at least they have their operation out in a part of the province where there are not too many other operations. Some of them are quite anxious that we do not approve too many licences for establishments in that particular area of the province lest it become over-populated.

Well, there is the story. They are concerned about the zoning; we are controlling it in co-operation with Lands and Forests. That is that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Apparently I have not yet made myself clear to the hon. Minister. Just so that he will be aware of what I am trying to say, I hope you will permit me to read two paragraphs of this brief to which I have been referring and which I think sets out the situation and which is somewhat contrary to the opinion of the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It has been taken care of to the satisfaction of our joint board of associations.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman if you allow me to continue I would read, sir, on page 6 of this submission which was forwarded to all members of the committee:

Therefore the peace and quiet and relaxation desired by both tourist and private summer cottage alike is in many areas no longer available and this is having an adverse effect on the tourist industry.

I stop here, Mr. Chairman, long enough to tell you that this is contrary to the information that has just been given us by the hon. Minister. I continue to read:

Also in these areas, which are fast becoming overcrowded, the introduction of bigger and faster boats and motors are creating a hazard to personal safety. A recent survey by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau indicated that 30 per cent of the non-resident tourists use a boat for all or part of their vacation in Canada, and it is safe to assume that an even greater number of residents also use boats during their vacation.

While Ontario has more than enough waterways to accommodate the fast-growing multitude of boats, they are being crowded into the more popular areas of the province, hence the urgent need for tourist population control in these areas.

With the building of bigger and better highways in northern Ontario plus the increase in non-resident tourist traffic and the vast increase in the population of Ontario, there is a tendency towards greater overcrowding of presently established tourist and private cottage areas.

Not only is this condition depriving these people of the peace and quiet of a restful vacation, it is also creating a greater pressure on our fish and wildlife resources than they can stand, and therefore the future of the tourist industry in such areas is being greatly jeopardized.

Mr. Chairman I would just say this and I will leave this issue. It has become clear, in my mind anyhow, that nothing is being done by The Department of Travel and Publicity to alleviate this situation. It may be they feel that nothing should be done, but I point out to the hon. Minister that this is a submission from a responsible group of people. It seems to make some sense to me and I think that the hon. Minister should give some thought toward taking action to correct this situation at an early date.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well I am sorry; I think the hon. member was talking about one matter and I was talking about another. What he has just read, I would gather from the submission, is concerned with the number of cottages that are being constructed along our lakes and because of new highways that lead into them and so on, and of course that is a matter for Lands and Forests. Our job is the approval of licences to establish on the part of resort operations, outfitters camps, and so on. In that submission, hon. member will note—I paid particular attention while he was reading it—that I think they were referring there to cottage establishments of private individuals.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Not quite. The hon. Minister is partially correct. It is a matter for The Department of Lands and Forests and the submission so states. It says in subsection 1 that the establishment of new commercial tourist camps continues to be controlled through The Department of Lands and Forests, but I would point out, sir, that The Tourist Establishments Act comes under the hon. Minister's department I understand, and they also suggest on the next section that this section of the Act which is now in existence be enacted and controlled through his department and I suggest that this is not a matter for any other department but The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, before we pass on, I would just like to ask one or two questions about the roadway and the tourist area in general on the north shore of Lake Superior.

I took this trip this summer; I have taken the advice of the hon. Minister's department to see Ontario first, so I have a very accurate idea of what it is like. But one observation I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the accommodation is obviously not nearly adequate to take care of the tourist people who will be going through that area that I went through this summer.

My first question, Mr. Chairman: is the government doing anything to assist the tourist industry in order to provide more adequate accommodation in that area?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question—first of all we did issue a special publication last year that we got out in a bit of a hurry, to let the people know generally that when they attempted to make that trip they should not look for the best of accommodation. In fact it was pointed out they might have trouble because of insufficient accommodation. But I was up there the first of this week and I was told by our inspector who serves from Wawa down to the Sault that in that section 28 new establishments are being opened up. The first 19 new licences have been issued and the other nine will be issued very shortly; the premises are under construction, so that the accommodation is being added to very quickly.

Lands and Forests are endeavouring to be careful in the sale of land and the kind of accommodation that is proposed there and they tell me some of it is very elaborate. Two establishments up at Wawa, which I have not seen because they are newly built, are just tremendous. They will open your eyes when you go up there. So I think the accommodation is being taken care of and I hope by next year—

Mr. Trotter: Well, Mr. Chairman, there are two things I might be able to inform the hon. Minister on this. He may be sending out literature but certainly the American tourists who are going through there are not aware of it. Some of them might be but I heard an awful lot of complaints and certainly they are going to carry these complaints back to their homes, so that adverse advertising will not do the north shore of Lake Superior any good.

The highway has been in the process of being built for so long, surely some planning could have been done by the government in assisting the private tourist operators. Once again reference should be made to a fund that should be made available to the tourist industry to help them provide the accommodation that is needed up that way.

One other thing I would like to ask the hon. Minister and which would also affect the hon. Minister of Highways, concerns signs up this way. I understand that it is the policy of The Department of Highways not to permit too many signs in order to preserve the wilderness effect. I admit this is a good idea, but let me give one instance of how far that policy can be carried to make it appear foolish in some instances.

One of the better accommodations by Fort William—going south from Fort William—is not allowed to put up a sign; in fact they are only permitted to put up signs so many feet from their entrance and at this particular place if they measured the required footage their sign would end up in the middle of a stream. As a result they had no sign up.

The man who owns this particular place tried to fly two Canadian ensigns by the entrance and he was ordered by the department to take down the Canadian ensign. He told the department if they wanted to take the flags down they could come and do it themselves; the last I heard the flag was still flying.

The tourist industry is never going to be helped unless advertising is permitted to some extent. I do not think they should carry it to the extent seen on the south shore of Lake Superior; you can hardly see the lake in some places, the way the Americans have got their big billboards up, but we have carried it to the other extreme. As a result the tourist industry is hampered and I can certainly supply names to the hon. Minister of Highways of people who have been put to great hardship in obtaining customers. One way of getting around it is for the man who owns a camp to put a sign on his car, park the car on the highway and in that way indicate to the traveller where the camp is. It is only by getting around the law in this way that they can advertise. I would ask the hon. Minister to bear this in mind.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Would the hon. member send me all this information as quickly as possible so that we can take it under advisement immediately?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, because you take things under advisement for so long and I figure if I send it to you now, you might do something just before the next election. I have one question, Mr. Chairman, regarding the ferry leaving Manitoulin Island going to Tobermory. The ferry service there is terrible.

One American had arrived at 10 o'clock in the morning to get the 11 o'clock ferry. He could not make it and was there at 7 o'clock when I arrived that evening. This is a common occurrence at the Tobermory ferry and I was wondering, seeing that there are going to be so many Americans coming down from the north shore of Lake Superior to Manitoulin Island, if there is any prospect of improving the services of the Tobermory ferry.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member wants an answer about the ferry and I am qualified to give an answer. I have been travelling back and forth on this ferry regularly for the last 14 years. If the hon. member will listen to this he will learn something about the Manitoulin Island ferry.

For the benefit of the hon. member, it is called Tobermory, it is a beautiful Irish name, it is like the Lakes of Killarney, and that song—"How are things in Gloomorra?"

Mr. Trotter: What about the ferry service? Let us get into that.

Mr. Cowling: I am going to get around to that. They have two ferries up there. There is one called the "Norisle," Mr. Chairman, and this carries about 50 cars. It is on regular schedule and leaves Tobermory at 7 o'clock in the morning and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Then on the weekends, when they are a little busier, they put a smaller ferry on, it is called the "Norgama" and it takes 14 cars.

Very often during the busy season, and particularly on the weekend of July 4, the Independence holiday in the United States, and our July 1, they are extremely busy. They are very busy on the first Monday in August which is civic holiday throughout the province of Ontario. But at other times, and certainly during the week, the ferry service is quite adequate.

When you stop to consider, Mr. Chairman, that in order to build a larger ferry—as a matter of fact, consideration was given at one time to taking over one of the ferries that ran across the Straits of Mackinac. They are much larger ferries, they carry up to 80 and 100 cars, but they cost $1 million. Now, you cannot have a $1 million ferry running between Tobermory and South Baymouth, to take up a little bit of slack on those two heavy weekends.

The ferry starts to run about May 1 and it runs until after the hunting season in November. It makes thousands of trips across that strip of water, and with the exception of these two or three weekends with which I am very familiar, Mr. Chairman, because I have arrived there several times myself and had to wait for the next ferry, the service is adequate.

At the same time this situation is a great boost for business in Tobermory. The local restaurants are full of tourists enjoying the sandwiches and other things that are there. For the convenience of the tourists we also have a first-class liquor store there where they can go and spend some time if they wish, and a brewers' warehousing, and so on.

The same thing applies on the South Baymouth side. There are many beautiful attractions to see close to the dock. They can tour around and have a picnic and really, for the number of hours—

Mr. Trotter: Catch fish, too!

Mr. Cowling: Yes, lots of fish right off the dock on either side. Spend the hours whiling away the time and fishing and learning about the great province of Ontario.

I would like to say for the benefit of the hon. member that the ferry service, although not completely adequate on the two busy weekends, takes care of the traffic back and forth. Some day, when the tourist business gets up to where the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) would like to have it, there might be a call for another ferry, but certainly there is not up to now. I would suggest that next year, when the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) takes his tour of the north country, he should try it again, and I suggest he hit it about Wednesday.

Mr. Trotter: Too long a wait!

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale about the incident of the flag. All I can say is that it is very fortunate that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) did not hear about that incident or that would have been in his platform and the results of the recent contest might have been different.

The other week, sir—I adverted to this matter in the House yesterday when the hon. Minister was absent, no doubt due to the pressure of the onerous responsibilities of his office—I asked the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) about the fires in the Sioux Lookout area. Many of the fine people of Kenora, and they are all fine people up there, earn their livelihood through the tourist industry. Particularly is this so in the Sioux Lookout area where there are many excellent lodges which cater, as does the whole riding of Kenora, generally speaking, to the large influx of tourists that come from the mid-western United States. I might say I was rather surprised, just dwelling on Kenora for a minute, to see how much farther advanced—I say it without seeking any invidious comparisons at all—the tourist industry is in north-western Ontario compared to northeastern Ontario.

I can see, sir, that these vigorous enterprises in the northwest are indeed aware of the gains and the profits of individual initiative—and I do not want to offend my friends to the left when I talk about individual initiative—that can be had from the cultivation of the large number of people that come across from the United States.

Now, sir, I was told by tourist operators in Sioux Lookout, and I do not come armed with affidavits—that is not the fashion this year, last year was the year for affidavits—they told me that when the fires were raging in that area that the closest they got to the town of Sioux Lookout was some 35 miles. As anyone who has lived in the north or been in the north will know, 35 miles means that several ranges of hills or mountains probably separated the fires from the town. They told me that at the height of the hazard The Department of Travel and Publicity used the devices of the media of communication, newspaper and radio, to inform American tourists to stay away from the Sioux Lookout area. They did; with the consequent loss—an injurious loss—of a great deal of revenue during that period.

I could hardly believe that the department working in conjunction with the other department of government would make such a silly assertion if it had not first informed itself of the facts of the case. Surely there must have been in that area a representative of the department, or at least some means of communication with The Department of Lands and Forests, to see what the forest fire situation was when it was at its worst in the month of July. I would take it that in the future that the hon. Minister ought to attend, or his officials ought to attend—well, never mind the officials, the hon. Minister is responsible—to a better funnelling of communications and information when forest fires are encountered so that no such loss will be felt.

I might as well go on to the second thing that I want to say, and it is all I want to say in the estimates of this department.

I think the efforts of the hon. Minister will be largely in vain. This may have been said earlier in this debate and forgive me, Mr. Chairman, as will, I hope, all other hon. members in giving me their kind indulgence, but I repeat, I think his efforts will be largely in vain in trying to sell the province of Ontario and particularly the northern parts of the province of Ontario as a haven of rest, relaxation and recreation to visitors, particularly from the United States, until something is done about our silly, stupid, hypocritical, disgusting liquor laws so far as they affect the rights of tourist outfitters to supply their guests.

Now we, at least, on September 26—I believe I am correct—we came out with our policy statement of what this party will do when it is elected in relation to the liquor laws. I am not going to repeat that policy statement, I would be out of order, sir, if I did.

We waited expectantly, with bated breath, you might say, to hear what the Conservative Party was going to do about the liquor policy when it had its recent large gathering at Varsity Arena. They were completely silent; and as a matter of fact, this may be referred to here, if I am permitted; we are told that at the time they were so engaged—that they were so obsessed with picking the new leader of the party—that the most they could ever muster at a policy-making conference was 50 souls—50 souls; even with the stellar attraction of the mayor of Ottawa, who was ready to take on Fred Gardiner and all the rest of the old guard, and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) will tell hon. members who they are.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the hon. member will ask the hon. leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Wintermeyer) assistant, he will tell the hon. member how many were present, if he can count in the thousands.

Mr. Sopha: We said—to get back to this department—that in the realm of tourist outfitters that we would adopt a sensible policy. I say that the hon. Minister's efforts are largely in vain until the time comes when he will look upon these citizens who operate the tourist lodges and recognize them as responsible and law-abiding people and give them the responsible right to supply liquor to their guests.

Let me give a typical example. At Gogama, Gogama is a hamlet on the C.N.R. some 150 miles northwest of Sudbury, there is a tourist lodge on Lake Mattagami—the head waters of the great Mattagami River which flows northward into the James Bay watershed—a large lake some 25 or 30 miles long. There is a tourist lodge there operated by a person from Ohio by the name of Rowlands. He came up there as a fisherman for relaxation, he fell in love with the country—that is easy to do—and he decided that he and his wife would establish a tourist lodge and they would thereafter every summer, six months of the year, live amid the beauties of northern Ontario.

The first year in which he was in operation, in came a party of his friends from Dayton, Ohio, or Ashtabula, or some other place down there. If hon. members knew Gogama they would know that geographically they are isolated, as in a desert, by some 150 miles from the nearest lawful dispensary of spirituous beverage. These people came in and said: "Bill, have you got something to drink for us?"

"Well, no, I have not, I am sorry."

"Well, we would really like one."

"Maybe I will drive into town and get you one."

I will not name the official, but an official of one of the departments of government, he would be the leading citizen of the hamlet, such a person, he has the imprimatur of the government—he works for the government—Rowlands goes into town to this official and he says: "I have friends out at the camp, would you lend me a bottle?"

"Fine, sure, take it," was the reply.

Rowlands takes it and he goes out and he gets into his truck, puts the bottle in the glove compartment and starts to journey back to his camp some 10 to 12 miles distant. Lo and behold—it is not moose season but he hears something that sounds like the call of the mating moose—the siren of the provincial police cruiser.

He pulls Rowlands over to the side of the road and says: "You have got a bottle in the car?"

"Yes, I have."

"Where did you get it?"

"I got it from Mr. X."

"Give it to me."

He does not know what this is all about but the fellow is in uniform and he has to give him the bottle. The next day the provincial policeman arrives at his camp and hands him a summons, illegal possession of liquor, 89(1) of The Liquor Control Act.

He says: "You can plead guilty to it and I can change it to 43(1), liquor in a place other than a residence. Give me $16.50 and that will be the end of it."

Now if the time ever came—here is the horrendous part of it, here is the really stark proportion of the government's policy, the policy which you as a member of the government, pardon me, Mr. Chairman, the policy that the hon. Minister supports by being a member of the government—if they ever did relax the right to supply guests and to keep spirituous beverages on the premises, under the present system of the liquor licence board that man having been convicted or pleading guilty to an offence under The Liquor Control Act, could not get a licence in the future.

He was not in the courts. He innocently went and got a bottle. The policeman—doing his duty—confiscated the bottle; was judge, jury and executioner; took the $16.50.

What is the result of it? I have said before, and I do not coin any phrase: the government makes honest, law-abiding citizens break the law, makes them into bootleggers. They have to be bootleggers, because people are not going to journey from Minnesota, Pennsylvania, New York or far distant points; they are not going to journey on a holiday seeking rest and relaxation and recreation, and thereby become abstainers, sir. They are not going to give up their drinking habits.

All we ask on this side—and the hon. Minister will remember, and perhaps I have the ear of the hon. Prime Minister and perhaps I do not—this is the era of the new broom. There is a new leaf and the hon. Prime Minister who preceded him told us two years ago, he told this House, that they would try. In a few instances they would give tourist outfitters the right to purvey spirituous beverages. He promised that.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Generally speaking, as history will record, that has been done.

Mr. Sopha: As history will record? Well, it is not being done.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It is, and I could name the hon. member the places if I felt like it.

Mr. Sopha: It certainly is not being done. The problem is greater than that. If a person has the physical plant, if he has invested his money in it, he has faith in his enterprise. If he and, as in most cases, his wife and family are ready to take this on as their life-work to earn their living, that person by the very nature of his appearance, of his activity, has demonstrated that he is responsible enough to be able to handle liquor and purvey it responsibly to those who come and give him the custom of their business and seek the benefits and privileges of the inn which he keeps.

That is what he is, he is an innkeeper. An innkeeper in the historic and common sense of the calling.

One of the qualities historically of an inn was that the traveller, the weary traveller or the guests who stayed there, could have all the benefits of the house including the partaking of a glass of spirituous beverage.

I only take the time of the House, I only exercise my own vocal chords because I see the imponderable good sense of it, that we should, in this province, put aside some of our puritanical notions. The government which yet has the responsibility of office should begin to realize that public sentiment is not what it was a generation ago, that people are more broadminded now. They view liquor—well, at least we in Sudbury, view it—with more broadmindedness than perhaps the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) does.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Tell it to the hon. member's candidate in Eglinton.

Mr. Sopha: We will, sir. Life is full of surprises; the hon. Minister may be surprised in Eglinton.

An hon. member: Is it carried?

Mr. Sopha: No, it is not carried because they have not changed their liquor policies. Not carried at all.

The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer), who always is alert to developments, reminds me of the tourist who was arrested, convicted and fined for drinking beer in the environs of his tent away back in the bush, as I recall it. How silly can the laws get?

I make my final plea, I ask this government. Our approach to the hon. Prime Minister is going to be that we assume him to be a broadminded man and he is going to revolutionize the life of this province. We are going to believe that about him until he demonstrates he is just like the one that just left.

An hon. member: The hon. member has great faith.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I have great faith. I am optimistic and I do have great faith in human nature.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Imponderable good sense! Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would tell me what imponderable good sense means?

Mr. Sopha: That can be found in all of the publications of the Ontario Liberal Association.

Vote 2101 agreed to.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I have one question which I would like to ask the hon. Minister who is responsible for this department and I am prepared to ask it or I am prepared to leave it until a further day, at your suggestion. I know it is now 6:00 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, on Thursday afternoon we will go on with these estimates and any of the orders on the order paper—there are not very many—and the Throne Speech.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:04 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, Northview Heights Collegiate, Willowdale and Havergal College, Toronto. In the west gallery Ryerson Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition has been received:

Of the corporation of the township of Nepean praying that an Act may pass relating to imposition of sewage and water rates.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. W. G. Noden from the standing committee on standing orders presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of the town of Hearst praying that an Act may pass vesting certain lands in one Joseph David Levesque.

Of the corporation of the town of Orillia praying that an Act may pass enabling it and the Orillia Water, Light and Power Commission to require owners of lots in subdivisions to assume and pay their respective equitable share of the cost of such improvements before being entitled to the benefit thereof or obtaining a permit to construct a building thereon.

Of the corporation of the city of London praying that an Act may pass refunding certain taxes on the premises of London Little Theatre; and for other purposes.

By Metropolitan United Church, Toronto, praying that an Act may pass enlarging a trust to enable it to engage an organist who is a graduate of a Canadian institution entitled to grant degrees in music and who holds a Fellowship in the Royal Canadian College of Organists.

Of the corporation of the town of Oakville and the corporation of the township of Trafalgar praying that an Act may pass defining an area, in the new municipality created by the amalgamation of the township and the town, comprising all that part of the said new municipality lying south of the Upper Middle Road; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Ottawa praying that an Act may pass authorizing the necessary action for a re-development proposal for part of the city of Ottawa; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Windsor praying that an Act may pass authorizing the inclusion on the Board of Governors of the Metropolitan General Hospital of a member appointed by the Essex County Council; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the united townships of Medora and Wood praying that an Act may pass authorizing the division of the township into three wards and the election of the council by wards.

Of the corporations of the county of Essex, the town of Leamington and the Public Utilities Commission of the town of Leamington praying that an Act may pass to confirm an agreement for the supply of water and the furnishing of fire protection to the Sun Parlour Home for Senior Citizens.

Of the Ontario Registered Music Teachers' Association praying that an Act may pass providing for a head office for the association and increasing the council to not more than fifteen.

Of the corporation of the Sudbury High School District Board praying that an Act may pass authorizing the execution of an agreement with the Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge District High School Board relative to the operation and maintenance of schools outside the jurisdiction of the Sudbury board; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the town of Richmond Hill praying that an Act may pass re-constituting the council.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass respecting charges for laying and repairing water service pipes from the main pipe to owners' premises. Supplementary petition of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass relating to assessment of cost of private drain connections and to permit licensing and regulating use of untravelled portions of the highways.

Of the corporation of the township of Etobicoke praying that an Act may pass providing that the provisions of The Public Parks Act shall not apply to the township.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass incorporating the board of governors of the Hamilton Civic Hospitals; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Toronto praying that an Act may pass respecting payment for services installed in advance of development of land.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence from the standing committee on legal bills presents the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill 14, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act.

Bill 15, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Bill 16, An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Bill 17, An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

Bill 27, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Bill 28, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 18, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Mr. A. W. Downer from the standing committee on health and welfare presents the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill 29, An Act to amend The Dentistry Act.

Bill 30, An Act to amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act.

Bill 31, An Act to amend The Air Pollution Control Act.

Bill 32, An Act to amend The Cancer Act.

Bill 35, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to create the Ontario Safety Council. Before saying anything further about it I should like to make a short explanation.

Hon. members will remember that a Royal Commission on Industrial Safety was established under the chairmanship of His Honour Judge P. J. McAndrew, on April 7, 1960. Their terms of reference were:

to inquire into and report upon all statutes and regulations administered by The Department of Labour that govern the safety of workers with a view to the improvement, simplification, clarification and modernization of such statutes and regulations.

The commission held a number of public meetings at Toronto, Windsor and Port Arthur. It heard evidence from 118 witnesses and studied 160 briefs and exhibits.

The report of the commission was submitted to the government on October 16 this year, just seven weeks ago, after 18 months of hearings and deliberations.

The recommendations of the commission have been studied and considered by myself and members of my staff and we have come to the conclusion that by establishing the Ontario Safety Council at this time we shall have the advantage of its advice and consultation in dealing with the many aspects of safety considered by the Royal commission.

I want at this time, Mr. Speaker, to express my appreciation for the exhaustive report the commission has submitted to the government.

I would also, at this time, like to place on record my personal thanks to His Honour Judge McAndrew and the two commissioners, Dr. J. Danvers Bateman and G. Russell Harvey for the enthusiasm with which they attacked the task assigned them by the government and for the sincere desire they have shown to bring down a report which will assist the government in planning legislation in the field of safety.

In their report the commission said that although Ontario may well feel proud of its legislation and splendid administration for workmen's compensation and rehabilitation following an accident, the area of greatest importance is, and will remain, accident prevention, and safety legislation enactment.

We have responded with the bill I now present to the House, Mr. Speaker, for the establishment of the Ontario Safety Council.

The membership of the council, which will be announced as soon as possible, will comprise representation from labour and management and from the medical, engineering and other professions. It is my thought that the council should be representative of all groups who are vitally concerned with the growth and welfare of our industries and of the people who work in them.

The Ontario Safety Council will be directly responsible to the Minister of Labour. The council will inquire into and advise on any matter concerning the safety of workers in Ontario.

The council will also inquire into and report upon any statute or regulation dealing with safety with a view to the improvement, clarification and amendment of any statute or regulation which will facilitate and co-ordinate the handling of any matter governing or concerning the safety of workers in this province.

The establishment of the Ontario Safety Council is proof that this government is prepared to go forward in the field of accident prevention. Through the Ontario Safety Council we will be able to co-ordinate effectively accident prevention work with the enforcement of safety legislation and with the extensive field of voluntary safety effort that now exists.

May I, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, re-emphasize an important finding of the Royal commission:

Safety consciousness cannot be imposed. Attitudes cannot be legislated. Public interest, education, integration of effort and inspiration are the keys to future progress above and beyond the basic legislated minima of safety requirements.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) permit a question?

In view of the compliments which the hon. Minister quite properly paid to the Royal commission on its very fine work, I wonder if he would indicate to the House why he has not been prepared, to date at any rate, to accept its urgent recommendation for immediate enactment of a construction safety Act?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, may I say in reply to the question that I consider the setting up of the safety council the very essence of the report itself. I feel that the construction safety Act will come a little later when the council members themselves have had an opportunity to look into the whole situation.

I should rather, Mr. Speaker, delay this matter a short time in order to be sure we are on the right track, than rush into something which we may have to change later, because it was not properly planned, or all provisions were not made for those things which may be recommended by the council itself.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The department has been stalling for years.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): My question to the hon. Minister deals directly with the statement he made today. Will the annual report of the safety council be tabled regularly in this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I rather doubt it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Was that not a recommendation, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That was a recommendation, Mr. Speaker, but I am not following some of the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister, by way of clarification, whether this body is to take over the educational work that until now has been carried on by the Accident Prevention Association?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: No, it will not take that over because we feel that those people in the accident prevention field have been doing an excellent job.

There is, however, some evidence of overlapping; there is some evidence that there is not a proper co-ordination of all their accident-prevention functions. It will be one of the functions of the council to co-ordinate those many activities to see that we are, shall we say, getting the full value for the money being spent in that field.

As I think you all know, a large sum of money—approximately $150,000—is being paid by the Workmen's Compensation Board to the Accident Prevention Association. And because that money comes from the board—and therefore from industrialists—it is felt that, through this council and through proper co-ordination, the money can probably be spent in a much more effective way than at present.

But I still pay tribute to those who are in this field.

REGISTERED MUSIC TEACHERS

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) in the absence of Mr. J. Morin, moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting the Registered Music Teachers' Association of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE VITAL STATISTICS ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF OTTAWA

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting The City of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

TOWN OF ORILLIA

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting The Town of Orillia.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting The City of Windsor.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister explain generally the principle of this bill?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): There are a number of amendments to various sections of the Act, Mr. Speaker.

Section 1 is the clarification of the expression as to the coming into being of a corporation.

Section 2 is a rewording of the section to clarify the intent.

Section 3 is designed to make clear that property of a corporation includes, and always has included, all property of the company, both present and future.

Section 4 is a provision permitting Ontario corporations to continue as if they had been incorporated under other jurisdictions in Canada.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS INFORMATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Corporations Information Act.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Minister explain this bill as well, please?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: These are also various amendments to the Act. The first section provides for the filing of up-to-date information in respect to changes in directorships of corporations. Another section provides for filing of up-to-date information as to changes in authorized capital structure. And two sections provide for extension of the principle of filing of power of attorney—presently in effect in respect of certain corporations—to all corporations in Ontario.

Mr. Singer: If the hon. Minister would permit a supplementary question—Do these directorships that he is talking about, refer to directors of charter clubs as well?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They refer to directors of all corporations.

Mr. Singer: And are there penalties for failure to file?

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE INCOME TAX ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled The Income Tax Act, 1961-1962.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, this Act imposes a tax on individual residents of Ontario, calculated as a percentage of the tax otherwise payable by the same individuals of Canada under The Federal Income Tax Act. It implements the fiscal arrangements being negotiated between Canada and Ontario, for the collection of individual income taxes in Ontario. The Act provides the treasurer with authority to conclude the agreement between Ontario and Canada, whereby Canada will collect—on behalf of Ontario—the taxes imposed by this Act.

This bill replaces The Income Tax Act, 1960-1961 and The Income Tax Agency Agreement Act, 1960-1961 which were passed at the last session of the Legislature. It is designed to conform with the draft bill presented by Canada to all the provinces, as a model that would permit Canada to act as collection agency for the provinces. There is no change in principle between this Act and those Acts which were passed by the Legislature last year.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF HAMILTON

Mr. R. C. Edwards moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting The City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF TORONTO

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park), in the absence of Mr. W. G. Davis (Peel), moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting the Township of Toronto.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) in regard to an article in the London Free Press dated December 1, 1961, in which the Deputy Minister of Highways announces that that portion of Highway 401 between Tempo and Tilbury will be a two-lane highway. It is also stated that plans are in the offing to expand the Toronto by-pass to 12 lanes.

Inasmuch as the government has promised on various occasions to complete this four-lane superhighway, why has it been announced that only one half of certain portions are to be paved at this time?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence), I may say that I have heard a good deal about this in the past two days. There has been a great deal of discussion, particularly in southwestern Ontario. This is quite natural realizing their keen interest in this highway which is being constructed across the province—the great freeway which when completed will be the longest continuous freeway in the world. I think that is worth just considering.

I note that Mr. Fulton, the Deputy Minister, according to the press made this statement in London. What Mr. Fulton said was that the highway would be open to traffic in the fall of 1963. It is not physically possible to complete the four lanes by the fall of 1963.

We could hold back the highway—the opening of the two lanes, and open the four lanes in 1964, if the hon. member for Kent East thinks it is desirable to have all four lanes opened at once. We can either open two lanes in 1963 or four lanes in 1964.

We intend to proceed with the paving of the other two lanes just as soon as it is possible.

I would like hon. members to realize that there are parts of this four-lane highway which it is estimated will be carrying less than 6,000 vehicles a day. The area of some 55 miles in length about which the hon. member is asking the question, is one strip on which it is estimated there will only be 6,000 vehicles a day. There is another strip of 55 miles in eastern Ontario on which the estimate is about 6,000 vehicles a day. This is not very much traffic on a four-lane highway.

I assure the hon. member that it is our intention that the programme proceed, but

I do not want to interfere with some other very important highway projects up in the Essex-Kent area in order to push this particular four-lane highway, which may not be required as much as some other highways to let some of the farmers out of the back concessions.

There is another point. It is true it has always been the plan to widen this by-pass of Toronto. Perhaps some of the hon. members read in the newspaper that yesterday there was a tie-up on the 401 by-pass of Toronto over 12 miles in length. It is the intention over a five-year period to develop a 12-lane by-pass at Toronto. I presume by the time that develops, with the growth in this area it will be necessary to make plans for another 12-lane by-pass. It is a matter of where the traffic is heaviest. We have to keep commerce moving across this province; it means a lot to the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

I like this editorial in the London Free Press on behalf of the taxpayers of Ontario. This was an editorial in the London Free Press on December 4, 1961.

Half a highway is better than none. Before any more district chambers of commerce sound off in indignation over the decision to pave only one half of Highway 401 between Tilbury and Tempo, some thought should be given to The Department of Highways' reasons.

This four-lane route is an enormously expensive piece of construction. It will be the longest superhighway in the world and unlike its counterparts across the border it is toll free. All sections cannot be completed at once. It is now possible to drive from London to a point near Belleville on 401 without encountering a stop light. Other stretches are being paved as quickly as the provincial budget permits.

While the new two-lane section from Tempo to Tilbury may not be all that western Ontario could wish, it will provide a third route to Windsor paralleling No. 2 and No. 3 and will take considerable pressure off those roads in the summer months.

We can have only what we are willing to pay for. Highway 401 will be completed as fast as the budget permits and as soon as it can be justified in view of all other factors. We have fine roads in Ontario, let us be grateful for them.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would allow a supplementary question. He did mention that there was about 55 miles in the eastern part of the province which would be only paved on two lanes. I wonder if he would tell the House just where that 55 miles is situated in eastern Ontario. Also will he tell the House whether it is the density of motor vehicles on the highway or it is a matter of dollars and cents that the government is not going ahead and finishing the four lanes at this time?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Speaker, I assure you I am not an authority on all the highways in the province of Ontario after four weeks as the Minister. If hon. members will give me another two weeks I hope to know all about all the highways in Ontario. I am not an overly intelligent fellow and it takes time for things to sink in.

But I would say that there is about 55 miles in eastern Ontario. I know one strip will be between Marysville and Cataraqui. In 1963 two lanes will be open. The other two are going to be paved as soon as possible. There is another strip, I think, from Cornwall to the Quebec boundary. It is not a matter of money, although that is important, but actually if the traffic density does not warrant a four-lane highway for a year or two, in this area, I think it is much better even to consider a highway from Cornwall to Ottawa.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the hon. Minister of Highways in regard to this change in the building of 401. The hon. Minister has read an article from the London Free Press. I wonder if he has read the editorial in the Windsor Daily Star, December 2, 1961.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order! I would point out to the hon. members that they may only rise for the purpose of asking questions or asking for information, not giving information.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, are you not going to allow the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence) to read the editorial? The hon. Minister gave a fairy story and we want to tell you the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member asked the hon. Minister if he had read the editorial in the Windsor Daily Star, and I heard the hon. Minister answer "Yes."

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit me to ask a supplementary question? Does he agree with the content of the editorial in the Windsor Daily Star?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Sure, I agree with all the editorials.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to address to the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) of which notice has been given.

This year New Year's Eve falls on a Sunday. Is it the intention of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario to issue banquet permits for New Year's Eve? If not, has the board considered issuing permits for the time commencing at 12:01 a.m. Monday, January 1, 1962? And if not, have any other arrangements been decided upon?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice, but actually he gave the wrong Minister the notice. Banquet permits come under the jurisdiction of the Liquor Licence Board, which reports through the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko).

However, realizing the extreme urgency of this matter, I immediately took it up with the hon. Minister and I am sure he is ready to give the answer.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the hon. member for York Centre had not been so generously thanked, I would thank him for the question. The answers are as follows: Sunday night banquet permits: no. The answer to the second part: consideration, yes; permits, no. The answer to the third part, no.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to state the reasons for the placing of these beautiful flowers on the desk of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). Today, December 7, is the birthday of the hon. member. How old he is, I do not know.

We in our group, of course, are impressed with his vigour, and are very, very proud to have him as our provincial leader. On behalf of our group, we extend to him our best wishes on this his birthday. I am sure I will be joined by every hon. member of the Legislature in the sincere hope and wish of everyone, I think, that he will be an hon. member of the Ontario Legislature for some years to come.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Will the hon. Minister of Labour advise this House what steps his department is taking to facilitate settlement of the strike at the Royal York Hotel?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to representatives of both management and labour in this strike. I intend to speak to both sides again, but at this time I am sorry to say I am not prepared to divulge any details.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), a copy of which has likewise been forwarded.

Newspapers on Tuesday, December 5, indicated that the government intends to appoint a Royal commission to investigate organized crime. I would like to know if that story is true and if so, when will the appointment of the Royal commission be announced?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the statement which I made on November 30, relative to the charges made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) which will be dealt with in due course.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw attention of the hon. members to the statement on their desks concerning the draft bill of November 6, 1961, to be passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom to permit The British North America Act to be repealed, amended or re-enacted by the Parliament of Canada. If hon. members go through it, the first four pages are the explanation and below that is the bill itself.

This is a bill which will be enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, but in order to bring it before this Assembly and to give everyone a full opportunity to examine it, it is my intention, with your permission, to ask the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) to speak very briefly to it before the orders of the day today. We will then leave a copy of it with each of the hon. members and then probably by resolution bring it onto the order paper when we re-assemble after the Christmas recess. It can then be debated after everyone has had an opportunity to examine it and familiarize themselves with it. Hon. members can ask any questions they might have, but I would ask, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Attorney-General speak to this for a moment.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill, which I think is well known to all hon. members, is to bring to Canada full rights to deal with its own constitution for the future and at the same time to provide for the amending procedures of the constitution herein.

I would point out that sections 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 of the bill, in my view, do not introduce any new principles or make any changes in the present constitutional procedures. Section 5, however, is new.

Section 5 provides that no law made under the authority of this Act affecting any provision of the constitution of Canada not coming within sections 2, 3 or 4 of the Act, shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the Legislatures of at least two-thirds of the provinces representing at least 50 per cent of the total population.

In very simple language, perhaps oversimplification, the entrenched sections remain as they were. At least in my view I should think they do. Some constitutional lawyers might have a different view, but in my view, and I think in the view of the majority of the constitutional advisors of the provinces and the federal authority, they remain the same. But whatever is not in the entrenched sections of The BNA Act today would then be amendable in that manner, by two-thirds of the provinces, representing at least 50 per cent of the population of Canada.

Then section 7 provides for application by the Parliament of the United Kingdom in relation to passing of any laws with respect to Canada. That is in line. The phraseology of this proposed U.K. bill is in line with a number of constitutional bills respecting other Commonwealth countries which have already taken such steps.

The power of delegation—which is new and is, I think, something that is going to be of real value—is dealt with on page 3, 94(a), of this memorandum. First, the power to delegate by the federal authority of any of its powers to at least four provinces. Hon. members can see the provinces divided in Canada—the four western provinces and the four eastern ones and then the hard-core central two. It is conceivable that the four in the west might have some common problem—or that two of those four might have; or four in the east, or two of those four. The whole four provinces would agree so that the delegation could take effect and be effective for one, two, three or all four of them.

We in the central position would have to go a little further afield to our three supporting provinces. But, with that qualification, the bill would give the federal authority power to delegate practically anything to the provinces for as long as the federal authority would wish. The granting authority would have power to revoke this delegation at any time.

The provinces would also have this power. As long as four provinces consent to it, any province would be able to delegate any of its particular powers to the federal authority and revoke that delegation of power in the same manner. I think that future power of delegation may be an extremely valuable one and may tend to make the constitution, in some regards, considerably more flexible. Representatives from the different provinces—I was the representative for Ontario—have returned to their provinces and made their reports, and in due course, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, resolution will be introduced into the House to deal with the matter and have it debated.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Perhaps we could be told in a word, Mr. Speaker, whether it is necessary for all the provinces to consent to this draft before it is forwarded to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and whether or not Ontario has consented to this draft.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No. I thought I made my language clear, especially—

Mr. Sopha: Well, I followed the hon. Attorney-General very closely.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The federal authority is now presenting a bill which the representatives agreed upon in principle, and which they agreed to take to their respective governments and to recommend their individual approval. That may not apply entirely to two provinces, but that is the general position at the present time. It will eventually require the approval of the great majority—if not all the provinces—to move from that position. I would not say it necessarily requires all, but I would say that—to all intents and purposes—we hope that all will agree. The bill must have an overwhelming majority before it could proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House moves into committee of supply, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRAVEL AND PUBLICITY

On vote 2102:

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, at the close of the last session we were discussing the matter of 2101, and I was about to ask the hon. Minister whether or not this department maintains a staff of highly trained publicity people. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell me if this is so, and how many are on the staff.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): We have a permanent staff of seven under the direction of Mr. Hogarth.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, since this is a department of publicity—and no doubt these people in this department do specialize in matters of publicity—has any consideration been given to incorporating the publicity releases for all branches of the government, under this one department? It seems to me there might now be considerable duplication. I wonder if the department has considered this aspect of publicity. I totalled the salaries and I noted that close to three quarters of a million dollars of the estimates of this department are spent on staff salaries. If this situation is duplicated through all the various branches of government it seems to me that a considerable amount of money is being spent in this way. Has there been any thought of incorporating it under one department?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I would reply to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that the director of publicity and his staff do assist—in quite a large measure—the other departments of government. As you can understand, our publicity director has a great deal of information in his office because he is continually writing material on many subjects, but there has been no thought given to centralizing that particular department, or particular branch, as a publicity branch for the government entirely.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Are there publicity men in the various other departments as well?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I would not be able to answer that, I presume there are in most of them. I see from the register that they have a personnel and publicity—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult to understand why the hon. Minister is unable to answer that when he has only just told me that this particular department's staff worked very closely with various other government departments in preparing their releases.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is right.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Surely, if they work closely, they know whether or not there are publicity men in these other departments. I think the hon. Minister is being unduly evasive.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I do not think I am being unduly evasive and I am sorry that the hon. member should think so. Our director of publicity is approached by the Minister or his deputy or his directors.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Or his PR man—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Not necessarily. I presume that the other departments approach our director of publicity for the simple reason that they do not have a publicity man specializing in that area.

I explained originally that our director has a great deal of material available and can be helpful in preparing an advertisement that covers a number of subjects. But the Deputy Minister, or the directors of other departments would approach our director asking him, perhaps, to prepare a rough message that they might give in reply; or perhaps they will send over their material and ask our director to include other items that he has available.

As the hon. member will notice, the advertisements—or the material for a message—will often cover a number of subjects. I am not trying to be evasive. That is a fact.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, the estimate for the division of publicity for the forthcoming year is $868,000. Now according to the public accounts for the year ending March, 1960, we find that the division of publicity spent $929,169. I do not know what the estimate was for that year, but I am interested in some of the expenditures, particularly in the matter of advertising. One is the McKim Advertising $133,556; Stanfield, Johnson & Hill $205,147, and McConnell Eastman & Company $75,480. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how these contracts are awarded. Are they given so much work to do, and then send in their bill—or is a tender invited? In what way do they arrive at the estimate of the expenditure?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Perhaps I had better start with the final question. In the first place, as I explained last year, the tenders are invited. In other words, the Queen's Printer invites tenders on any particular job. I might also explain that we used to present the total of printing and advertising as one amount in the estimates. We now present them separately so that under "printing" for the coming year, the estimate is $380,000; under "advertising" it is $445,000. The point I wanted to make was that it used to be in the estimates as one item and now it is divided; it is split.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am sorry. Was that a question?

In so far as the hon. member has named the McKim Advertising, McConnell Eastman & Co. and Stanfield Johnson & Hill, maybe I could just read this and get it on the record so that it is completely understandable.

We do not deal directly with the publishing companies who produce the magazines and the newspapers nor directly with the radio stations. We place our programmes as approved by us to four advertising agencies, we pay the charges for space and production to the agencies, the agencies in turn acting as our agents pay the publishing companies, the radio stations, etc., after deducting their 15 per cent commission from the total expenditure. We do not pay the commission, I think the hon. member realizes that; actually the magazine or paper pays it.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, the direct question I wanted to ask the hon. Minister was this: There was a total of $929,000 spent that year—the year 1960—of course that would include the election year of 1959, and I was wondering if the expenditure of that year was above the estimate or below the estimate?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The hon. member is referring to two years ago?

Mr. Thomas: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is the latest information we have got for the fiscal year ending 1960. That is all we have. I am reminded that was the year of the Queen's visit and we did—

Mr. Bryden: It was also the year of the election.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, it was.

An hon. member: There were an awful lot of advertisements and papers.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We had no opportunity to prepare for the visit until we were sure Her Majesty was coming.

Mr. Thomas: You are not quite sure whether that was above or below the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, it would be above; yes, that is right.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): You knew the Queen was coming, you knew the election was coming!

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Her Majesty of all people should have let me know.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): This year we are going to have the northern span of the Cornwall-Massena International Bridge completed. The official opening will be in 1962. I notice in the press that there is a promotion programme going on to develop traffic over the new bridge. In making the announcement, a bridge spokesman identified W. C. Harkman advertising agency of Syracuse, New York, and Rolph Clark Stone Benalack Ltd., of Montreal, as the agencies retained to do the work. The Syracuse company will supervise the public relations account and the graphic arts will be provided by the Montreal firm.

This newest link of the St. Lawrence valley bridge system will be an important route for both tourists and commercial users offering access to the heart of the St. Lawrence Seaway development area and with the power project locks, beaches, boat marina and camping facilities. In addition, the Long Sault parkway, Upper Canada Village, Ottawa and Montreal are within short driving distances.

What I want to ask the hon. Minister at this time is whether they are taking any part whatever in this promotion programme? While I am on my feet, I would also like to ask him, through you, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything in his estimates or in the estimates of Public Works to take care of a new reception centre when this bridge is open or completed?

I might point out to the hon. Minister at this time that the present reception centre is near the present entry into that part of Canada from the States, and I do not think it lends itself as a reception centre at all; but more than that, it is going to be so far out of the way of the travelling public when the new bridge is opened and Highway 401 is completed that the relocation of the centre should be considered very seriously. I would like to have an answer from the hon. Minister as to just what his department is planning with regard to this programme and also the reception centre in Cornwall.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: In answer to that we are not taking a particular part in the programme that you have outlined but we are co-operating with those people in support of it. In regard to the reception centre, as I understand it, The Department of Public Works are in the process of dealing with the owners there. The property or the location has been selected and they are in the process of acquiring it.

Mr. Manley: For the new reception centre?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We are proceeding with that very quickly. As you have stated there is going to be tremendous traffic across there, particularly because of the St. Lawrence Seaway parks.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister a question on this matter of publicity. I have here a copy of the latest report of The Department of Travel and Publicity. As I look on pages 11 and 12, I note considerable publications which are published under the authority of this department, together with the distribution of each.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us the cost of each of these various publications? I am particularly concerned with a couple of them. One of them is this publication known as Ontario Government Services. I see that it continues to inform the reader of the services performed by the various departments of government; to which Mr. Chairman, I would say it continues to inform the reader of the various individuals in government, because I have paid particular attention to this publication since I came into this Legislature and it is my opinion that it is used to promote the personalities in the Tory party.

Hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am amazed that at the back it says the distribution is 105,000 copies per issue. Now, for the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I do not know where they would send 105,000 copies of this publication and do any good! It contains very little information with respect to the services being offered by government. I think that if 105,000 copies per issue are being distributed, they are being used for the Progressive-Conservative Party machine more than for the furtherance of the services of this government.

Would the hon. Minister tell me, generally, where these copies are distributed and would he give me a run-down of the costs of the various publications as set out in this book?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, I have to take some objection to part of the hon. member's statement that this is a Tory or a political paper. The average open-minded man would realize that it does contain information on services that are rendered by the government. The government, which happens to be seated right here, is responsible and its members have to stand on their own feet for the things that are done in this province. I would like the hon. member to show me a government service paper which has pointedly publicized the Tory Party.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have one right here that does.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The Tory party? The Tory government, yes. I do not think I have had my picture in the Ontario Government Services paper since I sat in the House with the hon. member a year ago and I am the Minister and I would think—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is a good idea.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, I agree with the hon. member.

I agree with him, and that is one reason I do not have it in there.

But that is a fact, I question if I have been in the paper, although I have unveiled plaques and opened affairs and so on. I am not anxious to get into the Ontario Government Services paper lest hon. members might think that, as the Minister of the department responsible for the publication, I just want to publicize Bryan Cathcart. My job, I feel, is to publicize Ontario through The Department of Travel and Publicity as much as I can, but I am not there to promote Bryan Cathcart.

Mr. Reaume: Or the party.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The hon. member asked me about the different publications that were produced through this department. Does he want me to list all of them, because I believe there are some 20 or 25? I would be very glad to give him the list, I would be very glad to give him the quantity that was purchased and the cost as I have it here before me.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to have the hon. Minister send it to me. When he says it does not promote the cause of the Tory party, I would remind him that in one instance there was a notation of the date of a future Conservative party convention. I do not know if he would call that promoting the cause of the party or not.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Was that not a matter of great importance to the people of this province?

An hon. member: A very small minority.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Would the hon. member like me to send him a copy of this?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. Reaume: What is the hon. Minister smiling about? This is no joke.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): I presume since we are talking on publicity we are on 2102. Are we on 2102?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes.

Mr. Troy: I noticed as I listened to the hon. Minister in his review of his department that he said his department promotes Ontario at home and abroad. Does he promote it in the other provinces of Canada too?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Very much so.

Mr. Troy: In what language then does he send his publications to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: A few years back we started to publish some of our publications in French for their benefit.

Mr. Troy: That is fine. I just wanted to know if his department was also sending out publications in French. Thanks very much.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, in speaking to the estimate on publicity, does the department attempt to sell Ontario to the students in the various schools, to the educational system, at all?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I would say yes. We get a great many requests from teachers or principals of schools for some of our publications. Many of them, of course, are produced in a way to encourage other people to come and visit our province. Many of them have a great deal of information in them.

The teachers and principals learn about it and write to us, and while we cannot send out—if there is a population in a school of 150 we cannot send out 150 of them—we do make a point to send them maybe half a dozen or a few of the publications that they are particularly interested in, so the teacher can make use of them in teaching his class.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, that just goes to prove that there is no attempt on the part of the government actually to sell Ontario through the school system. They are actually waiting for the schools to request information concerning the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We do have the one publication in particular, called "Ontario History," that is sent out to the schools.

Mr. Newman: I would like then strongly to recommend to the hon. Minister that he attempt to sell Ontario through the school system.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer), myself and the hon. member for another Toronto riding, did our very best this morning. Did we not, sir? By that I am referring to the two schools that were here in the chamber together with their principals, and all three of us were with them.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I understand the hon. Minister is sending over the cost of Ontario Government Services. I see that there are 105,000 copies issued per month. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us where the 105,000 copies go, it seems to be an awful lot.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: In addition to the distribution to all news media, to many of the schools, trade organizations, business places, chambers of commerce; we receive many requests from smaller organizations and communities which write in and say: "Now, look, we have a club or a membership in a club or association of 25 people, this is the list of names." They are interested in having this and we include them on the list and send them out. That, generally, is the distribution.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, just following this one step further. Would the hon. Minister advise us where in his estimates is the amount which covers postage on this very heavy distribution? If there are 105,000 copies of Ontario Government Services sent out each month, that would be over a million copies a year, which I think is money down the drain. But the hon. Minister is entitled to his opinion and he is running this department temporarily.

I note that there are 160,000 camp sites and road sites and parks publications issued, and so it goes. What is the total cost for postage on the distribution of these various books?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am afraid the hon. member would have to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) for that. It is paid through his department.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Do I understand that the cost of postage does not come out of The Department of Travel and Publicity?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Other than where it is urgent that a letter may have to go out immediately and the post office were closed in which case we may use some postage, but generally speaking—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then could the hon. Minister give me an idea of the total number of pieces that are mailed annually of the various publications that go out of his department?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Our publications, and I think in my talk—if I did not, it is in the report—I indicated we replied to some 260,000 or 265,000 personal inquiries that came into the information branch in the department. We also have 16 reception centres located around the province that receive inquiries and they reply directly without getting in touch with our office. That would be around 265,000 publications mailed out directly.

Now I am talking about the publications that we process, that would not be the Ontario Government Services paper. We mail them out, we send them out to chambers of commerce who use them for people with whom they have come in contact, we send them out in bulk. I believe also that we send publications out to other—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, if I might interrupt the hon. Minister, he is not answering my question. I appreciate he is sending out all this, but what I want is an estimate of the number of mailing pieces that leave his department each year. I am not particularly interested in whether he sends them to the reception centres or to the chambers of commerce or who he sends them to.

Mr. C. H. Lyons (Sault Ste. Marie): What does the hon. member think?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: If the hon. member would listen to me! I would remind the hon. member that I am not over here to guess, I am here to get the information and this is the only time during the debate that we have the opportunity to find out whether or not this department is administering—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: May I answer the hon. member?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I wish the hon. Minister would.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, do not be so funny! The hon. member is pretty clever, really. It was a great asset when this House got him. If he wants to have a nice quiet conversation I will try to give him the answers as we have them, but if he has got to come in with his funny stuff, let us have some fun then.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thank the hon. Minister for the very gentlemanly way he is discharging his office as an hon. Minister of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Between five and six million pieces of literature are sent out. Now, a very large portion of that would go out in bulk by express to those 16 reception centres, and to many other places that are serving as information bureaus. We have approved of them doing this. We send that out in bulk.

What I was saying was that from our own head office 265,000 personal inquiries are answered, plus the fact that the Ontario Government Services paper is mailed out to 100,000-odd people. But I have not here the total number of pieces that have been mailed out in one year or two years. I think that it would be quite a job to arrive at that because of the diversified way in which it goes out from the department.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I will leave the item at this point, but I would remind the hon. Minister that he was in no position to tell me the cost of the postage for these various mailing pieces and the only way I could get an estimate of what was being expended was to find out from him the number of pieces that leave through the mail each year.

Now, I still have not got it in detail. Perhaps he would have time to get that; perhaps he would undertake to send it to me. I wonder if the hon. Minister would undertake to do that?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes? Go ahead! The hon. member has the floor if Mr. Chairman says so.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, did the hon. Minister say he would send that information?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, I did not say I would send it because I just got through telling the hon. member I did not know whether it was possible to get it for him. I will look into it and if it is available, he will have it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thank the hon. Minister; and my final comment to him is I think it is about time he found out what is going on in his department.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is the repayment for trying to be pleasant to the hon. member.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister: Does he have any case in which people pay? Is there any circumstance in which they pay for any of the pamphlets or material sent out to them from his department? In other words, if I am buying a paper, or Maclean's magazine, or such, I have to pay for it. Has the hon. Minister ever thought this might be a test of readership and of interest if the receiver has to pay for some of this material from his department?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I do not think I have ever given any thought to it, but I am very happy to have that suggestion. I might consider it.

Mr. Thompson: The reason I mention this to the hon. Minister is that there was a department in Ottawa, a federal department, which was sending out material across the country, somewhat similar to the hon. Minister's department. Then they decided to see if people really wanted this. They charged them about 25 cents and they found that the people did not want it because they were not prepared to pay 25 cents. I think sometimes this is the only way we can test material.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think we derive a great deal of benefit from the government service paper. One fact alone is that it does go to the newspapers. The news media, and particularly weekly newspapers I find, use articles out of the Ontario Government Services paper. Because they just produce the paper once a week, they find it newsworthy.

Mr. Thompson: Thanks very much. I had another question. I asked it last year and I noted that another hon. member has also asked this. It is in connection with the advertising. I cannot help feeling—and I am not a suspicious person by nature—but for some reason it always strikes me as open to suspicion, if I was suspicious, that McKim Advertising get such a large hunk of your advertising. He mentioned the time before that he was going to be more liberal. I can assure him that on our side of the House we commend him heartily for having sentiments like that.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: How did I use that?

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister said he was going to be more liberal in his advertising. Could I ask him how far he has gone in being liberal? Does McKim only still get the advertising, or is MacLaren going to get some advertising?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: May I ask a question in return before I reply? The hon. member mentioned that he was naturally of a suspicious character—

Mr. Thompson: Unsuspicious!

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Is that not what he said?

Mr. Thompson: No.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Is that not what he said? He said if he was suspicious, and I wondered what caused him to become that way because I can imagine, looking at the hon. member back in the other days, he was a fine fellow and he would not think of being suspicious of anybody. Would it be his previous experience, before coming into the Ontario Legislature that made him like that?

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister's actions lead him to that.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We will get that one straightened around.

Mr. Thompson: First of all, I did not say I was suspicious by nature but I do feel this—despite that there is a pleasant sort of approach by the hon. Minister—that one would have to be extremely naive not to realize that some of this advertising is going to people who helped during an election.

I think the government could have some type of public tender with respect to advertising, that it would then appear to us on this side that they are really trying to do it on the basis of the best job that they can do in producing advertising, rather than on the best job they might do in a political campaign.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Is the hon. member suggesting that these advertising agencies are not responsible people? That they do not give value for money?

Mr. Thompson: I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that they are responsible in too many fields.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Not one of them has ever been in my riding or done one iota for the responsible Minister. I do not know them personally.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the hon. Minister whether McKim Advertising has any connection with the Conservative party, federally or provincially?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The advertising that they do for us as an agency does not have anything to do with it. They are working for The Department of Travel and Publicity through the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the hon. Minister that question all the same, sir? Does McKim, to his knowledge have any contracts with the Conservative party either federally or provincially?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: To my knowledge, no.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, in case anybody reads these debates, let us get the figures on the record and show the development of a nexus with the McKim advertising agency. I might say by way of addendum to my hon. friend that at least down in Ottawa our counterparts and colleagues have always alleged—and I think with a great deal of force and a great deal of evidence—that there is very definite connection between the McKim advertising agency and the Conservative party.

Now, through the use of the figures, let us show the development of this government's affection for the McKim advertising agency. In the public accounts for the year ending 1959, the amount of $113,993.91 was spent with that agency. For the year ending March 31, 1960, the amount of $133,556.79, an increase of $20,000. For the year ending March 31, 1961 the sum of $143,852.86. So it is an increase of $20,000 the first year and $10,000 in each of the subsequent years.

One need only look at the figures to see that in each case the increase with McKim advertising agency was accompanied with a reduction of the allotment to other advertising agencies. I do not know what the political complexions of those others are, but it seems that if this government is in power long enough, which I doubt will be the case, that eventually McKim advertising agency with its connection and favouritism of the Tory party will virtually get all the business in the hon. Minister's department.

Nothing speaks with more truth and realism, sir, penetrating good sense, than do the figures, the cold figures that I have just mentioned. It is just as well that we have them on the record in case the people of this province look at these debates.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, now that the matter has come up, it might be just as well to complete the record. I do not happen to have the relevant record available where I can put my finger on it, but when the Liberal government was in power in Ottawa up until a few years ago it was exactly the same situation, but the other way. The situation, Mr. Chairman, which we may as well face up to is that both of these old parties treat the public treasury as if it were their own money—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, it is obvious how the Liberals like the truth.

Mr. Bryden: I would just like to complete what I had started to say, Mr. Chairman; that it is unfortunate, although it is obviously true, that accounts of this kind are used for political purposes to reward friends of the government and no doubt friends who made significant contributions to the party coffers at election time. It is an old game that appears not only in this department, but in many departments; and whenever these gentlemen on the official Opposition benches had a chance, they were worse than the other fellows, but both of them are bad enough.

Vote 2102 agreed to.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, we cannot hear you at all. Let us start at the right number.

Vote 2103 agreed to.

On vote 2104:

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have a question with respect to vote 2104, and I am referring again to the report of the hon. Minister, the latest report, on page 29. I note under section seven that it states at several centres, several free cups of tea were served to our guests and the appreciation of this gesture of friendliness was expressed on many occasions. It goes on to state that local and long-distance telephones are available where it is necessary to call ahead to obtain accommodation for a tourist, and that this is done at no expense to the tourist. This service has proved a public relations feature which has drawn a great deal of good will for Ontario at small cost.

Would the hon. Minister tell me on what basis they make these telephone calls to tourist resorts? Which ones do they select and how do they go about making these reservations?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Generally speaking—a visitor crossing the border, may arrive there in the evening or at a time when they are a bit concerned whether they will have a reservation or not. Maybe they are going to travel another 50 miles or so.

They may know the place they want to stay because of the publications that they have read, and in that way they ask our people: "Do you think I will get in there when I get there, will they have a space or not?" So one of the staff call ahead to make sure that they do have space for them, and of course they go on with confidence.

We do not have to put in too many calls. I do not think the long-distance calls through all of the centres amount to a great deal. People are very considerate in asking for those favours. We feel for the few we have to provide, they create a lot of good will.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I was not questioning whether or not we should make the telephone calls. I was wondering on what basis these calls are made.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: At their request.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I realize that too, but does the department in any way influence where those calls are made?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, definitely not. We are very careful about that. As a matter of fact, we have an information bureau at Point Edward, Sarnia, and the staff there are told that they must not give any preference to the operations locally. As a matter of fact in the local area, they rather give preference to those that are 25, 50 miles away.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: What I am trying to find out is how would a tourist know where he wanted to stay, if he is a newcomer? I have travelled some, I know that when you get to a point in your travel you start to look for a motel. Now how does that tourist select the motel? Does he refer to a series of advertising pamphlets he might—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: A where-to-stay booklet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think the backers of the government have a right to their suggestions, I wish they would get up and make them in a proper way.

What I am trying to determine is this: it might be possible, Mr. Chairman, that if the selections are made from publications which are available at the centre, that these other citizens and taxpayers in the province might not be accorded the same privileges as those who send in their advertising to these reception centres. Now that is what I am trying to find out from the hon. Minister. I am sure they do not know where they are going in most cases, because I have done a little travelling too and I know that usually you do not know where you are going to stay. You have to get advice; that is why you stop and ask for it.

Let us not make a farce of it, surely we can get an answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The information centres that we have around the province are there to be of assistance to our own people just as well as to those who are visiting with us from across the borders. The where-to-stay publication is there in every reception centre and is available to him. It is processed in sections so that if you want to go to the London area, the Parry Sound district, wherever it might be, you can have the separate pages out of this booklet and look over them yourself, make up your own mind as to the accommodation that each one of them has listed and decide whether you want to stay at a place with rugs from wall to wall and so on.

On that basis a visitor asks our information girls about the accommodation as a result of the description they can read in the booklet. But they can even take them away. It will be on a separate page, which is a loose-leaf, and they can take it away with them. Does that answer the question?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Pretty well, yes. Would the hon. Minister advise me—this where-to-stay publication he referred to, this I presume lists all of the places licensed in Ontario? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: All over the province.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Is it done without any discrimination?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, absolutely!

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, does the department operate information services in the United States in cities neighbouring the border? I am referring to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Detroit? Take the tremendous convention business that is found in these larger centres.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, we do not. In Chicago and New York, where the federal bureau has offices we place staffs for a period in the summer in both those offices for the convenience of the public there.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, then I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he consider taking one or two members from the staffs in the Windsor area and possibly having them operate out of the conventions that frequent the city of Detroit. It would certainly be to the advantage of the tourist industry back home if these people found out that immediately across the river from them was this grand province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think the state of Michigan knows the grand province of Ontario is over here. We placed some six or eight exhibits in a number of U.S. cities. As a matter of fact, we plan to be in Detroit this coming spring or summer at some conventions. I know that arrangements are made.

As stated, we do place provincial exhibits and then as well the outfitters association and some of the other associations put on exhibits in cities where we are not attending with an Ontario government exhibit. In that case we have sent over maybe one of our inspectors from the field or a girl, if we have one up in that neighbourhood, to assist that particular association in their exhibit and to sell Ontario. Our publications are always available to them for all over the province, not just—

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, being available to the individual is no good. We have to take advantage of the individual being present there and supply him with the information rather than trying to find him.

Vote 2104 agreed to.

On vote 2105:

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a question in relation to this estimate. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) raised a point, I think, of considerable interest, as has another hon. member who spoke about the political allegiance of various advertising companies.

Some months ago it was said in the committee reviewing the public account in the province of Saskatchewan that a Regina advertising agency—the George Bothwell Co.—was getting most of the advertising of the C.C.F. Party in Saskatchewan, and that the head of the firm, Mr. Bothwell, is the director for the National Co-operative Commonwealth Federation in Saskatchewan. I would just like to read to the House what Mr. Russell Brown, the Saskatchewan Minister of Industry and Information, said: that the agency was competing with other advertising agencies; the fact that the head of the firm was a supporter of any political philosophy should not rule the firm out of business, he added.

(Laughter).

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a question? Is the advertising for this government placed by tender?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: By invitation tender.

Mr. MacDonald: By invitation! This is the most fatuous description of tenders. We have passed the stage of describing tenders "by invitation." Here is the answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Since the hon. member has asked me a question, will he be kind enough to tell me whether advertising is not dealt with in Saskatchewan in the same way?

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry; I did not get that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I want to clear the records. I thought the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) was referring to printing; printing is done by invitation tender through the Queen's Printer. Our advertising in the newspapers, of course, is simply placed with all the newspapers.

Vote 2105 agreed to.

On vote 2106:

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, with regard to 2106—the historical branch—I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he is aware of the correspondence La Fédération des Sociétés Saint-Jean Baptiste de l'Ontario has had with the previous Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Frost) concerning the historical site near Hawkesbury—the project going on between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec concerning the falls and Hydro development. I have had some correspondence with them—I do not know whether the other French members on the side of the government have received the same correspondence—but I will say that this society is certainly concerned with what the developments are going to do to this historical site at the present time. They want to save this site and they have reason to believe, very good reason to believe, that this historical site is authentic.

I do not want to go into the whole correspondence they have had with the previous Prime Minister but I will say that certain paragraphs of their letter dated October 26 to the Prime Minister state:

Authorities on history maintain that there is a remarkable historic site at this location. However, under an agreement which was passed between the governments of Ontario and of Quebec, a portion of this historic site is destined to be flooded, following the building of a dam a few miles down the stream. Our society appealed to the Quebec government—and in particular to the Quebec Hydro Commission—in order that excavations be made on the site before the construction of the dam.

Three months ago we received a favourable reply to our request and the services of Mr. Thomas E. Lee, an archaeologist of international reputation, have been retained. Mr. Lee was successful in finding a great number of precious remains to determine the exact location of an old fort which was the scene of a battle. Some historians maintain that this was the site of the battle fought by Vaudreuil, while other historians and archaeologists are of the opinion that this is the site of the Long Sault battle where, in 1660, Dollard des Drèneaux and 16 of his companions gave their lives to save the French colony. Both historians and archaeologists agree that without any doubt there is an extremely precious historic site at this location.

We have heard from reliable sources that your government proposes to develop in this vicinity a large park area which would include a portion of the Langvin farm. However before the work is started on that project there is danger that the most precious portion of the land will be flooded when a new Quebec Hydro-Electric Power generating station goes into operation. We have been informed that this might happen as soon as February next. We know from experience that in such circumstances the provincial government has always taken a great interest in the preservation of historic sites, for that reason we hope that it may be possible to include the above-described portion of land in a proposed park area.

We take the liberty of stressing that this matter is a particularly urgent one because of the agreement between the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec, mentioned above. Engineers estimate that a retaining wall of approximately 250 feet in length and 20 feet high would be necessary to save this remarkable historic site being flooded. We hope you will be able to give your kindest consideration to this matter and we thank you in anticipation. . . . Yours very truly.

La Fédération des Sociétés St Jean Baptiste de l'Ontario

Signed: J. Farrell, secretary, 539 Dunbrad Street, Ottawa, 2, Ontario.

And I have a photostat copy of the reply of Mr. Frost as recent as November 5-November 8, which states that:

Your letter of October 26 is at hand and I have very carefully noted the problems you outlined. I am indeed greatly interested in the preservation of historic sites in the province and shall be pleased to take this up with the proper authorities.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie M. Frost.

Now I would like to ask the hon. Minister what the department is doing to preserve this site and what are their plans?

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say a few words on this particular matter? My hon. friend across has mentioned Mr. Farrell, who is the secretary of La Société St Jean Baptiste de l'Ontario, who lives right in my riding. Apparently my hon. friend was not home last week to receive the latest bit of information that was sent out by Mr. Farrell because, as you say, this last letter was dated in December. It was a letter sent to Mr. Farrell, over the signature of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity and the footnote that Mr. Farrell had on that is that they were very, very happy with the progress being made.

I thought to give this information to my hon. friend from Windsor if he had not received the letter. He will have another letter at home, I am sure, because I had a letter. They are very, very happy with the progress made—both under the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and again under the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart).

Mr. Belanger: I appreciate very much the hon. member giving me that information, but I would like to hear from the hon. Minister—what are the plans? That letter may be at home—I am not too sure—but I will be home this week-end and find out. I would like to hear from the hon. Minister—what are the plans?

Mr. Lavergne: I would not like to answer for the hon. Minister, I can assure you; I am not capable. I just wanted to pass that information on.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the matter the hon. member has brought to our attention. It is a fact that this letter went back to Mr. Farrell. All I can say at the moment is that the Archaeological and Historical Sites Board—which is part of our department—is negotiating with the people that the hon. member has referred to. They do have the matter under study, I could not tell you at the moment what the plans are.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): That area is in my riding and is very close to the town of Hawkesbury.

Mr. Chairman, for many, many years—as a matter of fact as far back as 25 years ago—the same Mr. Lee had done some research on that very spot. However, the whole problem seems to be what is it? I think the Quebec government have also at the moment people looking into the matter at their own expense as well as Quebec Hydro. The historians are not set as to what happened there. Was it a trading post? Was it somewhere where a battle happened to take place under a certain general or between the heroes of Long Sault and the Iroquois? or was it something else?

I am sure that it is what La Fédération is trying to find out as well as everyone interested in the historical matter of the site, and as soon as that has been established I am sure we will be informed so we know where we stand. I have had many written and verbal discussions with them—the different presidents of the different groups of the federation and the local association—and I can assure the House that these have been taken under very active advisement. I would be rather afraid of recommending that any public money should be spent unless we were very sure of what did happen there.

Mr. Belanger: This dam might be in operation by February, 1962 and if it is put in operation there goes your historical site.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Decisions are delayed for some considerable time because I can assure the hon member that the advisory board composed of nine members, archeologists and historians, will not approve of an historical site until they are very sure in their own minds. We have been establishing these plaques for some five or six years and we may have had an odd criticism of some wording that was on a plaque, but certainly not of great moment because this board is very particular.

I wanted a plaque down in my riding where my people tell me there was an old fort. They looked into it and refused to put the plaque up so the Minister has not much to say on that one. I appreciate what you have had to say; I know the concern of both the Quebec government and our own and the hon. Mr. Frost's interest, but it is under study between the two bodies concerned. I cannot tell you what they have in mind—whether they are going to establish a plaque or not.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to relate an experience I have had in connection with one of the plaques in my own riding. It happens to be in the township of Blanchford in Perth County which I have the honour to represent, at the birthplace of a former Prime Minister of Canada, Hon. Arthur Meighen. It was well-received and I think all the people of Perth County are very happy about it. Co-operation was received from the department, from the women's institute groups and all concerned with the history of our country and of the riding of Perth.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. Minister has had, as I have, representations from organizations in the province particularly from the riding of Nipissing through which the original Trans-Canada Highway runs, in regard to historical plaques. The representation has been made that the plaques in such an area should be bilingual because many represent the feats of people of the French race, as you very well know—along the Champlain Trail, places known to Champlain, Nicolet, Brûlé, the great Fathers Brébeuf and Lalemant. I know the hon. Minister has had these representations. Has he given any consideration that on one side of the plaques the inscription might be in the French language?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: This is under consideration.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, while we are on this subject of historical plaques—I believe last session I brought to the attention of the hon. Minister the historical spot of Shrewsbury and he informed me that they were going to look into it. I wonder what has become of that?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Was there a request made for us to look into it?

Mr. Spence: Well, I brought it up in the Throne Speech and the hon. Minister nodded that he would look after that.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am sorry but we at no time have gone out into a district or an area or a municipality and asked them if they would like to have the plaque established. We prefer that the request should come from a local association and then when the plaque is established we ask the local association or municipality to sponsor the opening ceremony and the unveiling.

Mr. Spence: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thought I made the request to look into this.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I made a similar request to the board myself and they would not pay any attention to me. They said: Get your association to send in their request and we will look into it. The hon. member and I are on a par. Have them send it in and I will be glad to pursue the matter.

Mr. Lawrence: The new item, at least I think it is a new item, item 8. I was wondering which society is that? Obviously it is a grant. Is it the Ontario society?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, that is the Ontario Archaeological Society.

Vote 2106 agreed to.

On vote 2107:

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of questions to direct to the hon. Minister on 2107; particularly about the censor board. How many members are there on this censor board and how long have they served?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: There are five members on the censor board.

Mr. Troy: And how long have they been sitting as members of that board?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think some of them have served since the censor board was first established.

Mr. Troy: Well, how many years would it be?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: About twenty-five.

Mr. Troy: Twenty-five! Well, I strongly suggest that the hon. Minister make some changes. I think that it should be a rotating board; that the members should not be on there any more than four or five years. I am sure that after looking at the films and the smut and pornography and all these other things for the last 25 years, these members' sentiments and senses must be so calcified and corroded that I am sure it would be—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: There are a couple of ladies on the board.

Mr. Troy: Well, that is all the more reason why you should relieve them from such a situation. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that last year 58 American films, 21 British films and 11 foreign films were classified as adult and as restricted. Now surely, after looking at those things year after year it would be an act of charity for them to be relieved from that particular situation. There is another—now, this is nothing to laugh about, after all. It is a very serious situation.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am not laughing.

Mr. Troy: I did not say the hon. Minister was laughing, but some of these other people—I will not classify them—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I know, but it is going on the record as though I am laughing about it. I am not laughing.

Mr. Troy: I notice that the board itself in its report said that there was a continuing blast of unsavoury and sex-in-the-raw movies. I find too, that the board has certain powers. Has it got any power to suspend a licence of a theatre if it allows youngsters to go in there to adult entertainment?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes.

Mr. Troy: They have? Well, in the last year—or even the last 25 years—how many theatres have had their licences suspended because of allowing the youngsters to go in unaccompanied by adults to see a picture that is classed as adult entertainment?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I could not answer that. Is the hon. member saying that young people go in to see a restricted film without company?

Mr. Troy: Not even an adult film. I do not know just what the hon. Minister means by an adult film, either.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: An adult film means that young persons can go in so long as they are in the company of an older person.

Mr. Troy: I know that. I meant restricted—18 years of age or more. In this edition of one of the Toronto newspapers, most of the films are either restricted or adult. The other week I was in town and I saw an advertisement for a film—I will not mention the name; people might go and see it—but the advertisement told us it was a very honest picture, together with a whole lurid description of the film. It was a restricted picture and on the very bottom line was “not recommended for children”. Now, if it was a restricted picture, and knowing very well—

Mr. Bryden: Would the hon. member have recommended it for children?

Mr. Troy: No, I do not think so. I have certain principles that I follow. There is another point also. In regard to the advertisement—

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Chairman, can we deal with that point for a moment? The hon. member—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: Again, does the censor board check these advertisements for these restricted and adult films?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, they do.

Mr. Troy: They do. Then I think the hon. Minister must take a look at his censor board because, coming from a hockey game the other night, I saw an advertisement for one of these films. There were two people in a clinch and one was half undressed. Does the hon. Minister suppose that is the kind of picture that youngsters should see? Does it not stir up an emotion that they should not have?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I am quite serious about this, and I think hon. members should be serious, because I recall the Detroit father whose youngster was found mutilated and raped in a field. He said he did not blame the man, he blamed the society that allowed such things to be developed. We are just touching on films now because they do not have anything to do with the "Tropic of Cancer" and that sort of thing.

An hon. member: What about the parents?

Mr. Troy: That is right, what about the parents? Sure, they are also involved in it, but then most of these pictures invite them to go. Some of the adults that go there are adult in age—that is all. Once their emotions are stirred up, it is hard to say what is going to happen. So I suggest to the hon. Minister that he recommend to his board of censors that, where it is a restricted film, it just should be the name of the film, the time of the entertainment, and none of these lurid pictures. Do they also censor—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Troy: I know; there is that problem too, and we have the problem of the newspapers, but do they also censor TV films?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. Troy: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, we would have to go over to Washington—

Mr. Troy: It says in the statutes that the board has the power to censor every film. Now, does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that the films presented on television are not films in the category as covered by this section?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: For the information of the hon. member, that would be a federal matter—things coming across the border. We are away off the track.

Mr. Troy: Well, I am just asking for information.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I think he is very much on the track.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Insofar as a TV film?

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, not so far as TV films are concerned, but the hon. Minister is making a laughing stock of a serious problem.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am not making a laughing stock out of it; I have not laughed at any time, and I paid particular attention to what he had to say.

Mr. Troy: Does the censor board censor advertisements over the radio or TV, or films?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, it does not.

Mr. Troy: Nothing to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. Troy: I just asked that question because—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, do I have the floor now? May I ask the hon member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), in light of the fact that the motion picture operators in this country today—and especially the province of Ontario—are having a tremendous job to get along and make ends meet, does he have any specific points, or moments of truth, or facts, or violations where children are going in to these adult films? Let him say so, so that we can do something about it; but do not let him persecute the motion picture industry indiscriminately.

Mr. Troy: It is not a case of trying to persecute the industry.

An hon. member: Well, what is the hon. member doing?

Mr. Troy: What am I doing? My original point was that the censor board, surely, after looking at these films and all kinds of objectionable material for 25, 20 or 15 years—certainly their senses must be calcified and corroded because of that, and I think we should have some fresh stuff on the board.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense. The hon. member is preaching the good book without even opening it.

Mr. Troy: I have seen this with my own eyes, I have seen line-ups for adult entertainment and not an adult there at all.

Mr. Lewis: Give us the names so we can get after them.

Vote 2107 agreed to.

On vote 2108:

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question, but let me reiterate what my colleague has said. I think some of the films that are being shown in this country are not fit for even adults, let alone children, and I think the hon. Minister should take a very serious view of the situation, if it be so, that children are being allowed into these adult film houses unescorted. I am not saying that they are or are not, but some of the films are not fit even for morons to watch, let alone sensible, intelligent adults. My friend across the way wants to know if we have any suggestions for this depressed picture industry. I would suggest that if they clean up some of the filth they have on the screens today, it might be possible to get a few more patrons into their theatres.

But the thing that makes me wonder, Mr. Chairman, is that I understand the theatre business is depressed and that the number of films being turned out are less than before. I wonder if the hon. Minister would advise the hon. members how many films have been censored in the past year, and how that figure compares with the past, say, three, four years?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Four hundred and ninety films; 210 U.S., 61 British and 219 of others.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: That would be a total of what?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Four hundred and ninety.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: How does that compare over the previous, say, five years; or some estimate over the past period of time?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: There is a difference of five. There were 485, according to the figures that I have, the previous year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I wonder then if maybe this department has many other duties besides the censoring of these films? Is that correct? I am wondering why this estimate of $118,000, if it is simply to censor some 500 films a year? Does the department have other duties?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh yes! We have inspectors out in the field who inspect theatres for fire hazards and so on; and act in a supervisory capacity for the projection operators in these theatres. Oh yes, the responsibilities are considerably more than that. In many of these pictures that are shown in censoring a film, it is not simply a case of approval of disapproval, but parts are cut out.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for York Humber (Mr. Lewis) I have a letter that was sent to the—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, may I correct that statement before the hon. member goes on, please? Four hundred and eighty-five the previous year—oh, I was right—485 the previous year; 567 the previous year to that and 490 this past year.

Mr. Troy: I have a letter to the London Free Press, March 24, 1960. I will not read the first name, but I can show the hon. member the letter and:

In London on Saturday with time to spare while my car was being serviced, I dropped into a movie theatre. The first picture was entitled Vice Raid and had to do with the call girl racket. I presume you understand what that is. Next was The Pusher, about dope addicts. There was news and other programmes that were good. I am not criticizing the show which was labelled outside as Adult Entertainment, but I was disturbed to observe that scores of children, many of them eight, 10 and 12 years of age, unaccompanied by adults, were in attendance.

I will not state any more of the letter, but I can show the hon. member the press clipping with the man's name and his home address.

Mr. Lewis: Did the hon. member report it?

Mr. Troy: I did not report it, that happened in London. I live a long way from London, I do not visit there very often.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know why the hon. member could not do something about it.

Mr. Troy: I was not there; as I say it was a press clipping.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the hon. Minister if all films entering the province of Ontario are censored; or reviewed by the censor board?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: All 35 millimetre films.

Mr. Newman: Thirty-five millimetre? Are films used for television production 35 millimetres?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Pardon?

Mr. Newman: For television viewing.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. Newman: They are not?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think both 16 and 35 are shown on TV.

Mr. Newman: On TV screens? Then any film, before it can enter the province of Ontario, must be viewed by the censor board?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Films that are shown in Ontario and to be shown in Ontario would be censored by our censor board.

Mr. Newman: That is right, then likewise the department would be censoring, or have the opportunity to censor, films that are going to be shown on television, because they must enter the province of Ontario first, must they not?

Mr. Chairman, just this past year we have allowed motion picture theatres to be open on Sundays and as a result of that we find that youth has the opportunity to visit these theatres on a Sunday afternoon. This is all the more reason why the censor board now should take another look at their attitude towards the motion picture films. There is the need for more censoring as the result of the fact that younger people are getting into the shows on Sunday afternoons.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I might just say in reply that I just happen to have a copy of a report of the board and I would like to quote a portion. I quote:

Again the board has reminded the industry, both on this continent and abroad, that the prime purpose of the motion picture industry is to entertain, to permit its patrons to forget their problems and to relax for a couple of hours.

These are human beings who are serving in this capacity and they too appreciate the problems we are concerned about.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I may disagree a little with the views of my colleagues in this. I respect their views and respect the views of the hon. Minister, but in the final analysis, as anyone who has looked even in cursory fashion at some of the criticisms levelled at public entertainment by George Bernard Shaw will agree, the final analysis is the public good taste. If a production is bad, the public will stay away from it in droves; as they did the other night with the pugilistic encounter at Maple Leaf Gardens —and I am being very fair when I describe it as that.

However, it is a pretty sad commentary on our society that whenever we think of censorship we think of the censors with their magnifying glasses out scanning these films and looking for such things as an obscene treatment of sex or perhaps an obsession with narcotics or some of the other base and lower forms of the vices. Yet having read the reviews of the film that is playing in this city now and will be playing in centres no doubt all across the country—I refer to the latest extravaganza out of Hollywood dealing with the life and death of Jesus Christ, which of course was the greatest event in human history—that the treatment of the subject matter in that film as far as I know was never touched by the censors. The treatment of this subject verges on the blasphemous and the irreligious. Not only does it fabricate events in the life of Jesus Christ that never took place; in order to get into the true Hollywood tradition, they had to—out of their own minds, out of a piece of wholecloth—they had to put in a couple of battles between the Roman army—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): They did not follow the book?

Mr. Sopha: No, they did not follow the book, they did not follow the script. Not only did they not do that, but I am also told—I have not gone to see the film and I doubt if I will give them my $2.50 in order to go and see it—that one of the most significant scenes of the trial before Pontius Pilate, that is where the mob is asked what they would do between the two malefactors before them, when the mob said "Give us Barrabas", they left that one out entirely.

I say that it is a sad commentary on our society and the board of censorship that when—and I do not think it is too extreme a criticism—Hollywood seeks to turn the sign of the Cross into a dollar sign, it passes the board of censors without any comment whatsoever. Who is to say that if the board of censors had looked at that film and said that this does not depict in any true and accurate sense the happening of the greatest event in human history, take it back to Hollywood and put it in the rubbish can; who is to say that the public would not have supported the censors in their decision?

But where censorship goes wrong—and I would reduce the vote of this department to a dollar, if I could persuade my colleagues to go along with me—where the censors go wrong is the narrowness of their approach. They look at the film and they see if Brigitte Bardot is depicted in heroic stature, smuggling dope into the country, and if none of that type of thing is offered, then the film is fit for human consumption.

On the other hand, as I point out, Cecil B. DeMille, or whoever it is from Hollywood, can treat the life of Jesus Christ in blasphemous and irreligious fashion, as I am told that film does. No less reviewers than the reviewer of Time magazine and the reviewer in the Jesuit periodical Commentary has said that; and yet the board of censors, perhaps influenced by the vast amount of money that was spent on its production and suspecting that if it is given fair treatment that type of thing must be allowed, make no criticism at all.

In the final analysis if, as I say—and here is my point—if the best judge is public good taste, no matter what your board of censors attempt to do, they or anyone like them, or anyone presupposing that he can influence human thinking along that way, will never either add much to human morality or detract much from it.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) speaking for the Liberal Party when he recommends that films and other media be censored for accuracy?

Mr. Sopha: I would think that I speak for the Liberal Party when I say that films ought to be censored for blasphemy.

An hon. member: What about historical content?

Mr. Sopha: Not accuracy, but blasphemy; the two words are spelled differently.

Vote 2108 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, may I extend my compliments to you, sir, together with my thanks for the many courtesies given me by you and your office during the past year.

It is a pleasure to join previous debaters in congratulating the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and hon. members of his new Cabinet; and particularly the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and the new hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. MacNaughton) both of whom are personal friends of mine, the new hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett) a desk mate of mine during our first session in this House; the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman), newly appointed chief commissioner for the L.C.B.O., the hon. members for St. George (Mr. Price), Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton), Peterborough (Mr. Brown) and Peel (Mr. Davis) on their recent distinctions and all other hon. members whose appointments and accomplishments have been saluted in recent weeks.

I, too, pay tribute to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) whose excellence as Prime Minister will be recorded in song and story for generations to come.

Before presenting personal comments and suggestions for the consideration of the Legislature, I should like to examine a few of the remarks made by previous Opposition speakers. Mr. Chairman, it was a week ago yesterday that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) paid a visit to western Ontario. The next day he came back into the Legislature and presumed to be an expert on things agricultural, he presumed to speak for the people in our part of the country. Among other things, he drew attention to 1951 D.B.S. figures and he cited these as evidence that the province was in pretty poor shape. On page 138, the hon. member for York South said:

It will be very interesting to see what change has taken place in this decade.

And, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to tell the House that I have certain figures for the year 1960, which I should like to read to you now.

The hon. member for York South said that 18 per cent of the households in Ontario had no piped water at all in 1951. He will be glad to know that in 1960, this figure was 5.8 per cent.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Where did you get these figures?

Mr. White: These figures are taken from the D.B.S. publication, catalogue 64-202, issue May 1960, serial 9603-501-60, volume 8, pages 15 and 16.

Mr. MacDonald: Based on what?

Mr. White: These are the D.B.S. figures, based on their sample surveys which apparently are carried out annually; and they are total figures only. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, you will be interested to know that while the figure has fallen from 18 per cent to 5.8 per cent here in Ontario, the figure in Saskatchewan is 43.6 per cent.

The hon. member for York South pointed out that in 1951, 27 per cent of the households of Ontario had no bath or shower. He will be glad to know that this figure has now fallen to 11.9 per cent, compared to 50.2 per cent in the province of Saskatchewan. The hon. member for York South told us that in 1951, 22 per cent of the households in Ontario had no toilets—either flush or chemical—this has fallen to 8.7 per cent, compared to 44 per cent in the province of Saskatchewan.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that people are leaving Saskatchewan? Is it any wonder that while Ontario increased its population from 3,432,00 in 1931 to 5,405,000 in 1956, Saskatchewan's population fell from 922,000 to 881,000? Those are the D.B.S. figures too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: They left while the Liberals were in power. The population has been rising under the C.C.F.

Mr. White: Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that last year—1960—while 55,000 new Canadians settled in Ontario, only 2,000 went to the province of Saskatchewan? I would ask, in concluding this section of my speech, sir, that the hon. member for York South not presume to speak for the farmers or the other citizens of western Ontario. As a matter of fact, perhaps he heard the newest saying down in that part of the country—the N.D.P. is N.D.G.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South dealt at some length about business and union illegality, mentioning in particular a court case against an electrical contractor. And he threw out the challenge: "I look forward to a Conservative to draw attention to this kind of thing."

I am glad to do so now with one or two constructive suggestions.

I think it is perfectly shameful when industrialists and businessmen break the law. I think it behooves the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and trade organizations to discipline the corporations and executives who are found guilty—

Mr. MacDonald: They never do.

Mr. White: I am making the suggestion—let me finish. I think it behooves these business organizations to exert some discipline on their members, and I think it likewise behooves union leaders and those who presume to speak for them to discipline their members—

Mr. MacDonald: They do.

Mr. White: —to discipline their members when they carry out illegal strikes and such like. They discipline them for raiding other unions, but that is about the sum and substance of the discipline that goes on. There was an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail a week ago, headed "A Get Together—or A Plague on Both Their Houses," which quotes from a Royal commission report, written by Mr. Justice Tritschler, and I would like to make reference to this for a moment or two. The report says:

Perhaps management and labour, to preserve their way of free life, may be persuaded to find larger areas of agreement so that the now silently suffering public will not arise to wish a plague on both their houses. The conferring or imposing of corporate status and responsibility upon trade unions is in the opinion of the Commission a conditioned precedent to any improvement in industrial relations.

On that very point, Mr. Speaker, I personally would be reluctant to see this suggestion implemented. I think there might be something a little less dangerous in application and implication. I think perhaps that a half-way step could be taken. Mr. Justice Tritschler would put teeth in the law by making a breach of the collective bargaining agreement—by either party—actionable at the suit of the other party. A trade union which defaulted in obeying the judgment of any court would be disqualified from acting as a bargaining agent. I am reluctant to see unions incorporated, and subject to law suits, because I think that might place them at a distinct disadvantage and, in fact, might lead to the financial ruin of many good unions which are serving their members well. I think that unions and management should be subjected to some kind of penalty if they deliberately break the contract which they have made.

The hon. member for York South had quite a lot of fun with the remark that the hon. Prime Minister made, concerning the difference in the Liberal and Conservative Parties. Of course, this hon. member sought to show that there was little if any difference between the two other parties. I suggest to the hon. members of this House that such is not the case.

As a matter of fact, I think there would be more validity in saying that there is no difference between the Liberal Party and the N.D.P. as I will now seek to establish. In the Toronto Globe and Mail article dated Saturday, July 1, an article about the Liberal young people's meeting quoted liberally from remarks made by the executives and members of that organization.

Let me quote Jean David, president of the National Young People's Federation: "It is my opinion that this party is not as Liberal as it should be".

The Globe and Mail article continues:

Ontario Liberal Leader John Wintermeyer was among the party who heard Mr. David's brief speech to the 100 delegates at the final convention banquet. If the reaction to Mr. David's presentation had been merely polite, the statement could merely have been dismissed as of little import; but he brought down the house. Linked with other developments, it contributed to evidence of a growing tide of leftism. A caucus of Liberal members in Parliament had shown that the party was the most reactionary in Canada on the Cuban issue.

The president of the Toronto and York Young Liberal Association said his party should try to come to terms with the New Party. It was Mr. H. Malcolmson who introduced a resolution for an alliance with the New Party. Consternation swept through the top brackets of the party after the motion passed. John Beckett of Hamilton said people have been brainwashed by the press, television and radio into believing that communism was the worst thing in the world. We should pick things from communism that could be used in advocating control of industry.

When asking if that was not what the CCF had been saying for years, Mr. Beckett said: Yes, we are moving more toward the left all the time.

These are the Liberals I am quoting, Mr. Speaker.

Despite the shock that may be given Liberal elders, the young Liberals appear to be drawing closer to embracing some of the planks in the current CCF policy which, they contend, no longer is socialism.

And so time will prove, sir, that there is very little if any difference between the two left wing parties.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot take part in this Throne debate without mentioning the subject of crime, because the challenge has been made so clearly and so strongly that I for one must comment on both the subject and the way in which it was brought to the attention of the people in this province. Of course there is crime in Ontario. If there were not we would have no police. Of course some of this crime is organized. If it were not we should not have the very large organized forces that we find to be necessary.

Of course the criminals are using more modern methods. If not, how could the government justify the new police college, announced about a year ago? There may well be some increased activity in crime. How else could the Attorney-General justify an increase in the size of the Ontario Provincial Police? It may be that there is serious evidence of organized crime here in Toronto, or elsewhere in the province. It may be. I do not know. I think perhaps the government appointed a police commission—or announced the appointment of such a commission—with that very problem in mind, and perhaps this is the answer.

Certainly responsible journals in the province think this is the answer. Yes, the Toronto Telegram, and the Toronto Globe and Mail, the London Free Press and many other papers think that this problem should be investigated by the new Police Commission and, as a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition was not at all clear just a matter of a few weeks ago as to how this problem should be tackled.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. White: It was only a very short time ago that the hon. leader of the Opposition was suggesting a Kefauver-type committee investigation. Now he says that only a Royal commission will do. Why the change in the recommendation? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it has been changed because the Opposition wants to make it as difficult as possible for the government to appoint a Royal commission. They are doing it because of the five by-elections in January. It seems to me that decent-thinking, honest members of this House, regardless of political affiliation, should support the police commission idea which was announced in the Throne speech; submit whatever evidence they may have, and offer whatever proof they have available, so that the problem can be tackled intelligently and without injuring innocent parties. I would like to review this matter, Mr. Speaker, to put it in proper perspective.

Last May, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) earned headlines all over the province charging crime and corruption in high places. He was challenged at that time to put his facts and figures before a court of law and he refused to do so. His own leader, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), said this, as quoted in the Toronto Telegram of May 20:

Liberal leader John Wintermeyer seemed surprised by Mr. Sopha's charge implicating a Cabinet minister. "My position has been, is and will be that I will not be any part of a speculation, accusation, innuendo that may or may not be accurate," he said. He said these charges might "weaken the whole cause of a broad probe into the provincial crime picture."

I think that is right. But I think that is exactly what the hon. leader of the Opposition turned his back on when he stood up and quoted hearsay evidence hour after hour.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that while the hon. leader of the Opposition made certain pious proclamations in his speech,

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am the leader of the Opposition and I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to tell you now that I will vacate any privilege I have; I am prepared to waive any privilege I have in this House.

Further on at page 101 of Hansard:

I will be responsible for everything I have said and that I say from here on, and I vacate any privilege I have as a member of this House.

I thought when I heard those words that it was a very hollow offer and I have since confirmed with parliamentary experts that those remarks were meaningless. Those remarks, and the hon. leader of the Opposition as a lawyer should have known it, those remarks in no way affected the immunity which he had when he gave this speech in this House.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I intended it at the time.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, if he wants to substantiate the remarks which he made vacating the immunity which he had, why does he not step out into the corridor and read the speech again?

(Applause.)

The hon. leader of the Opposition said, as quoted in the Toronto Telegram of May 16:

I will not be any part of a smear campaign where I simply divulge all the rumours that are in my possession in the knowledge that such statements will produce headlines. Such tactics tend to injure the characters and reputations of individuals.

At about that same time the Liberal hierarchy apparently curtailed the activities of the hon. member for Sudbury. Even the Toronto Daily Star ran an editorial on May 23 as follows, which said in part:

Let Mr. Sopha put up or shut up.

Mr. Sopha has questioned the government's integrity in the most vital area, the administration of justice. Mr. Sopha's clear duty now as a citizen and as an elected representative is to back up his charge with evidence.

This is the Toronto Daily Star I am speaking from, Mr. Speaker.

To put up or shut up. He should lay the facts before the Attorney-General Kelso Roberts.

But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury did not put up, he shut up. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, and I am informed by friends of the Liberal hierarchy, that the charges made and the very intense speaking campaign that was commenced at that time was curtailed and postponed for political reasons. I have reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, that these charges would not have come forward at this time had it not been that the hon. Prime Minister called by-elections for January 18.

I say, sir, that this approach to this very grave subject of crime is almost criminally irresponsible, if I may use the words that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) applied in a different context. Yes, I think it is almost criminally irresponsible for hon. members of the Opposition to undermine the law enforcement agencies and the courts of this province for political purposes.

Excuse me for a moment, Mr. Speaker, while I consult some of the evidence which I have here. I have to abbreviate these remarks because of the time at my disposal.

The Toronto Globe and Mail at about the same time ran the following editorial which I quote in part:

MR. SOPHA AND CRIME

Mr. Elmer Sopha, Liberal member of the Legislature for Sudbury, is gravely irresponsible when he refuses to inform police officers of evidence of wrongdoing which he says has come to his attention. He has stated that he has evidence of bribery and corruption. In refusing to disclose evidence to the police Mr. Sopha is also placing himself in a position where Attorney-General Kelso Roberts might be justified in charging him with obstructing officers of the law.

The Criminal Code, section 110, reads—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. White: Well, my friend, I know Liberal lawyers in London who think that the wild charges which have been made and these deliberate statements which are being made by the Opposition that they have certain facts which they will not divulge, are definitely against the law and that a charge likely should be laid in order to straighten the matter out.

The Criminal Code, section 110, reads:

Everybody who resists or wilfully obstructs a police officer or peace officer in the execution of his duty or any person unlawfully acting in aid of such an officer is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Now, with the session on, of course, a charge could not likely be laid. "It is time for Mr. Sopha to place public duty ahead of party"—and these remarks, it seems to me, apply to all the hon. members of the Opposition—"and to co-operate fully with the police. Continued refusal to do so will reflect seriously on his fitness as a member of the Legislature."

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Yes, and I did offer to co-operate with the police, too, if they did not run and tell the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) where the information came from.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, why does he not lay a charge in a court of law?

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Why does the hon. member not lay a charge?

Mr. White: As a decent, honest, honourable citizen ought to do, and is expected to do?

We are used to hearing irresponsible charges from the leader of the C.C.F. and his supporters. We are not used to this same McCarthy-like approach from the members of the Liberal party. I say McCarthy-like, deservedly, because Senator McCarthy stood up in a place where his remarks were immune to action and named names and repeated hearsay and quoted third-hand evidence or pretence at evidence, knowing full well that the truth would never catch up with his remarks. We see the same thing happening here, I am sorry to say, and I say further, Mr. Speaker, that Liberals in London who are friends of mine find it perfectly shocking to see the Opposition using these McCarthy-like tactics. I would go so far as to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition parties will find to their sorrow that the decent people of this province in the five ridings in which there are to be by-elections will not let these unprovable, unsuable accusations deter them from sending in five good Conservatives to lead this province of ours to even greater progress.

Applause.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Introduction of bills.

THE CO-OPERATIVE LOANS ACT

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Co-operative Loans Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, in view of the many inquiries that have been made of me by individuals, hon. members of the House and by the press, I would like to say that I will present to this House on Monday, the government's position in relation to the matters of administration of justice which have been discussed in the House in the past week.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have questions to two of the hon. Ministers, both of which were submitted yesterday.

First to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). With reference to Neville Shellard of Cayuga, who has been held for some days incommunicado and under police guard, the hon. Attorney-General is reported to have said that the police "could not hold a person indefinitely unless some charge was laid against him." My question to the hon. Attorney-General is, how long is "indefinitely" and would he care to make any further explanation on the action of the police in this instance?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, since the body—and there has been a suspicion of murder in this particular case—since the body was first discovered on Shellard's farm, police have been scouring the barn, the house and the immediate area for clues that may help in identifying who may be responsible for the death. Shellard has remained in his home but, as he said to a reporter from the Hamilton Spectator and as reported in that paper in yesterday's issue, he was free to leave it. He has not been under arrest.

Section 438 of the Criminal Code provides that a person under arrest shall, when a justice is available, which is ordinarily the case, be taken before a justice within 24 hours.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan). I am informed that a certain church in this city, which is selling Christmas trees as a fund-raising venture, was first told that sales tax would apply. Then they were told that it would not be subject to the sales tax. Later the decision was changed again, that the tax would apply.

Would the hon. Provincial Treasurer state what is the situation on church sales of Christmas trees? Second, if the tax does apply for church sales, what is the department's reasoning that it does not apply to Boy Scout sales? And let there be no misinterpretation, Mr. Speaker. I am not arguing that it should apply to Boy Scout sales.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to reply to the question of the hon. member. I suspect that the situation as presented to the hon. member may have involved some misunderstanding and so I think I will just make a statement clarifying the whole situation.

A church which is selling Christmas trees as a fund-raising venture may register as a vendor and collect tax on the price charged for the trees, in which case it can buy the trees free of tax from its suppliers. Alternatively, inasmuch as fund raising is an element in the transaction, it is acceptable to the department that the church, instead of collecting tax on the sale of the trees, might be deemed to be the purchaser thereof, in which case the church should pay the tax to its suppliers or directly to the department at the time of purchase on the price charged by its suppliers. When this alternative is accepted, the church may exchange the trees for donations and collect no further tax.

This means that there must be a tax paid on the trees at some level. Although the church may feel it is better not to sell them subject to tax, as a matter of fact when the church sells the trees subject to tax the church does not pay any tax at all; the buyer, the consumer of the trees, pays the tax; as he would if he bought them from some business enterprise.

In other words, there is one tax to be paid on Christmas trees when they are being dealt with by charitable organizations. Either the charitable organization will pay the tax in relation to the price paid to its supplier, or it will register as a vendor and collect tax on the amounts its customers pay to the charitable organization in exchange for the trees.

Similar arrangements are applicable in the case of the Boy Scouts. Boy Scouts sell Christmas cards; they sell Christmas trees. The Boy Scout troop may take out a vendor's permit to collect tax, in which case the boys will collect tax on the price they charge for the Christmas trees, Christmas cards, or whatever else they sell, and the troop will remit the tax so collected to the department. If the Boy Scout troop wishes, the troop may pay tax on the price charged to the troop for the trees or the Christmas cards by its suppliers, and thus avoid taking out a vendor's permit and collecting tax.

These can be temporary permits, they do not cost anything and can be taken out with very little inconvenience.

So the net effect is that a church or an organization such as the Boy Scouts on specific fund-raising campaigns have a choice; either they operate as a consumer under the Act and pay tax on the purchase price of the goods they buy to exchange for donations, or they register with the department as a vendor and obtain a single event permit, in which case they will levy and collect tax on the amounts they receive for the sale of the goods.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): I wanted to ask, Mr. Speaker, is there any way of boiling this thing down a little? I get a lot of calls from churches which are going to hold rummage sales, pie sales, cake sales, and there is some doubt in the minds of these people as to just who is taxable and who is not; and what is taxable and what is not.

With all the experts that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) has in the department—I know he has a large group of them, competent PR men, etc.—if he might not boil down some sort of a simple statement that he might put in the press so people would know exactly what they had to do. I am not concerned if he wants to spend a little more money—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think the hon. members are well aware that at this point they are allowed to ask supplementary questions, but not to make statements. They are asking for information, not giving it.

Mr. Reaume: In the way of asking a question, will the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer to clarify the things he has already said.

Mr. Reaume: Well, all right, if he would, please.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I may inform the hon. member that there have been explanations in connection with rummage sales, bazaars, sales of home made baking and the like. May I state here very simply that goods and articles donated to charitable organizations holding such sales are exempt from sales tax when sold. If, however, material to be sold has been purchased by such organizations for resale, it is subject to tax either at the time of the sale or when purchased by the organization.

Perhaps I should make a news release—I am always happy to do anything the hon. members opposite suggest, if it is good!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House in committee of the whole, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

Bill No. 21 reported.

THE MASTER AND SERVANT ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 22, An Act to amend The Master and Servant Act.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise some matters that I dealt with briefly in regard to this section when the bill was before the legal bills committee. I may say that I am in favour of the section as far as it goes and would be quite prepared to see it passed. The only problem is that I think it is quite clear that this proposed amendment to The Master and Servant Act will not accomplish the purpose which the government had in mind in bringing it in. The purpose was quite admirable, but the method of achieving it, I think, is very doubtful.

The problem as explained in the committee on legal bills is that cases have arisen where an employer who contracted to do certain work—the specific case given related to agricultural work—and then hired labour to do the work, skipped out of the country after he got his money from the farmer, but before he paid his workmen.

Now under The Master and Servant Act as it now stands, my understanding is that if there is some apprehension that that sort of thing may happen, a summons may be issued. That procedure has been found to be ineffective. The amendment proposes to tighten it up by providing that under certain circumstances the master or employer, as he is described in the bill, may be subject to arrest if a justice of the peace is satisfied “he is about to quit the territorial jurisdiction of the justice of the peace,” to quote the legal terminology of the bill.

The difficulty as I see it, Mr. Chairman, is that if a man is about to quit the territorial jurisdiction he is not very likely to announce it. The situation could arise that he is paid off on having completed the contract and within an hour or two he departs. The employees who were expecting to receive the wages that they were entitled to receive as soon as their employer, the contractor, was paid off, would not be aware of the fact that they were not going to get their wages until the fellow had departed. It would then be too late. Even the power to arrest will not solve that situation.

We were told in the committee on legal bills that, in the town of Simcoe, the actual problem had arisen. Itinerant workers in Simcoe were hired by an individual who had a contract with a farmer to take off his tobacco crop and the man beat it across the border before he paid off his workers.

As I said I fully agree with what the government is trying to achieve here, but I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that they will fail to achieve it.

This problem does arise from time to time. It is not a widespread problem as I understand it. Most employers will pay off their workers, but the situation does arise from time to time and even if it arises in only a very few cases, I certainly think it is important that something be done to protect workmen who, having contributed their labour, are then cheated out of their remuneration.

At this stage I am not going to suggest an amendment to this bill because the problem is too complicated to attempt to solve in a brief span of time. I am quite prepared to see the bill go through at this stage, as it stands, but I would suggest to the government that The Department of Labour, which I think is the department most intimately concerned in matters of this kind, should look into this whole question of The Master and Servant Act—which is a very ancient Act, based on very ancient concepts. The department should, perhaps, consider substituting for it what might be called a payment of wages Act—or something like that—which would lay down certain reasonable rules regarding payments of wages, not only in situations of this kind but in other situations as well.

In this specific type of situation, my suggestion to the government is that legislation should be considered, whereby employers—of the type referred to in this proposed amendment—would be required to post a bond; or alternatively, that the money which they are entitled to receive from the person with whom they have entered into a contract, should be paid into trust, and should not be released until evidence has been produced that the wage claims and other legitimate claims have been satisfied.

I do not see how this problem can be controlled by any other system. As I said at the outset, I quite agree with the purpose the government has in mind, but I submit to the House that, on the face of it, the method they are proposing in this bill simply will not have any effect on the problem at all.

A man can skip out before anyone satisfies a justice of the peace that he is likely to skip out, just as easily as he can skip out before a summons is issued to him. Once he gets the money—especially in a town like Simcoe—it is a matter of an hour at the outside, before he would be across the border to Niagara Falls or Buffalo. It seems to me that in this type of situation where, shall I say, itinerant contractors hire itinerant workers, there should be some provision whereby the money due to the contractor is held up until there is evidence that he has satisfied wage claims particularly, and other claims against him as well.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Could I ask the hon. member a question or two in this connection? He is talking about something in which we all have an interest.

There is, of course, The Mechanics' Lien Act which does provide—where persons perform labour, or supply material—that the owner who is going to pay the contractor must hold back either 15 or 20 per cent of the amount owing, depending on the size of the project and the total cost of the project. This, as I recall, is constituted a trust fund by section 11 of that Act. Does the hon. member propose that there might be a trust fund in all cases where there is a relationship of employment between A and B?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I see a battery of four lawyers sitting on the Treasury bench there and I am not going to try to serve as their legal advisor, but what I had in mind is the problem of the employer who has no fixed assets at the spot where he is hiring labour. Whether it can be handled under The Mechanics' Lien Act or not, I am not prepared to say; and I am perfectly prepared to concede that it is not a simple problem. I think the government will concede that it is a real problem; they would not have brought in this bill otherwise. Something should be done to tighten up the law in a situation such as one where the employer simply moves in, hires labour, does the job and moves out. Whether this can be done by The Master and Servant Act or The Mechanics' Lien Act, I do not know. But it would appear, from the information given to us in the committee on legal bills—in explanation of this bill—that some tightening-up has to be undertaken. My only submission to the government is that the tightening-up proposed in this particular bill will certainly be inadequate.

I am quite prepared to confess that I am not certain what should be done. I made one proposal. I think it could be looked into, in the light of the existing law, and possible ways of improving it. I would agree it is a matter which requires some study.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What was the proposal of the hon. member? I am sorry if I missed it. Was it made today, or in the committee?

Mr. Bryden: I just made it about three minutes ago while the hon. Minister was contemplating more weighty matters, probably.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I was contemplating the hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: I regret that I dazzled the hon. Minister to the point where he was not able to absorb the words of wisdom I was conveying to the government. The proposal was that the money due to the contractor—or, at any rate, a portion of it—should be paid into some sort of a trust fund—say, in a bank—and should not be released until he could produce evidence that he had satisfied wage claims and other claims against him.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The difficulty with that is: First of all, there is already legislation to that effect in The Mechanics' Lien Act. The second problem is: How do you supervise whether the payments made by the owner—or whoever is paying the contractor—is in fact, going to be paid into the bank or into a trust fund? It also means, presumably that he has to pay money into an account before the money is actually due and owing. This will tend, it seems to me, to make an additional hazard in terms of building, and I think it is going to make building that much more costly.

Mr. Bryden: This does not relate to building. The specific case I was dealing with, relates to agricultural labour. I was not suggesting it should be paid in advance, I was suggesting merely that it should be paid when it is due to the contractor, and that a responsibility should be placed upon the person letting the contract, to pay it in so that, if the contractor skipped out, the workmen who have contributed their labour—and probably have very little money—would have some recourse. I think that it would not be unreasonable to say that a farmer, or any other person who contracts for work to be done, should be required at least to take the reasonable precaution of paying the money to some bank where it will be held, pending settlement of claims. If he failed to do that, then he should himself incur some liability.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In addition to what the hon. member has said, I cannot yet get clearly in my mind what his objection is to The Mechanics' Lien Act, which does precisely what the hon. member has been proposing.

Mr. Bryden: My only objection is that it has not worked, apparently. The law officers of the Crown and officers of the department of the hon. Attorney-General, who appeared before the committee on legal bills, said that they were bringing in this amendment because they had come across specific cases where employers had skipped out without paying wages to their employees. If there were a remedy under the existing law I would presume that the remedy would have been adopted. I assume from what they told us that whatever remedies exist were considered to be inadequate; and therefore they were proposing the additional remedy which they include in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think this is designed really to improve another alternative. That is to say, there is The Mechanics' Lien Act on the one hand, and The Master and Servant Act on the other. Now, The Master and Servant Act itself is an alternative to The Mechanics' Lien Act and when a claimant has the choice he may take one or the other. If he takes The Mechanics' Lien Act I think he has protection. But there appears to be a weakness in The Master and Servant Act; and that is why this section is introduced, not because The Mechanics' Lien Act is not adequate but because there is a hole in the other Act.

On the other hand, I think that The Mechanics' Lien Act really only applies where an employee has added value to something that he has worked on. This does not deal with the kind of situation that the hon. member is talking about—say, somebody who is harvesting or someone who has an employee in a shop and just simply worked for the week. In that case it would be very difficult to claim a lien against the real estate. I think the hon. member's point is a good one, but until he can come up with some suggestion—a practical one—as to how this can be corrected it would, perhaps, be worthwhile asking the committee on legal bills to have a look at it.

Mr. Bryden: I would be satisfied if it was merely studied further. Perhaps a broadening of the existing provisions of The Mechanics' Lien Act might be the answer. I do not know.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 30 reported.

THE AIR POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 31, An Act to Amend The Air Pollution Control Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I did not have the advantage of hearing this bill discussed in committee. I wonder why such broad powers should be given. What is this advisory committee really going to do? Are its powers and duties going to be within the four walls of the Act? Are they going to be more extensive? This is a very broadly worded section, and it causes me some concern to give this power to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Apparently, any powers and duties can be given to this committee. It may be a good idea for a committee to call in from time to time, but to give them unlimited powers, I think, is going too far.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, the bill does not state anything about the powers that are to be given to the advisory committee. This bill is an amendment to give to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council the right to make regulations providing for the establishment of this advisory ory committee on air pollution. This committee will be an advisory committee to the Minister.

Probably, if one goes back a little bit historically—in 1956, I believe it was—a select committee of this House after a very thorough investigation into this whole matter, submitted its report. One of the recommendations of that report was that a commission be set up. I have given a great deal of thought to the advisability of such a commission and, for many reasons, I deemed it inadvisable to recommend to the government that such a commission be set up.

I think the most important consideration is that, while we have gone a long way in this matter of air pollution control, we still have a very long way to go. I am dreadfully afraid of imposing sanctions on industry to control—as someone has put it rather crudely—belching smokestacks at the expense of full lunch pails. If I had to make the choice as an individual—and if I had to recommend a choice to the government, as a member of the government—I would choose the belching smokestack, provided, mind you, everything in our power was done to correct and control that situation.

Industry is as concerned about this as the government, I believe. Industrialists from various parts of the province are most plagued with this problem. I have been tremendously impressed with their sincerity in seeking to do all they possibly can to control this problem.

While I could not recommend to the government the establishment of a commission with broad regulatory and policy-making powers, I did feel that it would be of great value to me as the responsible Minister and to the government as a whole, that we have an advisory committee to the Minister, to look into all the aspects of this. With their knowledge, and on the basis of their investigations and findings, they could recommend to me certain courses of action that would be worthwhile, practicable and in the interests of the public as a whole.

This committee can be considered to be, I believe, composed of people with a good deal of knowledge in the field. There will be two representatives of industry, one representative from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, two representatives of labour and two technical persons, skilled and experienced in this field.

I would point out to the House that they will have no policy-making or regulatory powers, that they will simply be an advisory committee to the Minister to help guide me in proposing a policy to the government, and legislation to this House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have very little quarrel with what the hon. Minister has said. My only concern is the wording of the section. If the hon. Minister believes the committee is going to be used for these purposes, I think the committee is a good idea. But I think the section should say that. I am a little concerned about the necessity for the last phrase in this section, prescribing its powers and duties. If the government wanted to change that to something like “to advise the Minister” I would be quite satisfied, but I do not like a general phrase of that sort in this type of statute because it seems to open the door too wide. What the hon. Minister has said goes along with my objection, I think, and if those words could be replaced with a phrase like the one I suggested—or something similar to it—I would be quite satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the right to suggest or recommend to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that the powers and duties of such an advisory committee could be laid down in the regulations. It would seem to me, sir, that its responsibilities and its duties, are inherent in the very name, the Air Pollution Advisory Committee; it is an advisory committee. And an advisory committee, as I see it, is a committee set up to give advice to someone—in this case, the Ministry of Health.

I do not really believe that anything would be gained by changing those words. I must say that I am not wholly inflexible in these matters.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect, the hon. Minister and I part company on this argument. I do not know why—if the committee is to do what the hon. Minister suggested it is to do—it needs any more powers to be contained in the Act than the power to advise the hon. Minister. That is all the hon. Minister said he wants, so why does he not say that in the statute? What additional powers and duties will the committee have, other than to advise the hon. Minister? If that is all, why does the statute not say that?

I am forced to be suspicious because the hon. Minister insists that these words remain; or is he insisting? All right, if the hon. Minister will be flexible enough—if he is not insisting—let us change the words to what he says he wants and then we will all be happy.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to deleting those words and therefore I would move that the section be amended to read:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may make regulations providing for the establishment of a committee to be known as the Air Pollution Advisory Committee.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on this. As the chairman of the select committee, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister on setting up this advisory committee.

Although I do not feel we have gone far enough in this thing, the hon. Minister has pointed out the committee recommended setting up a board or commission with broad powers to do something about cleaning up the air. This is certainly a step in the right direction. However, I cannot agree with the hon. Minister of Health when he says that he would rather see full lunch pails and have the black smoke coming out of the chimneys. We found out in our investigations, Mr. Chairman, that with modern methods of air pollution control, it is not necessary to have the black smoke coming out of the chimney. We can still have the full lunch pails, we can have the factories working at top speed, we can have them working efficiently and they can do something—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the hon. member (Mr. Cowling) has taken my words out of context and has clothed them with a meaning which was neither implied nor intended?

Mr. Cowling: I thank the hon. Minister very much. With these modern methods of cleaning up the air, I repeat that we can still have the full lunch pails. It is not necessary to pollute the atmosphere with black smoke.

For example, we were in the great industrial city of Pittsburgh. Pittsburgh was known for years as "the smoky city." And believe me, you could see where the smoke had completely covered the downtown buildings of Pittsburgh. Now they have on a very effective air pollution control project. They have set up a commission or a committee to look into this matter and they have enacted certain laws with teeth in them. They were able to remove the smoky atmosphere of Pittsburgh, practically. It was interesting to note—and I know some of the hon. members of the committee are here: the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon), the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) to name two—on the tall buildings of Pittsburgh one could actually see the mark where the black soot had been washed down by the rain and the snow, following the passing of the law, when there was no further smoke in the atmosphere. Obviously, we can clean up the air.

I was very interested in an article that appeared in the paper this week, which reported that one of the officials in Washington—now he has become aware of a mechanical gadget for automobiles, which will remove the carbon monoxide exhaust—is going to recommend that it be made mandatory for United States car manufacturers to install the gadget on their cars in the same way as they install windshield wipers and horns. Thus, the great problem of exhaust fumes will be eliminated.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that was another one of the recommendations of our committee, that when a proper mechanical arrangement was devised to attach on automobiles that they be made mandatory in the province of Ontario. It looks as though we are coming a little closer to that.

But this whole problem of air pollution, of smoke, is a big one. It is something of which we on the government side are very cognizant; we now have our air pollution control division with The Department of Health, which has done much good work in assisting the municipalities to set up their own by-laws, and to do something about their local problems.

This advisory committee will do a good job, and it may be, as the hon. Minister has said, that eventually it will be necessary to set up a special board or commission to look after the whole problem. Certainly in the meantime, this advisory committee will do much good work in assisting the government and the municipalities of the province of Ontario. The province of Ontario can give us some clean air and keep it that way.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask assurances from the hon. Minister that this committee will in fact get something done. When we say that much has been done, or when the hon. Minister says that much has been done in this field; I do not wish to be critical of him, but I certainly agree with him that much is to be done. I wonder if we can have any assurance that this committee will in fact operate and we will see some results. I hope this is not just another camouflage or another committee being set up that will not accomplish anything.

The hon. member opposite has just made mention of this select committee which was set up to study the matter of air pollution.

That was a number of years ago. Yet it does not take much imagination when we drive down through the industrial areas of this city, or the city from which I come, to realize that smoke and these chemicals and what-have-you are being put into the atmosphere in far too great a quantity. We are now fighting the problem of water pollution because we were negligent in placing control soon enough to protect the waters of our land.

If one travels through the city of Los Angeles where the smog is such a problem, it does not take much imagination to know that the health of the people there is being endangered. I say the people are being endangered here, and I should like to know whether the hon. Minister can give us some assurances that this committee will in fact accomplish what we want done is it something that might sit for another two or three years before it gets around to reporting? I think this is a matter which should be tackled early. I wonder if we can have some assurances that this will get us some results.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I believe I can assure the hon. member that this committee will be an actively working committee. It is not a committee being set up for a specific job; it is an on-going job. It will continue to sit and consider all the matters relative to this very important question and advise us so we may be guided in the policies and legislation which will ultimately come to this House for consideration.

This is one of the things I have insisted upon in asking for the opportunity and privilege of setting up this committee: that it be a working committee.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I realize, of course, that this is for the benefit of the hon. Minister, and I appreciate that. I wonder if there is any possibility that this committee will be filing reports which might be available to us as hon. members of the Legislature or is this a committee which will be exclusively for the use of the hon. Minister of Health?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The intention, Mr. Chairman, is that it will be an advisory committee to the Minister.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Do I understand that most of the information which is available from this committee will not be available to the hon. members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Essentially that would be it—to guide me. I do not expect that it will be filing formal reports, but will be giving me, from time to time, recommendations and advice to guide me in my programme for the future.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: My only comment to that, Mr. Chairman, is that I suppose this is the prerogative of the hon. Minister. I suggest to him that when these reports are being set up—I do not know whether this is to be a paid committee or not—but when he takes the sole exclusive responsibility for this report, he also takes responsibility for this entire situation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is quite right, Mr. Chairman. I believe that is part of my duty as a Minister. But on the other hand any reports that are given to me, or any questions that may be asked concerning the matter by any hon. member of this House, I would be prepared to answer to the best of my ability with whatever knowledge and information I have available to me.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling). I do this so rarely that I want to record it for once.

This is a more important issue than is sometimes realized. I am constantly impressed by the number of times that constituents of mine—friends, neighbours—raise this problem with me. It is one of the nagging problems that we live with. They try to get their municipal council to do something about it, but their council usually says they do not have the power.

The thing that puzzles me, Mr. Chairman, is why the government is taking so long in coming to grips with this? In the first place it is now six years since this select committee made a recommendation—1955, was it not?—1956, I am sorry. It is five years since the select committee made its recommendations. So that we have had a five-year lag while the hon. Minister is considering whether he will establish a commission, or whether he will set up a committee. Now he comes up with a committee, which is only an advisory committee.

It may be a working committee, it may be that this committee will go out and look into situations and come back and advise the hon. Minister but if so, what the hon. Minister, in effect, is saying is that he has been doing nothing for five years, or alternatively, that personnel in the department, for whom he has the final responsibility, have been doing nothing. Which, of course, I think is a pretty accurate admission of the fact.

Nothing has been done. It is not only late, Mr. Chairman, but I agree once again with the hon. member for High Park, it is too little.

It is never too late if you have a serious problem, I agree, it is never too late, but it is certainly later than it should have been, when the hon. Minister had this report on his desk for a five-year period.

As the hon. member who chaired this committee and looked into it points out, the hon. Minister in some basic approaches to the issue is fairly well off base. It is possible to protect the full pail and at the same time do something about this! This is really a red herring drawn across the trail, for the hon. Minister to introduce this idea that he is more interested in the full lunch pail.

The point that was raised by the hon. member in the Liberal group seems to me once again to be a very pertinent one. I am increasingly disturbed about this business of setting up advisory committees, because the advisory committee presumably goes out and does a job in getting facts which this Legislature is entitled to.

Now the hon. Minister, with a gesture of generosity, said, "I will be glad to give the information to anybody who asks me". That is not the point. The point is that this House and its hon. members should be cognizant of all the information which that committee gets so that then they will be in a better position to know what questions they should ask the hon. Minister. They need this information as a basis of working knowledge in coping with this problem.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take much more time. I agree that it is never too late to come to grips with a problem, but this bill certainly fits the old adage that it is too little and too late in terms of the seriousness of this whole issue.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I do not really suppose and I do not believe it would be possible for me to live long enough to bring in any bill that would please my hon. friends. However, I would like to point out that there are many factors that the hon. member brought before us on which he obviously is very much off base.

First of all, of course, I have not had the privilege of being the Minister for five years. I have been Minister for three years, just about now. One of the first things I undertook was a study of this matter of air pollution control, because I was just as cognizant of the problem as the hon. member is and just as deeply concerned about the matter, as is every hon. member on this side of the House.

The first thing we did was produce a model by-law, or what we believed was a model by-law, and we did this on the basis of advice given to us by experts, although they were not formally constituted a commission. It has worked very well. Many municipalities have adopted it.

The hon. member speaks about the nagging calls he gets from his constituents, I can appreciate them and I can sympathize with him, but I would like to point out that Metropolitan Toronto is one of the municipalities that has not chosen to introduce or to adopt the model by-law.

Mr. MacDonald: How many have?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I cannot give the hon. member the exact number, but I undertook before the committee the other day to be able to give the exact number when my estimates come in. It is becoming a sizeable number and, rather interestingly, it is being introduced by those communities most affected by this problem. This is what we anticipated, this is what we had hoped for. Progress is being made.

As I said earlier, industry itself is very much interested and very much concerned about this and frankly is spending large sums of money to do as much as it can do at the present time.

Fortunately, and unfortunately at the same time, it is not the black smoke that is causing us the trouble, it is the many other substances that are being let loose, so to speak, in our atmosphere, substances which are largely new. For this reason it is difficult to cope with them, because we have to develop the filters or the equipment or the appliances or whatever it may be that is applicable to the methods of precipitating these solutions that are being released in the air.

The black smoke is still a problem, I am not minimizing this by any means. Indeed it is rather startling to know that some big industries and big commercial buildings are still among the worst offenders, because there is a treatment for black smoke and it is being brought under control very much. It is these other chemical substances and other types of smoke that bother us very greatly. Included in these, of course, and becoming an increasing factor in our environment all the time, are the exhaust fumes from automobiles.

I must agree with the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) that it is very interesting to see that the automobile engineers have finally come up with something which they believe will be an effective control for this great, and vexing problem.

The information from advisory committees, as far as these committees in my department are concerned, might very well be made available to this House; but I would point out to the hon. members that I have several advisory committees. I have never, despite the fact that some of the hon. members of the Opposition have from time to time suggested that I am somewhat dictatorial, I have never been too proud, or considered myself too big or too smart, to seek the best advice I could possibly get and to use it. Indeed, I could not run this department without seeking the best possible advice from the best qualified sources. This I shall continue to do, because no one man can deal with all of the complex problems which face The Department of Health today, charged as it is with the responsibility of the health of all our people from the cradle to the tomb.

A great mass of advice comes to me from many committees. I do not really know exactly how many advisory committees there are to my department at the present time, but there is quite a sizeable number and there will have to continue to be. This will be a growing number because of the growing complexity of the business of the health of our people.

I frankly see no reason why the report could not be made available to the hon. members. It will add to the cost of government, there is no doubt about it.

Much of the information that comes from them is verbal, much of it comes to me through personal contact with the chairmen or the members of the various committees, and therefore there is no record of it. We have discussions from time to time. I have discussions with these committees from time to time and they tell me their ideas and opinions and recommendations; so much of the advice I get is not formally put down on paper. But I have no objection in the wide world to any hon. member in the House getting all the information that is made available to me.

For the record, Mr. Chairman, I think I should point out now that while I made reference to the belching smokestacks and the full lunch pails, you will recall that I said in the meantime they were doing everything possible, steadily and continuously, to control and correct the causal situation or the causal factor in this matter of air pollution control.

I would repeat, sir, for the sake of emphasis if for no other reason, that we on this side of the House are as equally exercised about this problem as the hon. members across the way.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister another question.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, I think there is something I should point out in supporting the hon. Minister—and I certainly appreciate the kind remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). The hon. Liberal member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) talks about the situation here in industrial Toronto and I think we should know, Mr. Chairman, that in Metropolitan Toronto we have a very active, efficient and well operating air pollution control division. This was done in co-operation with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and with our new air pollution control legislation. They have been very active, they have a large staff of inspectors, and they have done much to reduce the problem here in Metropolitan Toronto.

I can give you a very definite example of that, Mr. Chairman. I had several calls from industry in my riding out in High Park complaining about the fact that the inspectors in the air pollution division of Metropolitan Toronto are too tough on their industry and too severe with them. That gives the other side of the picture.

These people are on the job and they have gone a long long way toward cutting down the problem in Metropolitan Toronto. There is a lot of work to be done and it takes a great deal of study and investigation and work to even keep up with the whole problem of air pollution because with the new industries coming into this area we are going to have an increase in the problem. So I say that we have done a lot; there is a lot to be done; and I want to commend the good work that our people are doing here in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the added remarks of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) make my question even more pertinent. The hon. Minister defended his record in the last three years by saying that he had produced this model by-law. He used words that clearly indicated that he was not quite happy with the fact that Metropolitan Toronto was one of the areas that had not seen fit to pass this by-law.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will take a look at the words of the hon. Minister when they get into Hansard; and I hope they do not get changed in the process, because I heard it and I heard it very, very clearly.

Now we have the hon. member for High Park saying that they have a committee that is active and I am just a little bit puzzled. If this committee is active in doing a job so that industry is complaining to him, why has the hon. Minister expressed dissatisfaction or some milder form of objection to the fact that the model by-law had not been adopted in Toronto?

However, it brings me to the point that I wanted to raise before the hon. member for High Park added further facets to it. In coming to grips with the question of water pollution, for a time the responsibility was left with the municipality. Then finally it became very clear that this was not going to solve the problem. Whether you call it dictatorial or not, the government saw fit to set up a water resources commission and it has regulations which are now backed by the courts of law with penalties and everything else.

What I am interested in is why—with the magnitude of this problem and with reluctance that grows out of pressures on municipalities, leading to a municipality being reluctant to the point of doing nothing at all to come to grips with it in many instances—why is the government not willing, either through a commission comparable to the water resources commission or some other body, to act at the provincial level?

Now, for heaven's sake, do not start telling me this would be treading on municipal autonomy; that precious item that is used or abused depending on how the government wants to approach a topic. Because I think the record is clear in the instance of the water, and the parallel is clear with air pollution where the government had to move with laws laid down at the provincial level which were superimposed over anything that the municipality did or did not do.

I submit to the government that this is ultimately what they are going to have to do on air pollution. They have taken five or six years to play around with it and now they are going to take another five or six years with an advisory committee.

So my question to the hon. Minister is this: What is the reason for the reluctance in duplicating at the provincial level the kind of tougher approach that we found was necessary in coping with water pollution to also deal with air pollution?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the two subjects are so unrelated and so far apart that it would take a long time to explain it to the hon. member.

First of all, we have known how to control pollution of water for many, many years—I was going to say centuries, that is not quite true, but for many, many years. We do not yet know how to control the various pollutants in the air—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We do not even know what they are.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: —and it is because of this that we hesitate to recommend that this should be undertaken by a provincial body. We believe that we are on the right track. We believe that we are moving as swiftly as is possible. There was no dissatisfaction implied—the hon. member for York South has the greatest capacity for reading into one's words—

Mr. MacDonald: Do not malign me, just deal with the issue.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just keep quiet for a minute and listen; as one of my hon. friends said, if the hon. member would just keep quiet he would learn something. If I kept my brain out of gear as much as he does, I would never say anything.

Mr. MacDonald: Deal with the issue instead of—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just keep quiet! Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would stop talking when someone else is trying to tell him something—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: Deal with the issue.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): What does changing Hansard have to do with air pollution when the hon. member is speaking?

Mr. MacDonald: Nobody is asking the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There was no reluctance on the part of Metropolitan Toronto to adopt the model by-law. Metropolitan Toronto and a few other municipalities in Ontario for many years have been controlling air pollution as effectively as they could under a clause of The Municipal Act. They believed that it was more suitable—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Why don't you make Metropolitan Toronto adopt the model by-law?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member and I do not live in Metropolitan Toronto! We leave them the right to determine for themselves what they believe is best for their people and for their municipalities.

Metropolitan Toronto, and the city of Toronto before it and two or three other municipalities, big municipalities in Ontario, believe that they can control this matter and have done an effective job, with the knowledge available to them and to us over the years, in controlling it under the terms of The Municipal Act.

The other municipalities which come to us now seeking advice—we recommend that they adopt the broader powers available to them under The Air Pollution Control Act and they have done this without exception. No new municipality in the last three years, to my knowledge, has elected to try to control this matter under the terms in that clause in The Municipal Act which permits it.

There is nothing implied or inherent in my statement that Metropolitan Toronto had chosen not to do it. They are doing a good job.

The committee which my hon. friend from High Park (Mr. Cowling) mentioned is a committee charged with the responsibility of controlling pollution in Metropolitan Toronto. It has nothing to do with my department except that we exchange notes, we exchange advice, we counsel each other. When they need help which we can give, we give it; and when we need help that they can give, we get it. This is the only close association that exists between us and many municipalities in the whole province of Ontario.

But I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that there was no criticism of Metropolitan Toronto. They are doing and have done, and I am quite sure will continue to do, the best possible job they can for their people.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I have been most interested in this matter of air pollution because it was originally about 1955, I think—or 1954—that I felt that my riding was so affected by it. At that time, if the hon. members will remember, the calculations were that in the sampling stations in the riding of Riverdale the amount of soot falling averaged two pounds per person.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. Minister had it figured out in tons.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. Minister had it figured out in tons.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I thought it was two pounds per person, and the number of tons that fell in a certain number of days I reported—

Mr. MacDonald: Per year, or day or what?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Just a moment! Let us be fair about this thing. This is really what, to me, gave the impetus to encourage the government to establish a crime or rather—

This comes from the difficulty of trying to read a newspaper on one side and give a speech on another. The point, however, was that it was a serious matter and we established a special committee to look into it. There were various reports made.

I want the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) to be perfectly fair about this when he talks about what has taken place in the province of Ontario. There has been a tremendous improvement from the day that this matter first came into this Legislature. The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has intimated that nothing has been done in this field and that a great deal could be done.

Now, just as a matter of interest, I would like the hon. member to consider a very serious problem and that is right in the city of Sudbury where the International Nickel Company is situated. The hon. member who sits on the hon. member's immediate right will recall the problems involved in the question of smoke belching forth in Sudbury. Here the whole countryside has been affected by the sulphur fumes. There is a—what is the man called?—there is a sulphur fumes arbitrator, or something, there. But I think the whole community of Sudbury has accepted this simple fact and it goes back to the point which the hon. Minister made; and I do not think he wanted to be quoted out of context, as he said.

He said it is where one has to make, or he would have to make, the choice of either smoke or full lunch pails, he would pick smoke. And so have the people in Sudbury simply because, as I recall, the towers which emit the sulphur fumes in the process of treating the ore are something like 500 feet high.

Are they not? They are very high in any event.

Now this has been done, every conceivable effort has been made by that company, to mitigate the air pollution it has caused. But on the other hand I think most experts would come to the conclusion that they have done all they can and that by raising these stacks even higher all they are doing is distributing the sulphur fumes over an ever-increasing area.

I think it would be unfair for the hon. member for York South to intimate, or to leave the impression, that nothing has been done, to people who have come here since this matter, as I say, first came into the House. There have been a great many things. I think one of them is that in this city and elsewhere in this province the public generally and commerce have become conscious that this is a problem.

It is a social problem as well as an economic problem. It is a social problem because it affects our health; because it deteriorates the public relations of the company involved. It is an economic problem and a social problem to our people because it affects their health. But it is also an economic problem to some of these companies.

I remember, and I think the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) will also recall, that there were a number of companies on Spadina Avenue which were in a metal refining—or in the battery business, I cannot remember. In any event, they were emitting up their smokestacks a material which was not smoke, and in fact I do not think could be seen, but it was a by-product of the process on which they were involved. They were encouraged, as the results of our efforts, to install a collection agency in their stacks. As a result, in my recollection, the amount of recovery of this material which they could sell more than paid for the equipment which had been used to recover it. This material, otherwise, was going loose into the atmosphere.

I frankly think one wants to be fair about this thing. We have gone a long way and you just cannot be militant and adamant and say that we can stop smoke, because there are areas where this cannot be done.

I will tell hon. members, in my own riding, which is a highly industrialized riding which is criss-crossed by a railway, several railways in fact, that there were always complaints from the residents of my riding that the smoke-belching engines were a terrible menace to them. Now the railroads have removed the smoke-belching engines and use diesel engines and they are much more concerned about the diesel exhausts than they ever were about the smoke. The smoke was dirty but it was not as unhealthy as the fumes which come from these diesel engines.

This is a very large problem, this problem of diesel engine exhaust and I would not want the impression left abroad that this government, nor this Legislature, have not interested themselves in this problem. When it came to this Legislature in 1955 or 1956 and a committee was established we worked very hard. We produced some regulations and suggested by-laws and arrangements we thought would be helpful. As a result of it some very active steps were taken here in the city of Toronto, sir, and a department established. Is that not correct?

An hon. member: A division established.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: A division established and they have done a great deal of work. Tests are now being taken in my riding which indicate that this has been reduced to almost a fraction of what it was before, for, frankly, it had one of the heaviest concentrations.

In terms of Hydro itself: Hydro has installed equipment at the Hearn plant and is installing it at the Lakeview plant which runs into many hundreds of dollars to collect the soot, smoke and fumes and so forth which are emitted through the stack. This is electrical equipment, mechanical equipment and so forth, and it is very expensive; but it is Hydro's contribution to this very serious problem of air pollution.

The only reason I speak now just for a moment on this, is I do not want the impression—I think there is a great deal to be done but I think we have to be sensible about this and just not leave abroad the impression that all you need to do is set up a commission and give them some power, like Bismark's iron fist, to come clumping down on industry because I can tell hon. members there are various areas, in the north certainly—Sudbury and others—where it simply would put the whole community out of business. One has to be very careful, I think, and be moderate and understanding in this problem. Frankly the problem changes almost every few months with the advances in technological development—both in terms of the fuel that is being used and in terms of the machines that are using these fuels.

I think the hon. Minister of Health is taking a moderate, but a proper, step in establishing this advisory committee, and I would not be surprised if it gave us a much clearer impression of what the problem is. There is no point in saying that, simply because one sees some dirt in the air, the problem is therefore one of prescribing a medicine over the phone for the patient. We simply have to get into this thing. With the changes that constantly take place, and with the staff that the hon. Minister now has in his department, and with, I think, the cognizance and awareness which many of the municipalities have of this problem—which was not in existence some five years ago—I think this Legislature has taken a very noble role and has now made it a public issue for which we all have some responsibility.

It is not just enough, I think, to say to everyone in this Legislature or in this government, that we can cure air pollution, because this is not true. One factor which contributes greatly to air pollution is right in people's individual homes: whether they have their stacks clean; the kind of equipment they have to heat their homes; and whether they keep it in good condition. In many cases smoke is avoidable; it is not just a question of trapping it, is a question of burning the fuel completely and efficiently.

This is a very broad problem and I think the hon. Minister is approaching it in a very sensible way.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, a couple of references to my remarks have been made. If the hon. members opposite are satisfied with the situation in Toronto, that is their business.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member should not be so sarcastic every time he gets up.

Mr. Singer: Temper! Temper!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I was trying to be kind to the hon. members, Mr. Chairman. I am not satisfied with the situation in Toronto, and I think there is still air pollution in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We think there is too.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: What I started to say, Mr. Chairman, is that I think the government is going at this thing in entirely the wrong way; I think the approach as contained in this whole Act—and I think this is only amplifying the situation—is that they are saying to the municipalities: "This is your responsibility—to take care of this smoke."

One municipality sets up a by-law and does all within its power to control the matter of air pollution in its own area. The simple fact of the matter, Mr. Chairman, is that polluted air merely moves into that municipality from a neighbouring area. The municipality which has gone to all of this trouble has really no control over the air they are breathing, which is being polluted by their neighbours.

So I would have to take exception to the statement that the government is doing all it can. I do not think the government is doing all it can, and I do not think the government ever will do all that it can, until it assumes the responsibility for the air throughout the province, and ceases to leave this to the matter of the individual conscience of one municipality or another.

Mr. Cowling: What are we going to do about the borders of the province?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Cowling: Would the hon. member like to hear it a little more clearly?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes.

Mr. Cowling: I agree with the hon. member about the polluted air coming across the municipal borders but, if we do something about that, what are we going to do about the border of Quebec and the border of Manitoba? Just how far can you take this thing?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think I might answer the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) this way: I do not know what we will do about the borders of Manitoba and Quebec. But, if this government is sincere in tackling this in part, perhaps we might clear up Ontario; and then, perhaps, we might have some negotiations with the governments of the bordering provinces. We might be able to do something in that way if this is a problem.

I have read the report—I have read it from beginning to end—of which the hon. member was chairman, but I did not note in the report that the bordering areas of Manitoba and Quebec presented a problem. I do not think it is, but if it becomes a problem I think we could negotiate it very well with those provinces.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the addition of this committee will not solve the problem. I think it is a step forward and if it will add something to the solution it is good, but I have to agree —and it is not very often I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—that we are doing too little and too late, and still we are not approaching the thing as earnestly as we might. I think the government might give some thought to making some further amendments in this Act, which would, in fact, make it the municipalities' responsibility to clean up their air if the government is going to insist on autonomy of the various municipalities.

I have doubts about something else with respect to this committee. I wonder what type of people are going to be on the committee. It seems to me that, if it is going to be composed of industrialists, we still may continue to move slowly, because I agree with the hon. Minister of Energy Resources when he says that this is an economic problem. I am quite well aware of the fact that it probably will involve many millions of dollars expended on the part of industry to clean it up. We are concerned, as I pointed out earlier, with the waters of the province—through our conservation authorities, etc. We make grants to these authorities, which, in part, go to help clean up these waters. It may very well be—if this thing is an economic situation, beyond the ability of industry to treat it itself—that this government should take a good look at it, possibly even consider grants to clean up the situation.

I do not think it is something that can be taken lightly. I believe that this committee, as it is constituted, is simply not going to do the job; and I think the government has to take another approach, or we are going to be years and years even getting to the problem, let alone solving it.

I do not think we could quarrel with the one statement, which was made by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, that the homes are contributing to this situation. But I do think there are very many citizens in this province who believe that the main contributors of pollution to our atmosphere are the industries themselves. And I think we cloud the issue when we bring all these little things into it. I think if we get at the big contributors we will start to make some progress.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the hon. member will realize that if he puts all the fuel that is burned in all of the homes in this province together—and the number of appliances that make use of this fuel and the dispersal of it—he will find that the homes are the largest single contributor, not the smallest, by any means. A more dramatic impression of the thing, I admit, is received by seeing one or two smokestacks such as those in Sudbury; but nevertheless, it is not a correct impression; the homes contribute the most.

Mr. Singer: Is The Department of Health the next scalp the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is going to add to his belt?

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister mentioned the visit of the members of the committee to Sudbury. There has been a very great problem throughout the years in Sudbury; the council battled with International Nickel and it got nowhere. When the committee was there and the president of International Nickel was questioned on the sulphur problem, he said that they would not do anything at all about it because it was not profitable.

There has been some improvement in the Sudbury situation in recent years, but surely the hon. Minister is not going to take credit for that?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If the hon. member wants us to be responsible for the rain we will take credit for the sun.

Mr. Thomas: Wait a minute; the hon. Minister cannot take credit for that, for the simple reason that while it was not profitable for International Nickel to filtrate foundry fumes—sulphur, etc.—some five or six years ago, the company has now found it is profitable, because sulphur is required in the purification of the ore for the production of uranium. Since that time, they have installed filtration equipment, because it is now profitable—something they had refused to do before.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member that I said it was a matter of economics. If the position he is now taking is: that the company could have done this and could have continued in business, and kept all of their employees working as they have in the past—this is something which the company denied.

An hon. member: But they probably could.

Mr. Thomas: A council like that in the city of Sudbury, which is dependent on one industry alone, finds it difficult to stand up to a giant corporation like International Nickel—and while there have been some things which have been done—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are some councils in Ontario that are very slow to act.

Mr. Thomas: Some things have been done in regard to a model by-law, but the greatest problem in air pollution is the question of enforcement. And I agree with the hon. members who spoke previously in this debate: The real answer to this great problem is a commission that has the authority to go out and enforce the regulations. Unless the government is prepared to do that, I am afraid that an advisory committee will be of very, very little use in the question of air pollution.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Chairman, hon. members, this debate is quite interesting. I just want to mention that we had this problem in my riding, especially in Humberstone township, with International Nickel. There has been damage to the farmers' crops there for years. The International Nickel plant was paying damages to various farmers throughout the area and, some two or three years ago after, when I was on the committee with the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas), the farmers came to me with their grievances. Being on this committee, it gave me some idea of what was probably required. So I went to The Department of Health, The Department of Mines and The Department of Agriculture about the problem. These farmers were getting paid; they thought the damage was caused by sulphur dioxide. Recording instruments were put in and, through the investigation of these three departments, the cause was found to be nickel dust. Today the International Nickel plant has installed dust collectors. Last year, I am told, they did not have these collectors in operation for a full year—I think they started sometime in April, or so. The equipment was collecting about 75 per cent of the nickel dust which was destroying the crops; this year they expect much better results.

I want to congratulate the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and The Department of Health for the wonderful work it is doing along with The Departments of Mines and Agriculture. I think we will have the nuisance licked.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add to some of the comments made by my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas), because I think he put his finger on the crux of this problem.

He spoke specifically with relation to the International Nickel Company. We heard from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) quite a long and very interesting story about how the company had done everything it possibly could but found it simply uneconomical to refine the sulphur out of the smoke. The hon. member for Oshawa then pointed out that they very quickly discovered a method of doing it when they found a way of selling the sulphur at a profit. Now, I have no doubt that the hon. Minister would reply: Of course, that changed the economic picture, it made it economically possible to do something that they could not previously do. I would like to submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that a company, which for many years has been making net profits, after taxes, of anywhere from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year, could have done something about that sulphur a long time ago.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: This was not a starving little company that was going to go out of business, if it tried to correct the damage it was creating—not only to the city of Sudbury but to the countryside for miles and miles around. There have been more depredations created by that company than by almost anyone else that one could think of. It is a very wealthy company, making very large profits, and it should have done something about this long ago.

The reason I raise this matter and revert to it, Mr. Chairman, is because of my objection to the sort of attitude that says: Well, the companies are trying hard but they have a lot of problems. That is the sort of attitude that leads to laxness. I will agree with the hon. Minister that there are many situations which are very difficult to solve but they are not nearly as difficult in many cases as they are alleged to be. The very example the hon. Minister gave in his introductory remarks, with regard to the lunch pail and the smokestack—I am not going to quote him because I may misquote him or quote him out of context, but I will merely refer to his own reference—that remark is the sort of thing that leads to laxity. We are not faced with this sort of choice nearly as often as is alleged. Let me point out to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that there are other choices involved, that affect the lunch pail, too. For example, in my constituency, there has been quite a serious problem of smoke pollution—particularly in the southern end. The hon. Minister of Energy Resources will know about it because one of the worst problems—as far as I am concerned—arises from a factory over the border in his constituency but, unfortunately the smoke comes across, or the fumes—I do not think it is smoke in the ordinary sense—come across the border into my constituency.

There has been a real problem with respect to property values. An area which has been a good residential area for working people has been threatened. The living conditions there on occasions have been so unpleasant the people want to move out but, naturally, who is going to buy their properties from them?

So the working man finds that his lunch pail is affected because the value of his property declines.

I submit, sir, that a great deal—far too much—emphasis is placed on the difficulties in the situation. There have been difficulties; there will continue to be difficulties. But any business man, just like any other individual, is going to avoid costs if he can. That is not casting any reflection on him, but he is going to avoid them if he can.

If he is creating a problem of pollution, he is going to say it is too difficult to cure it; it is going to cost too much, he is going to go out of business, the lunch pail will be affected. That is the old threat used in almost every context from minimum wages to labour relations to smoke abatement or control of water pollution. I do not think we should put too much stress on that argument.

I think we should look at the problem from the positive point of view, that in most cases there are ways and means of alleviating it. That is the approach we should take. In this specific case of International Nickel I would submit to you, sir, that they could have done something about it long before they actually did. But they did not do anything about it until they found that it was profitable to do so.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to make certain comments and suggestions concerning a number of matters of interest perhaps to the Legislature and to the government.

The first of these points has to do with technical and technological education. I, for one, was delighted with the announcement of the $1 million technical training programme a year ago and I am glad to say that the announcement of this programme has taken very dramatic effect, certainly in my part of the country.

For instance, it was just a few days ago that I noticed this page, the front page of the second section of the London Free Press. I do not think this is likely typical, but certainly pages like this appear not infrequently detailing the enormous expansion in technical training facilities in western Ontario. But this is remarkable. The headline on the page is:

O.K. NEW VOCATIONAL SCHOOL TO SERVE WALKERTON AREA

The Department of Education has granted permission to school boards in Walkerton and area to go along with plans for a 17-room vocational school addition to Walkerville district high school.

Here is the second article on the page:

SEE APPROVAL FOR HANOVER VOCATIONAL SITE

The Ontario Department of Education will approve the location of a proposed vocational wing to Hanover district high school. The wing will provide vocational training for students for three community areas.

Here is another article on the same page, the headline of:

20 SCHOOL ADDITIONS SEEN SAVING AREA MONEY

Taxpayers in the eight municipalities in the Clinton District Collegiate Institute school area were told at a meeting that a proposed vocational addition would save them money. Total cost of construction would be borne by federal and provincial grants.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, there is no more important matter before us here in the Legislature than this matter of technical training.

On Wednesday, May 24, in the London Free Press there was a Canadian Press dispatch, a few paragraphs of which I would like to read. It is a Canadian Press report written by John Byrd, datelined Ottawa. The headline is SETTLERS SEEM BETTER EDUCATED THAN THE AVERAGE CANADIAN.

A survey of 7,000 immigrants who became citizens in 1959 shows a generally higher level of education than the average Canadian, relatively little unemployment and a rapid increase in annual income.

The survey shows: (1) Few of the immigrants surveyed had any great trouble finding jobs after their arrival and keeping them; (2) On the average they were better educated than Canadians; (3) They tended to stick at their jobs longer and their annual income increased more quickly than the average Canadian; (4) As with native Canadians, however, immigrants without crafts and skills had difficulty getting and holding jobs.

The average period of unemployment for the group was under two weeks a year. Immigrants with skills and professions had only 3.2 weeks of unemployment over a six-year period. Those with less than eight years of schooling averaged 16 weeks out of work in that period.

There was an interesting article in Time magazine, I have not got the date but it was some time last spring, which said in part:

For U.S. industry the rise in unemployment to new highs last week underlined a startling paradox. All around the nation, even in such critical jobless areas as Detroit, jobs are going begging for lack of skilled workers to fill them. Industry is hard put to find enough trained craftsmen but the problem is getting worse. For every hundred skilled workers that the nation had in 1955 it will need 122 in 1965 and 145 in 1975.

It goes on to talk about one very important aspect of technical training, namely, that in the United States, and I think this is true in Canada, it lacks a certain prestige in the minds of both students and parents and this diverts young men and women into courses of training that do not fit them for a particular job on graduation.

The article suggests:

High scholastic requirements can give the schools new prestige. In a Chicago vocational school, assistant principal Frank J. Daley says, "We have completely upset the idea that only stoops should go to vocational school. It is now recognized that a poor student is a poor craftsman." The school superintendent of Cleveland believes that vocational high schools are on their way out altogether; that the need is for a system of junior colleges and technical institutions providing training for industry advanced well beyond high school levels. Industry today is demanding greater skills than we can produce in high schools. One big obstacle to all training programmes is the prevailing view among parents that a blue-collared technician has a less desirable job than a white-collar worker, even if he earns more money. Industry has done little to counteract it.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. members of this House and other civic-minded leaders could have an enormous influence on the future success of young men and women if they would on every opportunity stress the importance of these children and young men and women getting more schooling and better training. It seems to me that we would be doing the young people concerned a great favour if we did everything possible to direct them into vocational courses of study.

I am glad to say that in the London area we have made quite a lot of progress in this direction.

A few months ago the grade 13 technical school, at H. B. Beal Tech, was accepted at Ryerson Institute here in Toronto as being the equivalent of first-year Ryerson. Whereas a year ago they only had about eight or ten students in their grade 13 tech, this increased prestige—and I might add it was accompanied by a tightening up of the curriculum by the addition of engineering faculty members and by the addition of improved equipment, the whole course was strengthened—and as a result of this, Mr. Speaker, this year they have 35 or 40 members. My hope is that grade 13 tech in London will continue to succeed and that it will be possible, indeed essential, for a Ryerson-type institute to be built in London some time in the future.

May I speak for a moment or two about mental health and the facilities which this government is providing. There have been three or four new mental health institutions opened in our part of the country during the past six months, the largest of which was at Cedar Springs.

I am glad to say that the Ontario hospital right in London has been substantially improved. They have large quantities of new furniture which make the institution more agreeable to the patients being treated and which I suggest will have an efficacious result in the healing of these patients. They have provided additional service facilities at considerable cost. I am assured just very recently, by the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that the architectural plans for the new Ontario hospital to be located in London are going ahead as scheduled and that no undue delay is anticipated.

By the way, this new hospital has been promised to the citizens of London for 30 years, starting with Premier Hepburn. It has been almost an annual thing. I am most anxious, Mr. Speaker, that there should be no further delay and I have every confidence that the hon. Minister of Health will push these plans and this new building to the best of his ability.

I have a resolution in my hand from the city of London dated May 17, 1961, that the provincial hon. Minister of Health and the Hospital Services Commission be asked to give consideration to an amendment of the regulations under The Hospital Services Commission Act to broaden the coverage under such regulations to provide that insured persons discharged from active treatment hospitals shall be covered under the plan for the cost of drugs and nursing care required by such persons while undergoing recovery from the illness for which they had been confined in hospital for a post-hospital period of approximately 15 days, or such time as may be considered desirable or necessary by the discharging hospital authorities; and that copies be provided to the following members, et cetera.

This idea has great merit and I would like to support it. Without question, humanitarian doctors are putting patients in hospital and keeping patients in hospital longer than is necessary because they know these patients cannot pay for the drug bill if they remain out of hospital. I cannot blame the doctors for that. It is perfectly understandable to me that a man who has dedicated his life to the care of sick people would not want to injure these people, particularly in the lower income brackets.

But it has a most unfortunate result, as hon. members know. It means that hospital beds are plugged up—they have waiting lists for them—that extensive new bed facilities must be created by the taxpayers and by the insurance premium payers in this province. I think that it might even save the people of this province money if the city of London resolution which I have read were adopted. I am most hopeful, sir, that the hon. Minister of Health and the government will give that resolution careful consideration.

During the meetings which we held on the cost of drugs, one of the witnesses mentioned an Australian drug plan. I wrote to the Australian High Commissioner in Ottawa and he was good enough to send me certain comments on the plan as well as a copy of the legislation and copy of the regulations. In his letter of March 14 he says as follows:

As from March 1, 1960, a charge of five shillings per prescription has been made to members of the general public; other than pensioners who are in possession of a pensioner medical service entitlement card, to whom no charge is made.

Prior to March, 1960, no charge was made to members of the general public for certain life-saving and disease-preventing drugs upon the presentation of a doctor's prescription. However, the list of drugs available as from March 1, 1960, is much more comprehensive.

The items available both to the pensioners and the general public are set out in the chemists' and doctors' booklets. The drugs are distributed by pharmaceutical chemists on the presentation of a doctor's prescription. Distribution is also made by approved hospitals to persons receiving treatment in or at those hospitals and in some isolated areas by approved doctors.

The chemist purchases his supply of drugs and claims reimbursement from this department at a price determined by the Minister of Health after consultation with the Federated Pharmaceutical Service Guild of Australia. An amount of five shillings is deducted in respect of each prescription, other than those written for pensioners who are in possession of a pensioner's medical service entitlement card where no deduction is made. He supports his claim on the department with a receipted prescription in each instance.

This is a programme that we would be well advised to investigate with some care. As a matter of fact, while it is not generally known, the Ontario government now is providing enormous quantities of drugs for tubercular and mental care and certain other specialized diseases. If a plan similar to the Australian plan—and I must confess I have not studied the legislation or the regulations, so I cannot advise this House to accept the Australian plan as is—but it seems to me that a plan similar to the Australian drug plan might fill a very serious need for health care in the lives of our citizens, while costing the taxpayers of the province very little indeed.

Going back to what I said a moment ago, it would relieve the pressure for new, expensive bed space.

I would like to commend the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) on the almost miraculous work which he and his staff did in setting up the new sales tax regulations and all the machinery which was necessary to implement the tax which this Legislature passed last spring. It was a fantastic job. There were certain minor difficulties, no question about it, but taken as a whole and considering the period of time available to him and to his staff, I think they did a most remarkable job and rendered a great service to the citizens of this province.

I do not want to detract from that compliment by pointing out one or two weaknesses now. As a matter of fact, the first of these weaknesses is being acted upon by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and his staff. That is the very serious difficulty which small variety shopkeepers and small counter lunch-room operators are experiencing in collecting the very small amounts of tax involved in their limited transactions. I know that one London lunchcounter owner calculated—charging his time at two dollars an hour—that it was costing him $35 a month to collect $18 in tax. And there are other examples which I could quote.

I am not going to spend a long time on it because I know that the hon. Provincial Treasurer is devising a formula method by which the proprietor's gross sales can be multiplied by a certain factor at the end of each month and tax paid on that basis, subject, of course, to regular audit and certain scrutiny by the department. This will completely eliminate those difficulties, if I am not mistaken.

I have a letter here from a distinguished businessman in the city of London dealing with another rather complicated complaint.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I am going to read it to the House in the hope that this problem can be solved as the last one which I discussed has been solved.

Dear Sir:

When discussing retail sales tax Act with you a month or so ago you suggested I might drop you a line, etc.—

Although we are a relatively small company we act as wholesaler, retailer, importer, manufacturers, lessor; and handle quite a quantity of machinery implements which are both unconditionally exempt and exempt for specific use. In addition, we also have one other branch in the province. We therefore manage to become involved in almost all aspects of the Act.

One of my main objections to the present administration of the Act is the use of the purchase exemption certificate. It seems to me that the use of this certificate is unnecessary and burdensome and could be easily replaced by the federal government's method of quoting permit number when purchasing items on an exempt basis.

As I now understand it, purchase exemption certificates do not become void within a time limit. We have every expectation that this Act will remain in force for many years to come and I foresee in the future a very real problem in trying to decide what to do with the purchase exemption certificates which are inactive but could become of use if a purchaser should renew from our company.

I now expect that in the normal course of events I shall have to maintain a file of somewhere between 700 and 1,000 exemption certificates which will be reasonably active as the years progress. How big this file will become I am afraid to calculate.

Where branches are involved it becomes almost necessary to maintain a complete duplication of the purchase exemption certificates at each branch. We have customers who will call into our branch for parts where they normally deal directly with head office and if they claim that they have a purchase exemption certificate on file with our head office, our branch can only accept their word for it. Where many branches are involved this must be a major problem.

On the other side of the transaction, we are already finding that when we wish to buy items from some of our suppliers on a non-exempt basis, that where we have an exemption certificate on file there is a tendency for the supplier to ship the goods tax exempt. This means that we must then go through the necessary procedures to have them re-invoice us.

That is the crux of his argument, I think it has validity.

I say that with some assurance because we are encountering a problem almost identical with this in our own company and I do hope that the hon. Provincial Treasurer and his staff find it possible to eliminate that problem.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, foreign affairs are the responsibility of the federal government and for that reason anything that is done in foreign lands or for foreign lands must be considered Ottawa's responsibility. That does not mean, of course, that this Legislature cannot take an interest in one or two aspects of foreign relations, any more than it means that the citizen cannot take an interest in some foreign programme which attracts his support.

I am very glad to be able to tell this House that the Ontario government has undertaken to sponsor ten African students. This is of personal interest to me because the London Chapter of the African Students Foundation has been good enough to invite me to their meetings and to keep me posted on their progress. I think it is a wonderful thing that the Ontario government has gone ahead with this.

And by the way, Mr. Speaker, I have never heard or seen this news in the newspapers. I think this is just one of the hundreds of things this government has undertaken without expecting to reap any reward in the way of public relations or anything else.

I have seen absolutely nothing about it in the papers nor have I been advised by anybody in the government about it. I have this information from the minutes of a meeting of the African Students Foundation, London Chapter, dated September 8, 1961. It is interesting to me to see—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Could I ask the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, what the government role is in that? It was my understanding this was organized by a group of private people. They worked very hard at it, made substantial contributions; perhaps there have been some government grants but I have not heard about them.

Mr. White: Well, I will be glad to answer that question. This London chapter was founded as an independent group initially by a very able, talented and vigorous high school teacher in London by the name of Mr. Donald Simpson. He had been in Africa as part of the "Operation Crossroads" and he came back to London, very excited about the idea of helping underdeveloped countries.

He spoke to service clubs and to his amazement and delight people came forward and said, how can we help you? And they organized this with a number of other Londoners. They have since associated with other chapters across the province and their whole idea is to help underdeveloped countries on a people to people basis.

They are not asking the government to take them over, that is not the idea at all, but they are seeking sponsors and I am glad to say that the Ontario government, through the goodness of its heart, through a recognition of its wide responsibilities, has undertaken to pay the way for 10 of these African students.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. White: If the hon. members opposite are suggesting that the government should take over this association, I know that it would meet with very firm resistance from the people who are dedicating their lives to it.

Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with three of 14 matters which I thought would be of interest to the House but, disappointing as it may be to my hon. friends opposite, I am going to hold the balance of these for the budget debate after the recess.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, we will proceed on Monday with some of the second readings on the order paper and with the Throne Debate. I intend to call night sessions on Tuesday and Thursday nights of next week.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, when is it the intention to call the estimates of The Department of Insurance?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I had not really considered it, but I will give the hon. member notice in any event.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.58 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the east gallery, students from Havergal College, Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Election Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Mr. Wintermeyer moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-61

Mr. Wintermeyer moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Retail Sales Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if notice of this bill was given? There is a notice of a bill entitled An Act to amend The Retail Sales Act, 1960-61 on the order paper, but I do not see any notice of a bill to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask for your ruling on this point, sir. As I understand the rules, notice of bills must be given, and the title given in the notice must be exactly the same as the title of the bill, which is not the case here.

Mr. Speaker: It is presumed by the Speaker to be the same bill.

THE MILK INDUSTRY ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask the hon. Minister to explain this bill, please?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This bill, Mr. Speaker, is to clarify certain points in the Milk Industry bill and to provide for the collection of fees for testing and grading of milk by departmental officials. It is also designed to assist in bringing the co-operative trucking of milk into line with the requirements of The Public Commercial Vehicles Act under The Department of Transport. It will go to the committee on agriculture.

ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, ONTARIO VETERINARY COLLEGE AND MACDONALD INSTITUTE

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled An Act respecting Ontario Agricultural College, The Ontario Veterinary College and the MacDonald Institute.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE OF ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Provide for the Establishment of the Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister explain the nature of the last two bills?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The purpose of the first bill has to do with the federation of the Agricultural College, the Veterinary College and MacDonald Institute at Guelph to bring them under one administration and co-ordinate all of the administrations there. The bill will be dealt with on second reading and will be sent to the committee on agriculture.

The second bill has to do with research; it co-ordinates all of the research projects in the Ontario Agricultural College—and every other research project in the province of Ontario dealing with agriculture—under the agricultural research institute; it will be dealt with in second reading and sent to the committee on agriculture.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to make a statement to this House which I believe to be of great concern and importance to the people of this province.

On November 29, 1961, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) delivered a long address in which he covered at great length various matters concerning allegations of organized crime; in addition, he made what I consider to be very serious charges against certain people. On the following day I informed the House that it would be my objective to ensure that our laws are administered with integrity, fairness, with vigour and justice. I also informed the House that I would have a complete analysis of this statement made, and that I would compare the statement with the action which had been taken in and out of the courts. I said further, that upon the results of this personal investigation I would make my judgment and recommend a course of action to the government.

A detailed study of this statement indicates that it contains little, if any, evidence that has not already been uncovered by the work of the provincial police. Certainly the larger percentage of the material of any importance comes from police and prosecution files, dossiers and briefs. In this material are matters which might or might not be evidence in a court of law. Also included among the material is a great deal of background information compiled for police and prosecution use which might or might not be true and a good deal of which cannot be considered as even remotely constituting evidence which would be admissible in a court of law.

An examination of most police and prosecution dossiers would reveal plenty of information of this type which is so necessary to the police in conducting their work of investigation—all of which must be examined with great care when the question of prosecution arises.

I would like to sketch very briefly the facts surrounding the gathering and documenting of this information by the police. I must point out that there are cases presently before the courts to which I will refer, and which involve to a very great extent, matters mentioned and charges made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Many of these matters, therefore, are under consideration by the courts of this province. One of the rules of debate in this House is that a member may not allude to matters awaiting a judicial decision. Matters that are before our courts should not be discussed, in order that we may preserve the fundamental rule of our criminal law: that every individual is innocent until proven guilty. Due attention to this rule places myself and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) under very serious disability in giving explanations, even though this rule apparently imposes no responsibility upon the hon. leader of the Opposition.

However, I will describe briefly the course of events and will avoid specific references which might be prejudicial to any matter presently being considered by our courts. Early in February, 1960—as a result of certain information which reached the ears of the provincial police—the Commissioner of the provincial police detailed Provincial Constable George Scott to conduct certain undercover investigations in connection with an investigation of gambling activities. During the course of these investigations, Constable Scott associated with many individuals suspected of being involved in criminal activity, and to record his experiences he kept a diary. He obtained certain evidence, as a result of which a charge of bribery was laid against one Constable Wright on May 27. On June 27, 1960, Wright was committed for trial and the investigation was continued.

On July 22, 1960, as a result of these continuing investigations, charges of keeping a common gaming house were laid against certain other persons. The police investigation continued past this time.

In December, 1960—as a result of further information that had been received—a charge of conspiracy to bribe was directed to be laid against certain of these individuals. This charge came about as a result of further intensive police investigation, subsequent to the laying of the charges of keeping a common gaming house. An independent Crown prosecutor was appointed to conduct prosecution of these charges.

The preliminary hearing was held between March 21 and 27, 1961, and the accused on the more serious charge, namely, conspiracy to bribe, were committed for trial. This trial took place in the Supreme Court of Ontario before the Honourable Mr. Justice Spence and a jury, between May 19 and June 9, 1961, when the accused were acquitted.

On June 12, 1961, it was announced that an appeal would be launched against the verdict of acquittal and on June 29, a notice of appeal was prepared, served and filed. One might expect that the appeal in this matter would be heard some time early in January.

I might also point out that there are other counts in the indictment still outstanding against these accused persons, which will be dealt with after the disposition of the Crown appeal.

I give this history of the investigation, the charges, and the court procedure in these cases so that we may all understand very clearly just what action is presently being taken. I would point that the original investigations were commenced on the instructions of the Commissioner of the provincial police in February, 1960. As a result of these investigations, Mr. W. B. Common, the Deputy Attorney-General, advised the hon. Attorney-General of the evidence that had been obtained; the investigation then continued, with the decision to lay charges being reached—on May 21, 1960—to issue on May 27. This decision was made by the hon. Attorney-General upon the advice of his legal staff.

I might point out that the diaries referred to in the statement of the hon. leader of the Opposition were compiled by Police Constable George Scott, who had been directed to carry out this work by his superiors. I would point out also that the work which he was doing was of the most dangerous nature to himself, personally. The notes which he put in these diaries were bound to include some things which were factual, some things which were pure gossip, and some which were boasting. The people with whom he was associating and investigating use, as their stock in trade, names, assertions of acquaintanceship and indications of familiarity. And yet, to the investigator, all these matters had to be recorded—not as matters of truth in themselves—but as a record of the mere fact of conversation, and in the hope that from them would be developed and sifted evidence which might be used in court.

In connection with the ordering of the prosecutions, I can say that the Deputy Attorney-General advised the hon. Attorney-General, early in May, to lay charges as a result of the information received. There was, however, a request that the investigation be continued and, therefore, the laying of the charge was deferred until May 27.

This was done upon the recommendation of, and with the full knowledge of, senior members of the legal department of the hon. Attorney-General. They were fully aware of the contents of the diaries and were fully aware that these diaries would be turned over to an independent Crown counsel—with instructions to use the information in the diaries as he saw fit—to prosecute the accused.

In the course of the preparation for trial, certain junior solicitors were engaged to assist the Crown counsel. I am satisfied that it is from one or more of these solicitors—who were engaged and retained on a highly confidential basis—that a great deal of information was handed to the hon. leader of the Opposition. I do not intend to elaborate on the ethics of this conduct other than to say that it did happen. Furthermore, I would point out that, when certain charges were heard in the preliminary hearing, the unrevised and uncensored contents of the diary were made available to defence counsel, and within a very short time certain parts of these diaries became common knowledge and gossip, and reached the ears of various people. I can only point out that, as a result of these events, information which was actually the result of Crown investigations going back for some very considerable period, is now being used in an attempt to impugn the integrity of the very persons under whose direction the investigations were conducted, and under whose direction the material was gathered and the dossiers were prepared.

I would like to make clear my own personal position in this matter. I have been given the responsibility of setting up a new administration in the province and I have no intention of disregarding charges such as have been levelled at two of the departments of the government, and at the senior administrative personnel of those departments. On the other hand, I must bear in mind that investigations into the conduct of public officials and police officers can be very destructive of morale. In addition, such investigations can be used to disclose to the criminal elements of our community, information and facts which would otherwise be denied them. This aspect of the matter must be borne in mind.

It is the intention of the government, as indicated by Bill No. 24—which is An Act to amend The Police Act—to introduce a new body into the administration of justice, to be known as the Ontario Police Commission. While I do not intend to debate the principles of this bill, I would like to refer to the broad aspects of what we intend to achieve, and how this body will affect the broad pattern of law enforcement in this province.

The new Ontario Police Commission, as contemplated, will be composed of three persons appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council with power to investigate, inquire into and report upon the conduct of, or the performance of duties of, any policemen in the province and the general administration of any police force. It also has power to carry out general investigation. The commission is designed to be completely independent of any control by any department of government—along with its obligation to report yearly to the Attorney-General, to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and to this assembly. In addition, this commission will have all the powers that may be conferred under The Public Inquiries Act.

It is our intention that this commission will examine on a continuing basis, over a period of time, all matters having to do with crime in Ontario and all matters having to do with the administration of the various police forces. One can see the advantages in such a body. In the first place, it is completely free from all external influence and will operate on a continuing basis over a period of years and thus will develop a knowledge of the organization of our police and the enforcement of our laws over a long period of time. In addition, it will develop a continuing knowledge of the broader trends of criminal activity—not only in this jurisdiction, but in the jurisdictions that surround us.

Despite the obvious advantages which will accrue as a result of the creation of this body, I am none the less very concerned, as I have said, about the charges that have been made in this House. I am concerned because of my position, as I have mentioned, with a new administration. I am additionally concerned because I feel that these charges have served to disturb public opinion, and to create in the minds of the people of the province some doubts and fears regarding the extent of crime in this province.

A week ago last Thursday I stated that it would be my objective that the administration of justice in the operation of our law enforcement agencies—such as our police forces—would be operated with integrity, and on the highest planes of both justice and efficiency. I have no intention of altering these objectives in any way. I have received two letters which I intend to read to you and which clearly express the concern of certain senior personnel. The first letter reads as follows:

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO 2,
DECEMBER 6, 1961.

THE HONOURABLE JOHN P. ROBERTS, Q.C.
PRIME MINISTER OF ONTARIO,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

MY DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

With reference to the recent statements in the Legislature reflecting upon the honesty and integrity of senior officials of this department, with respect, I cannot urge too strongly that an inquiry be held at the earliest possible moment.

It is my opinion, however, that consideration must be given to the fact that the prosecution in question is still sub judice.

Yours faithfully,
(signed)
W. B. COMMON
Deputy Attorney-General.

The second letter reads as follows:

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO 2,
DECEMBER 6, 1961.

THE HONOURABLE JOHN P. ROBERTS, Q.C.
PRIME MINISTER OF ONTARIO,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

MY DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

In view of the statements made in the Legislature at the present session clearly reflecting upon the integrity of senior officials of the Attorney-General's department, I would, as Director of Public Prosecutions, urge that an inquiry into the matter be held as soon as possible.

Yours faithfully,
(signed)
W. C. BOWMAN,
Director of Public Prosecutions

I might say, in considering the insinuations and charges of the hon. leader of the Opposition—and, for that matter, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—I have had to bear in mind the necessity for immediate and complete investigation.

I have also come to the opinion that while the Ontario Police Commission, which I have described to hon. members will serve a very great purpose over a continuing period of time, it will not serve to dispel the worries and fears which I feel exist among our people as a result of the many charges and accusations.

I therefore feel that in order to discharge my own responsibility to the people of the province and to satisfy myself in these early days of a new administration, and to ensure to all of us that the standards of conduct and investigation and administration of justice in all its phases are the highest in our province, I have decided to establish a Royal commission and I so recommend to the Government. I have asked the Hon. Mr. Justice

Roach and he has agreed to act as commissioner.

The terms of the commission are as follows:

To inquire into and report upon

1. the administration of the laws and regulations regarding the incorporation and operations of social clubs, having regard to allegations made by the hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech of November 29, 1961.

2. any improper relationships—as alleged by the hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech of November 29, 1961—between senior officials of the legal staff of The Department of the Attorney-General and any person or persons—and more particularly relating to

- (a) the termination of investigations;
- (b) the suppression of evidence;
- (c) the payment of money.

3. the extent of crime in Ontario and the sufficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it.

Mr. Justice Roach is a man of great ability, of great and varied experience and a man in whom the people of Ontario may have every confidence. I will welcome the results of his investigations and I hope that the hon. members opposite will bring forth their charges—and any information they may have to substantiate them—in order that we may obtain and view all the facts of these matters.

I would like to repeat that I feel it is of the utmost importance that there be no doubt in anyone's mind in this province concerning the honesty and integrity of our officials, the sufficiency of our laws and the adequacy of our enforcement agencies to deal with the criminal elements that exist in every society. More particularly must we have confidence that we can deal with any criminal element that may choose to attempt to cross our borders from another jurisdiction. We can all be certain that a most complete and impartial investigation will take place, and that the necessary machinery will be established to deal with these matters in an efficient and complete way. I can assure the hon. members of this House and the people of the province that I and this administration will be satisfied with nothing but the best in the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order. We will welcome the report of this Royal commission, and if any action is necessary as a result of the report, we will be standing ready and able to take it. And if these many accusations and imputations fall short we will leave to the court of public opinion the decision as to their propriety. Our purpose and intent is clear, and we will abide by the result.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) for his question.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, are you suggesting that I am limited to one question only in conjunction with it?

Then, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South), the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance—that is, the policy of this government to cope with organized crime in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Wintermeyer moves, seconded by Mr. Oliver, the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance—that is, the policy of this government to cope with organized crime in Ontario. I have had no notice of this motion, so therefore, I—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this motion specifically does not require notice.

Mr. Speaker: I had not got that far. I said I had no notice of the motion, and as the hon. member points out I do not require one, but it is possible that I could rule the motion out of order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that the motion I have made is very much in order. Firstly, as you said, no notice is required; and, secondly, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great public urgency and importance; a matter, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines).

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Minister of Mines, I have never in my life taken a position to which I am more dedicated and you are one man who will not distract me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that on November 29, I did outline a request for a Royal commission, and specifically, Mr. Speaker, I outlined six conditions that I suggested were prerequisite—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would point out to the hon. members of the House that, in these matters of moving the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, in the first place we know that no member shall speak to such motions for more than 10 minutes. And, of course, it mentions here in our book of rules that a motion to adjourn the House or the debate shall always be in order, except that, without leave of the House, no such motion for the adjournment of the House shall be made until the orders of the day have been entered upon—unless a member rising in his place shall propose to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, which matter has previously been submitted to, and approved by, the Speaker. I therefore rule the motion out of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, before the orders—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Look, George, will you sit down for a while?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We will deal with this matter.

An hon. member: It is quite in order.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, sir, if you would give me your indulgence on this for a moment. I looked into the authorities on this matter and it is quite clear; first, Mr. Speaker, as you have pointed out, the subject matter of the motion need only be handed to you in writing; this the hon. leader of the Opposition has done. However, Sir Erskine May says quite clearly that upon such a motion—usually with the indulgence of the House, and your permission, sir—the person who moves such a motion is given an opportunity to make a few remarks in connection with its character. Now, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, just to reconsider your decision—and, permit the hon. leader of the Opposition to make a few personal remarks.

An hon. member: Away out of order!

Mr. Sopha: How would you know?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. G. Laverne (Russell): That is right.

Mr. Speaker: I state once again that I consider the motion out of order and unacceptable. I consider, too, that plenty of time has been given to this matter and since the whole question was the appointment of a commission it seems to have been dealt with on that basis.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, with respect—with great respect—I must challenge your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member like to challenge the ruling of the Speaker?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker: As many as are in favour of the Speaker's ruling will please say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

The Speaker's ruling was upheld on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) if he has a question.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to make a statement to this House with respect to certain allegations made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) on Friday, December 1, relative to the Big Duck Lake area, Thunder Bay district, with particular reference to KRNO Mines Limited. I have thoroughly investigated the matter of the geological studies undertaken in that area and I can assure the House that they were made in the ordinary course of business and procedures. Every year geological field bodies are sent to various parts of the province by The Ontario Department of Mines.

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. The Opposition does not want to hear the truth. All they want to do is make allegations.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I understood the hon. Minister wished to ask a question. Now I realize that there may be a question to be asked of the previous speaker and I think to keep the business of the House in order we should proceed on that basis. However, I was not eager to let the ambition of the Minister go entirely unrewarded, and I see my view is not unanimous at this time.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I would like to ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), arising out of his statement; this would be the appropriate opportunity if he would permit me to ask it. I did not have an opportunity because the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I state my point of order?

Mr. Speaker: An hon. member can state his point of order at any time.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the point of order that I want to make is this: If a Royal commission has been appointed, then the matter that the hon. Minister of Mines is alluding to is, presumably, sub judice and I would like your ruling now in respect of whether or not any member can talk on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: I will deal with that matter when we come to it. At this time I would say that if an hon. member wishes to ask a question arising out of the statement of the hon. Prime Minister, that is perfectly in order at this time.

Mr. Bryden: May I proceed with my question, Mr. Speaker? I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister if in view of the fact that the announcement he has just made represents—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has a question which is perfectly in order.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, sir. My question to the hon. Prime Minister is this: If, in view of the fact that the statement he has just made—and the announcement of policy he has just made—represents a complete reversal of the policy which the hon. Attorney-General stubbornly adhered to throughout—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member knows perfectly well that a question is for the purpose of seeking information, not for the purpose of giving it. If the hon. member cannot observe this rule I will not observe the hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, sir. My question is this—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, may I carry on?

Mr. Bryden: Is it to be anticipated that the resignation of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) will be forthcoming?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—when I was so rudely interrupted—I wished to make a statement to this House with respect to certain allegations made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) on Friday, December 1, relative to the Big Duck Lake area, Thunder Bay district, with particular reference to KRNO Mines Limited. I have thoroughly investigated the matter of the geological studies undertaken in that area—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order! We are going to consider all statements relative to the matters mentioned by the hon. leader of the Opposition and by the hon. Prime Minister as sub judice at this time; a Royal commission has been appointed and therefore such matters are considered sub judice at this point.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question which seeks information, directed to the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman).

Interjections by hon members.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question; do I not have the floor, sir?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Hon. members will recognize the speaker and realize that we are trying to do business which is before the House. I am quite sure that the hon. Minister's statement has something to do with the matter immediately before the House and I am assuming that what the hon. member (Mr. Troy) is rising for, is something new—am I right about that?

Mr. Troy: It is, sir.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I wanted only to say to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) that the statement that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) is attempting to make concerns only administrative procedure in his department and does not concern any of these matters that we have discussed in either the address of the hon. leader of the Opposition or in anything that I had to say. I just tell him that as a matter of information in order to get down to the business of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has been very kind in his explanation but I would ask him simply this: Does the Royal commission that he has appointed limit itself—in respect to the social clubs and the department of the hon. Attorney-General and the department of the hon. Minister of Mines—to the so-called allegations that I made on November 29?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: For the information of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I will read the terms of reference again, Mr. Speaker.

There are three paragraphs and the third one is: The extent of crime in Ontario and the sufficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is the third one. This is a point of great seriousness to the House. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has referred to the third observation or paragraph. My interpretation of the first two paragraphs was that they were limited to the so-called allegations that I have made. Now is that right or wrong, Mr. Speaker? Surely we have a right to ask that question in specific terms?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members realize that they do have the privilege of asking questions; hon. members are also privileged not to answer those questions.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether commission counsel has been appointed and, if so, his identity?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, he has not yet been appointed.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will there be an investigating branch associated with, or attached to, the Royal commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, these matters will be dealt with—

Mr. Wintermeyer: They are of the greatest importance, Mr. Speaker, and should be determined now.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question. It is not as cold where I was, as it was in Port Arthur. My question is to the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman), the chief commissioner of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario: What is the policy of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario in regard to part-time employment of personnel in retail outlets at any time—and particularly during the Christmas rush? My second question is, does the board in its policy comply with the provisions of the veterans' preference as permitted in Ontario?

Mr. Lavergne: Would the hon. member repeat that? I did not hear it.

Mr. Troy: The question was not directed to the hon. member for Russell.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question, but I thought that question No. 1 was somewhat ambiguous because it refers to a policy in regard to part-time employment in retail outlets at any time—and particularly the Christmas rush. I wanted to know what specific question he really wanted answered, such as the recruitment policy or remuneration, etc.

I attempted to reach the hon. member some time early this afternoon to get him to clarify it and I spoke to him before the orders. He agreed to ask a specific question along the lines I suggested to him. If he cares to do that now, it is all right with me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Troy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The second question, of course, had to do with veterans' preference. I knew that the hon. Minister had the answer to that because I know there was a change in the post of chief commissioner; I thought there might also be a change in policy in that regard. The first question was prompted by the fact that I find in certain areas—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I was trying to do the courteous thing to the hon. member and give him an opportunity to ask a specific question that could be answered specifically. Apparently he wants to get up and make a speech on that. In that case I will say that I will take question No. 1 as notice and that if the hon. member wishes to clarify it at some future date I would be glad to give a specific answer.

In respect of his question No. 2: Does the board in its policy comply with the provisions of veterans' preference—my officials tell me that the answer to that is "Yes."

Mr. Troy: I will clarify the first question then. The hon. Minister asked me to clarify the first question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I was going to clarify the question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would ask the hon. members when the Speaker is on his feet, that this House give order to the Speaker's chair. Hon. members will see the difficulty we get into when we have explanations of questions, rather than direct questions at this point. Certainly the hon. member could ask more questions tomorrow, but at this point the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has the floor.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to direct a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), who I believe is the proper person to answer on behalf of the government.

In view of reports appearing in Saturday's press to the effect that the automobile insurance rates charged in Ontario by private companies will be increased by as much as 15 per cent in some cases and by an average of 8 per cent effective January 1, 1962, will the government indicate if it is prepared to take action before the Christmas recess of the Legislature to prevent rates from being increased over their present level until there has been an opportunity to consider the recommendation made by the select committee on automobile insurance in its interim report that machinery for regulating rates be established?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there is no report of the select committee before the House at the present time.

Mr. Bryden: This report is public knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: But I would say this: I think perhaps I might outline the normal procedures with respect to rates under section 335 of The Insurance Act:

The superintendent may require a rating bureau to file notice of changes in its schedule of rates.

Each year the Canadian Underwriters' Association, which actually represents or is composed of what is known as the so-called warrant companies—doing something less, I believe, than 50 per cent of the total business—these people forward to the superintendent a copy of the statistics prepared annually on all automobile insurance written in Canada divided by territories in the various rating classes.

The latest statistics filed cover policies written in the five years, 1956 to 1960, which show a steady increase in the average cost of public liability and property damage claims. On the basis of these statistics they have discussed with the superintendent of insurance the changes in automobile rates considered necessary for 1962 in the different automobile classifications. He has considered with care the proposed rate changes and the statistical basis therefor, and he is of the opinion that the proposed rate changes are justified by the experience.

It is anticipated that the adjusted rates will be no more than sufficient, according to his statement—that is the superintendent's statement—to allow the companies a profit on automobile insurance of a maximum of 2½ per cent of premiums, and in the superintendent's opinion the proposed rates are not excessive.

It might be pointed out that some 30 years ago, section 339 of The Insurance Act was in a series of sections, unproclaimed sections, they never have been proclaimed certain sections. In practice the submissions by this board of the Canadian Underwriters' Association of proposed rates is made to the superintendent and analyzed by him. But section 339 of The Insurance Act, which has never been proclaimed, allows the superintendent to order an adjustment of automobile insurance rates whenever it is found by him that such rates are excessive, inadequate, unfairly discriminatory or otherwise unreasonable. Under the present arrangement, however, whereby the Canadian Underwriters' Association in effect gets approval to the changes, this proclamation has never been considered necessary. That is the position, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate it is again a matter of pride for me that I do so on behalf of the good people of Durham county—that historic riding which has played such an important part, and is playing such an important part in the economic and cultural life of Ontario.

May I first take the opportunity of congratulating the mover, the hon. member for Toronto-St. George (Mr. Lawrence), and the seconder, the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton), for the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Their speeches are typical of those we are accustomed to hearing from the government benches, Mr. Speaker, in that they were refreshing, informative, challenging and delivered in a very capable manner. I congratulate them both very sincerely.

May I also at this time, Mr. Speaker, join with the other hon. members of this House in expressing my sincere regrets on the loss to this Legislature in the deaths of Mr. Maloney, Mr. Nixon, and Mr. Wren—three hon. members for whom I had great respect and whose passing since we last met, breaks that chain of friendship that transcends all political ties and imposes a loss on all of us; a loss we share in sincere sympathy with their families.

It is always a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to show my appreciation to those who serve this Legislature in important roles. It gives me great pleasure at this time, therefore, to once more express my thanks to you for your kindness and your thoughtfulness on so many occasions and to congratulate you on the dignified and unbiased manner in which you continue to fulfil the duties of your high and important office.

It is also a pleasure at this time to have the opportunity of congratulating all those who have assumed new and important duties of office. I will not take the time of this House to congratulate them individually but in offering my felicitations collectively, for the recognition which has come to them as a result of their ability and their services, I would echo the sentiments expressed so capably by the mover and seconder of the motion of thanks in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

May I, however, be granted the privilege of expressing my sincere congratulations to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on his election by the largest and most enthusiastic convention ever held in this province, to the most responsible and important position he now holds. His fine record in the service of Her Majesty's forces, his dedicated service to the people of his riding and the capable manner in which he has fulfilled his duties of office have won for him the respect and admiration of all.

The confidence which the rank and file of our party have placed in him, Mr. Speaker, will be reflected in the days to come, not only in continued support for the policies of this government but by support from areas which have not adhered to them in the past. In the changes which have taken place, Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed the passing of one era and the introduction of another.

In the passing of the former we pause to pay tribute to the then Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost), who, I am sure, wishes to be recognized as the unassuming but none the less devoted representative of Victoria. History will record his administration as one of unprecedented progress in the development of this province and his almost quarter-of-a-century of service to the people of Ontario, 12 years of which were as Prime Minister, is reflected in the physical expansion of our resources. The greatest monument to his outstanding leadership will be found, Mr. Speaker, not in the physical accomplishments, but in the enviable position he has established in the hearts and minds of the people of this province.

In the ushering in of a new administration we witness, I am sure, the advent of a new era of prosperity for this province under new and dynamic leadership. This debate always affords a private member an opportunity of expressing and reflecting in some measure the opinions and the ideas of the constituents whom he represents, and in the limited remarks which I wish to make I will endeavour to keep that in mind.

In doing so my task is made easier by the opinions expressed editorially and presswise by the various newspapers serving my riding. These include the Port Hope Guide, one of the few daily papers, Mr. Speaker, published in towns of that size; the Canadian Statesman of Bowmanville, regarded across Canada as one of the outstanding weeklies and winner of various awards over the years; the Orono Times and in addition the Oshawa Times, and the Peterborough Examiner, all of which provide excellent news coverage for that area.

Agriculture is still the basic industry of Durham, and my county has shared in the general rise of farm income in this province, Mr. Speaker, which has reached an overall total of some $883 million. When that amount is related to the income of industries associated with agriculture, the total would reach a figure double or triple that size.

The county of Durham is blessed by Providence with a great variety of soil and other conditions which lend themselves to the establishment of many branches of the industry. The healthy condition of agriculture in Durham is reflected not only in the high quality of agricultural products but in the strength of our farm organizations, the Federation of Agriculture, the Farmers Union, the junior farm groups, Durham County Tobacco Growers Association and others.

The members of these groups have recorded outstanding achievements in competition with other areas of the province. Durham county farmers realize the importance of marketing upon the future prosperity of the industry and they are appreciative of the government's legislation in this respect. Practically every branch of agriculture is in the process of forming marketing boards. The success of the hog marketing plan has pioneered this type of marketing with the result that the egg producers, the milk producers and the corn producers are now about to vote on similar plans.

Great credit is due to the former hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) and his department in respect to this form of legislation. The Co-operative Association Act, which will be introduced this session, will, I am sure, be of great assistance to the co-operative movement in Durham by assisting in the marketing and transportation of agricultural products.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I feel that every effort should be made to bring into closer relationship the compulsory form of marketing adopted by various commodity groups and the voluntary marketing policies of the co-operatives.

The tobacco industry, which has brought a great new source of income and employment to Durham county, is at the present time enjoying a period of prosperity, but like other branches of agriculture, faces certain problems in the future; not the least of these will be the effect of the growth of the European economic community on our export trade in that product.

The tobacco industry is faced at the present time with a demand on one hand for increased acreage by growers and prospective growers, and on the other by the necessity to provide markets for increased production. I would therefore urge the government, in co-operation with the federal administration, to give serious consideration to the proposals which I understand are to be made by the industry in that respect.

Ontario has been fortunate, Mr. Speaker, in having men of high calibre as Ministers of Agriculture. The contribution of the former hon. Minister in assistance to agriculture has been immeasurable, and the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is to be congratulated on choosing the hon. member for Middlesex North (Mr. Stewart) as a worthy successor. His ability and successful experience in the field of agriculture make him well qualified to fulfill the duties of that important portfolio.

I wish to thank and commend the former hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) and the present hon. Minister (Mr. Goodfellow) for the continued development of the highway system throughout our riding. The completion and opening of Highway 401 through the riding will, I hope, bring needed industrial and commercial development to that area.

The proposed establishment of service centres on Highway 401 is of concern to the business people of Port Hope, however; the general feeling is, Mr. Speaker, that they are a necessity and cannot be avoided. We have, however, numerous attractions in our lakeshore towns of interest to tourists, and I would ask that consideration be given to establishing facilities at these centres for the promotion of the attractions, in co-operation with the local boards of trade, chambers of commerce and other bodies. In this respect I am sure we have the full co-operation of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) and his department.

I appreciate the co-operation of the department in the erection of an overhead sign at the junction of Highway 401 and No. 2. This has been of great assistance in designating the cut-off at this point and in correcting a rather dangerous situation. Further consideration should be given, I feel however, to establishing a decelerating lane at this point in order to make it a perfectly safe intersection.

The further development of Highway 7A in the county from Highway 35 will provide an excellent artery to the northern part of the riding for the travelling public and residents of that area. The steadily increasing traffic on Highway 115 will warrant widening at least a section of that highway in the foreseeable future and no doubt the department is giving consideration to this fact at the present time.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the intersection of this highway and the Newcastle road a serious traffic hazard has developed. This will be intensified by the completion of the new Clarke district high school because this intersection is the crossing point for children going to the local school. It is also the pick-up point for the children going to another school in Bowmanville and it will be the focal point for the school buses serving the new district high school. I will be asking for assistance in remedying a situation which already has been the scene of three serious accidents.

I would also ask that consideration be given to improving the entrances from 115 to the village of Orono. Both of these entrances in my opinion, and in the opinion of the local people, are dangerous, particularly with the increased traffic on 115 and they are not in keeping with the flourishing business life of that beautiful village.

Last season saw the opening in Bowmanville, Mr. Speaker, of one of the finest local museums to be found anywhere in the province of Ontario, located in beautiful surroundings and made possible largely by the generosity of Mrs. Williams of that town. This museum houses an excellent display of pioneer life, much of it of such a unique character that it cannot be found elsewhere in the province.

I strongly recommend this fine tourist attraction when visiting the town of Bowmanville. The town has been assisted greatly in developing this project through the advice and financial assistance of The Department of Travel and Publicity.

In no field of our economic development has this government been more zealous than in the field of education. It is hard to realize the vast changes that are taking place to meet the requirements of a rapidly expanding school population and to maintain our position in the struggle for economic supremacy. Durham county has taken every advantage of the assistance offered by this government.

The past season saw the opening of several new elementary schools in the county through the consolidation of many one-room schools. In October of this year, the present hon. Prime Minister officially opened the new secondary school at Courtice, which has relieved crowded conditions at Bowmanville and has provided a modern and beautiful building for the education of the youth in that area.

As soon as an announcement was made that a programme of vocational training was to be introduced, to the cost of which the federal government would contribute 75 per cent and the provincial government 25 per cent, the enterprising citizens of Port Hope in conjunction with the Durham District High School board, immediately took action with the result that plans have been completed and approved for a new composite wing to the present secondary school in that town. This school will serve a large area, Mr. Speaker, and will provide four courses including a five-year course leading to university; a four-year course which will provide needed training for responsible business positions, a two-year terminal course for those planning to leave school at age 16, and a one-year occupational course for those who have not been promoted from grade 8.

This programme, Mr. Speaker, will do much in providing a maximum of education for our young people, consistent with their abilities and ambitions.

There is always a danger, Mr. Speaker, that in providing a programme such as this, there is a tendency on the part of many students to take the course which will require the least work. I am pleased to note that the department has taken the precaution in this respect to make each of these courses truly challenging. In other words, the courses are designed to fit the academic ability of the student but the amount of work required remains constant.

I am also pleased to see the introduction this term of a guidance programme in our elementary schools in grade seven and eight. I would suggest that this programme be directed also towards the parents, who must assume a great deal of the responsibility for the guidance of their children in these formative years.

I would also like to add a word of commendation, Mr. Speaker, for the work of The Department of Lands and Forests, particularly in respect to the continued development of the Darlington Provincial Park. This park, on the outskirts of Oshawa, and Bowmanville, is providing excellent recreational and camping facilities for thousands of visitors each season and its situation lends itself very readily to use as an area for winter sports as well.

I wish at this time, Mr. Speaker, to read into the record a letter which I have received from the Canadian chapter of the National Shade Tree Conference with respect to the spread of the Dutch elm disease.

MR. ALEX CARRUTHERS, M.P.P., QUEEN'S PARK.

DEAR SIR:

Today thousands of beautiful elm trees stand dead across the province due to the spread of Dutch elm disease. If these diseased trees are allowed to remain standing to be the host of the beetle which spreads the disease it is quite possible that the elm will disappear completely from our landscape. What a tragedy this would be.

With this problem before us the Canadian Chapter of the International Shade Tree Conference wish to appeal to you and to your colleagues to take whatever measures are necessary to prevent this loss to the people of this province. If all dead elms were removed and the wood destroyed, the elm beetle would have no place to reproduce. Reducing the number of elm bark beetles is the most important factor in controlling the spread of this disease.

The cost of removing dead elms in a community could become too great a burden, and it is because of this expense that many municipalities are not removing their dead elms, and each year the problem becomes more serious. If the communities could be assisted in meeting this cost the main obstacle would be removed in the control of this disease. It is the hope of this association and all who understand the value of our trees to the well-being of our people that our government will recognize the necessity to assist in saving the elm trees of Ontario.

I do wish to thank you for your interest in this problem.

Yours very truly,
J. HIMMEL,
President.

The destruction caused by this disease, Mr. Speaker, is the concern of all, but I am particularly concerned in this respect as the elm is one of the most common and most beautiful shade trees in our county, and I would ask therefore that every assistance be given to our municipalities in controlling this dread disease.

May I suggest that it could be very readily made part of a winter works programme, and a very fine example could be set by attacking the spread of this plague in the elms which add so much beauty to the grounds around many of our government institutions?

We in Durham county, Mr. Speaker, are deeply appreciative of the many forms of assistance provided by this government and I have referred to but a few of them. I should mention the substantial assistance given to the town of Bowmanville in the addition of a large new wing to the Memorial Hospital of that town; to the generous offers of assistance to the Port Hope Hospital Board in the building of a new hospital to serve that area. The building of a new hospital in Port Hope involves the sale and future use of the present hospital; and here again I would ask for the assistance of various departments of the government—in any way that they may be able to provide—in making use of this building which is still in excellent condition.

The vast majority of the people in my riding, Mr. Speaker, accept private enterprise as basic and indispensable to their well-being and progress, and in doing so they have demonstrated those qualities of citizenship and responsibility so requisite in the building of good community life. One of the interesting and exciting features of my riding is that it consists of people who differ widely in their backgrounds, in their ideas as to problems and in their methods of solving them. The variety of cultures, customs, crafts and ideals has resulted in a spirit of tolerance on the part of our people.

This is why I believe the county of Durham is a progressive county in which the freedom of ideas and the pooling of those ideas has prevented democratic stagnation. They are people who believe in good citizenship; they understand that good citizenship demands independence of thought and action. Although the welfare state, which our socialist friends so strongly proclaim, may be noble in its purpose, it does provide more and more of those things which men once provided for themselves.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): That is what they said about the hospital programme before they introduced it.

Mr. Carruthers: This includes, Mr. Speaker, the making of decisions for people which they once made for themselves, and the assumption of responsibilities which were once theirs. Such a system does something to the moral fibre of our people, which is not good. It takes away some of those qualities, Mr. Speaker, which have—down through the centuries—distinguished men from animals. Paternalism in government—such as our socialist friends propose so strongly, aims to elevate man socially and individually by protecting him; but in protecting him, it subdues him and robs him of those qualities of independence so necessary to good citizenship and to national survival. The building of a nation does not depend on a detailed blueprint or a master plan, it is founded on the spirit of its people, and if that spirit is subdued, so likewise will the nation be subdued.

The citizens of Durham county—as in other parts of this province—do not simply live and earn a living in their respective areas, but in their freedom of enterprise, within a free society, they have the opportunity of contributing to the community of which they are a part, and in that contribution they have achieved dignity and respect. The greatest weakness of socialism, I feel, Mr. Speaker, is that no individual—neither the leader or any of his followers—assumes any sense of responsibility or accountability. As has been so apparent on so many occasions in this Legislature, the blame is always put on someone else.

I am thankful, Mr. Speaker, that I represent a people who believe in and practice the spirit of free enterprise within a framework which provides security for those who—through no fault of their own—are unable to take advantage of the opportunities available.

We have seen what socialist planning can do to people in Saskatchewan where, in the past year, some 13,000 people left that province with few replacements. The majority of these people are coming to Ontario, where the social philosophy is one of opportunity based on reward for effort, rather than the negative pursuit of the welfare state.

Mr. Thomas: The hon. member is talking a lot of nonsense now.

Mr. Carruthers: The hon. member can speak after I am through. The state in which socialist planning puts more and more people on the public payroll, a state which resembles a hive of bees, in which—contrary to the natural law of the hive—the drones multiply and starve the workers, so that the idlers consume the food and the workers perish.

Mr. Thomas: Who wrote that?

Mr. Carruthers: I wrote it myself.

Mr. Thomas: I should have known the hon. member wrote it himself.

Mr. Carruthers: Thanks. I firmly believe that no government can operate business as efficiently as private enterprise. Every time governments start experimenting in the business field the victim of their experiment is the public. This was clearly illustrated on more than one occasion in the province of Saskatchewan.

Private enterprise today pays most of the taxes, it provides most of the jobs, it has done most to raise wages, and has given us all our factories and our jobs. It has built the ships that ply our waters, it has developed the railways that span our continent, it develops inventors and builders of business through the free association of ideas. It originated the principles of efficiency so vital in the operation of any business. It has done most to lower costs and prices through competition. It alone can raise the standard of living, and it alone is the hope of our people. We are going to see in the days to come, Mr. Speaker, that political philosophy is going to crystallize into two main groups—that of private enterprise and that of socialism.

Therefore I appeal to our friends, the hon. leader of the Opposition and his followers, to forsake that middle road along the mountain of progress, lest their feet continue to slip into the lush green valley of socialism. A valley where life appears free of difficulty, where labour is secure and planned for all—but where there is a lack of initiative, Mr. Speaker, and where the gas of economic stagnation pollutes the air, crushing the virility and creative power of its people.

Leave that middle road I say to you, scale with us—in the strength of private enterprise—the heights where the challenge is great, but where vision is boundless, where the breath of freedom freshens the air, where opportunities are unlimited and progress is the goal.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to join in this debate I want to compliment the office which you hold, sir, and the way in which you rule the order of this House. I want to join with the other hon. members who have paid tribute to those of our colleagues who have passed away since we last met, and say with them that we shall miss each and every one who is not here with us today.

Mr. Speaker, certain events have transpired this afternoon which, I think, deserve a little comment. Bearing in mind your ruling earlier this afternoon, I cannot quarrel with the rules and the vote that was taken in the House, supporting those rules. I do, however, suggest, sir, that it would only have been fair had the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) risen in his place, consented to the motion put by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and allowed him to speak when the hon. Prime Minister had made his announcement.

Certainly the hon. leader of the Opposition has made his position abundantly clear throughout the length and breadth of this province over the past nine months, and certainly this is a matter which is deserving of great and substantial public comment. Mr. Speaker, I think it was most unfair that the hon. Prime Minister of the province—by a deliberate manoeuvre enrolling the hon. Minister of Mines as his supporter—shut off the comments of the hon. leader of the Opposition and did not allow his statement on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, since the government members have spoken so glowingly of a certain convention which took place in this city, I thought it might be worthwhile to say a few words about that convention. We have heard it was the greatest convention ever—that a new era has come to the province of Ontario—but for those of us who sit over here and have looked with eagerness and hope for some changes to take place over there, I must admit it has been very disappointing.

We have a new premier. One of my hon. colleagues described him as a rose between two thorns, one of the thorns is missing this afternoon and I am a little sorry about that because I want to talk about him in a little while. But, by and large, Mr. Speaker, we have the same old faces, some of them in new places, and this parades as the Cabinet of Ontario. Very little has been changed—nominally, in any event. However, Mr. Speaker, I am going to suggest that there have been some changes.

We do not really have one Cabinet any more as we used to have in the old days, when the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) was ruling the roost. I think, in fact, we have three cabinets.

We have the Cabinet who bear the titles, the hon. gentlemen who sit opposite us—the old faces, some of them, as I say, in new places; then, Mr. Speaker, I think there is another cabinet; the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) figures very largely and prominently in that cabinet. As we listened to the various bills that were brought in early in this session it became reasonably obvious that he was trying to gather unto himself as many portfolios as he could swallow quickly, and in a very brief period of time.

As we listened to the debate just the other afternoon in connection with air pollution, we watched with interest of course, Mr. Speaker, his effort, his designed effort to hang another scalp on his belt—the scalp of The Department of Health.

Mr. Speaker, we have in the city of Toronto a gentleman who describes himself as “the mayor of all the people.” I would suggest to you that in the government of Ontario, we have a gentleman who, even if he does not attach the title to himself, can be reasonably described as the “cabinet minister of all the departments!”

That is cabinet number two.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has become reasonably obvious to us on this side of the House that we have a third cabinet. These perhaps are people who do not bear any titles but might be referred to as “the kitchen cabinet.” The hon. member for London South (Mr. White), I think, figures as a very prominent member of that “kitchen cabinet.” It has been very interesting to note the authority with which he makes his great pronouncements—particularly the pronouncement he made the other afternoon which resulted in such disastrous occurrences so far as government fortunes were concerned. It is very interesting to see, and it will be of continuing interest to the people of Ontario to see, just who is the boss over there.

Mr. Speaker, the old days have gone, and the old fox from Victoria no longer rules the roost. Apparently there is no one over there who rules the roost. This government is collapsing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is rather a pity that the hon. members of the government party cannot appreciate what is really happening. Not too many years ago a strong Prime Minister—his name was Howard Ferguson—was succeeded by a man named George Henry, and it did not take long before the bitterness that was engendered at that convention ruined the Tory party in Ontario, just as the bitterness, which grew up out of the convention recently held in this city, is ruining this party here today.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal with a few of the remarks that were made by the hon. member for London South (Mr. White). I am sorry he is not here this afternoon, but I am certain some of his colleagues will be able to convey to him the import of my message. I regard him as a bright, intelligent, unusual Tory, and up to this time I think he has handled himself very well in the House. Somewhere along the line—and I do not know why the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) says he knows nothing about it—he took it upon himself—if we accept the Prime Minister at his word—to challenge our hon. leader. And, Mr. Speaker, he made the most serious mistake of his life.

In our hon. leader, as all hon. members of this House know, we have a man of honesty and integrity, who has put forward his ideas and ideals and advanced the purposes of the people of Ontario. Everything he said, leading up to the hon. Prime Minister’s announcement this afternoon, was said in the best interests of the people of Ontario, and in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it lay badly in the mouth of the hon. member for London South to make the nasty, inconsequential, untrue statements that he did in this House on Friday afternoon.

He said—if he is correctly quoted in the Globe and Mail, and I presume he is: “But I know Mr. Wintermeyer’s offer is a hollow offer—I challenge him to step out.” Well there is no point in dealing with that challenge; the challenge was taken, as the hon. member for London South should have known it would be taken. He tried to explain away the idea of a Royal commission and his hon. leader this afternoon has disowned his statement that a police commission would be enough. His stay in the “kitchen cabinet” might not be so long.

Speaking of the “kitchen cabinet,” Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be of interest to the House to note that even London can have too many Cabinet ministers. I suppose that some of the resentment that wells forth from the mouth of this young man is caused by this fact of life. You can only have a fixed number of Cabinet ministers from the city of London.

Mr. Speaker, he made some charges—allegations addressed to my hon. colleagues. He suggested people had told him that what my hon. colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) had done was chargeable in the criminal courts of this province. I suggest to him, Mr. Speaker—if he is convinced that this is in fact so—that he, as an hon. member of this House, has but one course to take, and that is to go out and lay those charges, either against my hon. colleague from Sudbury or against my hon. leader or against any one of us. And if he has not got the courage to lay charges where he thinks charges should be laid, then the hon. member for London South has no business talking like this either here or anywhere else in this province of Ontario.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I thought that the lowest point he reached in his speech was when he talked about McCarthyism; and again, if the Globe and Mail report is correct, he said this:

Mr. White said that the House was accustomed to unsubstantiated charges from the New Democratic Party but did not expect the methods of McCarthyism from the Liberals.

I use those words deliberately, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if ever an hon. member of this House should be thoroughly and completely ashamed of anything he has said, the hon. member for London South should be in that position when he hurls charges of McCarthyism either at the hon. leader of the Opposition or any of my hon. colleagues here on this side of the House.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that I am a little hemmed in by the announcement of the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon and so I will go on now to another subject.

Mr. Speaker, we had in the city of Toronto a few days ago a so-called prize fight for the championship of the world. This fight was run under the auspices, or under the control at least, certainly under the supervision of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) through his athletic commissioner. A man by the name of Patterson was fighting with another man by the name of McNeeley.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the city of Boston had said: "We really do not want any part of your fight, get it out of here because you will not abide by our rules and regulations." The city of Toronto, the athletic commissioner and through him the hon. Minister of Labour, welcomed these people with open arms and allowed this fight to be billed as a world championship fight.

There was some discussion, Mr. Speaker, as to who the judges were going to be. The athletic commissioner said: "I will appoint all three judges." A gentleman by the name of Cus D'Amato the manager of Patterson, said: "Oh, no, I am going to appeal to the Minister of Labour"; and appeal he did. And Cus D'Amato won! The hon. Minister of Labour overruled the athletic commissioner and Cus D'Amato was allowed to appoint one of the judges.

Mr. Speaker, it seems a little ridiculous to me to have our government participating in such a fraud on the people of Ontario.

Here we have a so-called championship fight taking place between one gentleman who is very capable—and his capability was illustrated by the fact that in four rounds he knocked down his opponent 11 times—and another gentleman whose apparent claim to fame was that he had never been beaten by anybody, but nobody had ever heard of him before. His name did not appear in any of the ratings of any of the ring authorities, he had not beaten anyone who was rated. The athletic commissioner, and through him the hon. Minister of Labour, and through him the government of Ontario, said: "Come in; we welcome you with open arms."

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection if people want to pay $50 a seat for an exhibition fight. That is their privilege. But when the government of Ontario lends itself to a phoney promotion of this type, which has been thrown out of the State of Massachusetts, the city of Boston, and when they allow themselves to be influenced by the promoters of these fights, then I say that we are misleading the people of Ontario and using this office to the wrong extent and for the wrong purpose.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago one of my hon. colleagues dealt at great length with what might be the role of the Ontario athletic commissioner and I suggest to hon. members he was correct. If the Ontario government should have any role in controlling prize fights, surely they should do the same thing as they have done with wrestling. When they see a phoney as obvious as the Patterson-McNeeley fight on the horizon, they should bill it as they do wrestling matches, as an exhibition. Then if anybody wants to go it is their privilege. The government lends itself to this false and misleading promotion and should be thoroughly condemned for it.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to deal with an incident that I think is of very substantial interest to the hon. members of this House and in so doing I want to lay a little of the background. I want to quote very briefly from The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, and particularly sections 17, 18, 19 and 20 of it. These sections deal with the method by which an audit can be held.

On the complaint of a group of ratepayers an audit of the financial affairs of a municipality can be ordered. Section 22 particularly says:

After the audit has been done, the department may fix fees and allowances for expenses payable with respect to any audit of the affairs of a municipality under this part and the fees shall be forthwith paid by the municipality.

This is very important. From time to time, occasions arise when petitions are addressed to the government asking that audits of the affairs of a municipality be made. In 1956, this government received from some rate-payers in the municipality of the township of Clarence a request that an audit be made of their municipality's affairs. A little later, the government asked a firm of auditors—need I add, a Conservative firm of auditors—from the city of Sudbury, called Demarais and Parisienne, to conduct this audit, to look into the affairs of the township of Clarence.

Mr. Speaker, on October 3, 1956, Demarais and Parisienne produced this report.

It is not a long report, it runs through some nine and a half pages. I am not going to burden the House with reading the whole report, but it is interesting to note that the report says that under highway expenses honorariums were given to various people. Travelling, banquets, honorariums, travelling, and so on; these were things that went on in the township of Clarence. There is some question about machinery rentals, sales of crushed stone, directors' salaries, and so on. Needless to say, all was not fine in the township of Clarence.

This report is a little difficult to follow, it is not perhaps as clear as I would have liked to have seen it. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the auditing firm of Demarais and Parisienne did make this report.

The inquiry did disclose that certain schemes had been worked out to defraud the province by obtaining subsidies for such things, as I say, as honorariums and banquets. Apparently there were invoices which could not be traced. Subsequently, The Department of Municipal Affairs, I am advised, cancelled the auditor's licence.

I am advised that The Department of Agriculture lost about $900 and has not recovered any of it. I am advised that after this report came out The Department of Highways conducted its own audit and came to the conclusion that some $25,000 in subsidies were paid improperly. I understand that they were able to recover these subsidies by denying to the township of Clarence future grants. I understand, too, that The Department of Education lost about $5,500; whether they got that back or not I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, it should be emphasized that section 20 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act says when the department has certified the costs of such an audit they shall be forthwith paid by the municipality.

On July 2, 1957, a letter went forward from The Department of Municipal Affairs to Reeve R. LaBrache and the council of the township of Clarence, at Bourget post office. The letter said:

As a result of this audit costs of some $12,579.88 were run up. Would you please pay these?

This was in accordance with the section of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act that I have already read. Nothing apparently has been heard in reply from the council or the reeve of the township of Clarence from that date to this.

A few months ago, Mr. Speaker, you will recall there was a similar type of investigation into York township. Granted it was under a different section of a different Act, but there is a similar provision to the one I read in The Department of Municipal Affairs Act in The Municipal Act. Section 320 says that the costs shall be paid in the same way when they have been fixed and when a request has been made. There has been a discussion, led by the representatives of the council of the township of York, as to whether or not they should pay them. On August 9, this article appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail, and I will quote briefly from it:

Reeve Frederick Taylor said the revised statement resulted from a meeting with Premier Frost. He said the Premier had been informed that the township did not have the money in the budget to pay the cost of the inquiry. Township Clerk H. G. Courtman said Premier Frost told the township delegation that under The Municipal Act it was the responsibility of the municipality to pay for an inquiry. What Mr. Frost said is quite correct. The Premier informed the delegation it would not be fair for taxpayers throughout the province to pay for an inquiry in a particular municipality.

This is the government's attitude, and certainly it is in accord with what is in the statutes.

A few days later an editorial appeared in the Globe and Mail and, just quoting a sentence from it, it says this:

Mr. Frost said quite correctly that The Municipal Act makes the township responsible for the cost of the inquiry and that in any case it would be unfair to make the whole of Ontario pay for straightening out illegality, incompetence and neglect in York township's own affairs.

That sentence makes some sense, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall I referred you to a letter written by K. Grant Crawford, the then Deputy Minister of The Department of Municipal Affairs, to Reeve LaBrache and the council of the township of Clarence. In that letter he asks that the money be paid, some $12,000. I suggest that no reply was ever received.

Strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, in the public accounts of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1957, at page L 5, this entry appears:

Commission investigation, Demarais and Parisienne, $12,579.88.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder who on the government side of the House took it upon himself to breach the statutes of Ontario? I wonder by what right anyone on the government side of the House can set himself above the law of the province of Ontario? I wonder if it is more than a coincidence that the township of Clarence is in a riding represented by an hon. Minister of the Crown and the township of York is in a riding represented by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)?

Whether that had anything to do with the decision or not, I do not know, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that no one in this House has a right to set himself above and beyond the law. If the law applies, as the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) said it did in the case of York township, surely it should have applied in the case of the township of Clarence.

Mr. Speaker, I thought that the time might be appropriate to say a few words about civil defence. Recently we had an exercise called Tocsin B. It was gratifying to find that certain members of the Cabinet could be saved, if they could get to Camp Borden. Similar arrangements apparently have been made to save certain members of the federal government if they can get to a place called Carp which is near Ottawa.

But really, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is any point in having governments if there is going to be nobody left to govern. I know that the Prime Minister of Canada has said that to criticize civil defence or emergency measures is to give aid to the Communists; but I am prepared to do this and I am prepared to run this risk, because I do not think that what we have parading under the head of civil defence or emergency measures is of any use at all to the people of this province. It is one of the most asinine and hysterical moves that any government has ever taken. I think it should be condemned as loudly as it possibly can be.

Certain basic questions must be asked.

Is there any defence in an atomic war? The United Kingdom and Russia apparently do not think that anything can be done along civil defence lines. There is some hysteria, some substantial hysteria, here in North America—shelter-crazy, if hon. members want to call it that.

Are the shelters any good? Some scientists say yes, they are; and some say no, they are not. Who is right?

I presume that the government has received the correct advice and has taken the advice of those scientists who know what they are talking about. For as many authorities as say that shelters are good, an equal group on the other side say that they are no good.

What sort of a civil defence scheme have we got? Is it not true that the whole civil defence scheme is being based on the dropping of one bomb? What happens if two bombs are dropped? Nobody has put forward an answer to that!

Mr. Speaker, we have the fascinating moral and philosophical discussion as to whether or not it is right for one to shoot one's neighbour who might try to get into one's air raid shelter.

The Toronto Daily Star, in a cartoon a few days ago, set this out very well, I thought. It showed a picture of three youngsters playing, two boys and a little girl. The two boys were dressed up like soldiers and they built a little hut, which presumably was supposed to be an air raid shelter. The little girl was standing off in front of them, crying bitterly, and complaining that she did not like to play civil defence any more because she did not want to be the neighbour who was always getting shot.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we have reached a sad state in our way of life when this is a topic that intelligent people argue about and discuss.

Let us then accept, for the sake of argument, that shelters might save somebody. When people come out of the shelters where do they go, what do they eat, what do they have to drink?

For a while we heard about evacuation schemes and everyone in Metro was going to be evacuated to the riding of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). That idea seems to have been abandoned. In Tocsin B apparently there was further talk about evacuation. Nobody seemed to know quite how it was going to work. Small wonder, because if hon. members know the condition of the roads in the Toronto area on any holiday weekend when people going on holidays cannot even get out, what is going to happen in the case of an emergency?

Let us talk about shelters for a minute, Mr. Speaker. We presume that a bomb is going to be dropped, I suppose, when everybody is at home and preferably in the summer time; and that by the time it is dropped everyone will have his own self-contained shelter. This is just not so. What happens to people in offices? What happens to people in churches, in schools, in apartments, in shops and factories, in hospitals?

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) was quoted a few days ago, when he was asked about what was going to happen to the mental patients, as having replied to the reporter who asked the question: "That was a good question not to ask."

Surely we have reached a pretty poor and low condition in our approach to human welfare when an hon. Minister of the Crown has to say it is a better question not to ask on an inquiry as to how the patients in mental hospitals are going to be saved in the event of a disaster.

Mr. Speaker, there is a document I have here in my hand—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): May I rise on a point of privilege? May I advise the hon. member that if he had read the rest of that article, he would have got the direct answer I gave to the reporter's question.

Mr. Singer: I have the article here, Mr. Speaker, and I have gone through it carefully. I am unable to find anything more than that reference. It is an article by Mr. Bertin, the science editor of the Toronto Daily Star.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Read the remainder of the article.

Mr. Singer: I have read it several times.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I categorically deny, Mr. Speaker, that I gave that answer as I have gone through the report.

Mr. Singer: It may be that the hon. Minister is misquoted.

Mr. Speaker, I was going to say I had a document here in my hands which I think is of sufficient importance that it should be read in detail here in the House. This is a transcript of a broadcast called "Toronto File." It was aired by the C.B.C., in a television broadcast, on May 4, 1961, and it goes this way:

Toronto on a sunny day in May. Life goes on as usual with traffic on the downtown streets, and in residential areas children play in school yards. Suddenly a siren screams, screams the signal that a hydrogen bomb will hit Toronto soon.

Anxious faces; can they survive?

Then there are siren noises and sounds of bombs dropping.

The threat of nuclear attack on Toronto is a threat we have been living with for many years. To help meet that threat, Metropolitan Toronto Civil Defence Organization was formed in 1953. In practice, Metro Civil Defence has exercised authority over all 13 Toronto municipalities ever since, although legal control was final only a few weeks ago. How effective is Metro Civil Defence in helping us survive a nuclear attack? Well, tonight we will try and find out.

First, Reeve Waffle of Etobicoke, chairman of Metro's Civil Defence Committee, tells us about recent bad publicity civil defence has been receiving in the press:

Waffle: I do not think it has been justified because with a better understanding of the survival plan I believe it is the responsibility now of people who are in charge of the news media, the newspapers, the TV and the radio to get the true story across to the people rather than hysterical reporting or something that has been taken out of context. They, the news media, have a tremendous responsibility in assisting us—and I say us, you and I, the citizens—in understanding better the plans that we have to follow in case something is going to happen.

Q. What are your problems?

A. Our problem is that I do not believe sufficient numbers of people understand civil defence and what we are trying to do.

Q. What is Metro Civil Defence trying to do?

A. Well, these are the boundaries of Metro Toronto.

and I presume that they were indicated on a map.

If a hydrogen bomb were dropped in Toronto, the damage might be extensive but not completely destructive. For example, if a bomb fell here, at approximately Yonge and St. Clair, the total destruction would be only this area—about six miles across—and unless residents evacuated this area first, nothing, or no one would survive. But across this larger area, outside the immediate bomb blast zone, people could survive, in fact most of us might survive a nuclear attack—but survive only if we knew what to expect and what to do.

Announcer: Metro Civil Defence was designed to make sure that each of us, you and I, would have the best possible chance of survival. A man charged with this tremendous responsibility is the co-ordinator of Metro Civil Defence, H. H. Atkinson.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Atkinson has since resigned and has now been replaced by another gentleman.

Atkinson: The policy and public education is set by Ottawa which publishes most of the public education material. Up to now that has been very sparse, but it is starting to come in and by the end of next month we expect quite a bit of it to be available for public education.

Q. Why do you think the material has been sparse? Civil defence has been in operation for, what, since 1953?

A. Yes, but the system was all changed from mass evacuation to voluntary evacuation and shelter, just a year and a half to two years ago, which changes practically everything they had done.

Q. How many bodies, trained bodies, will be required to carry out any civil defence plan in the event of a strike here?

A. Oh, to carry out a complete plan for a city of this size, an area of this size, would need approximately 90,000 people.

Q. That is in addition to personnel now operating in utilities or municipality offices?

A. Yes.

Q. How many have you trained?

And remember, Mr. Speaker, this is May, 1961.

A. Up to February we had trained approximately 23,000, which leaves us 67,000 to go. The people we have trained are mostly key personnel.

Announcer: We are going to pursue that in a moment. Last summer to assist the administration of civil defence in Toronto, Civil Defence headquarters organized Metro into four zones, each with a separate zone controller—the east zone covers the township of Scarborough, the north zone covers the township of North York and Leaside, the west zone covers Etobicoke and the central zone extends over the downtown area of the city. Now, because civil defence estimates a nuclear attack will probably destroy the central part of the city, the most vital zones in terms of aiding in survival lie in the perimeter zones of the city. We talked with the three controllers of the perimeter zones; first, Pat Johnson of the east zone.

Q. How many trained volunteers in your zone?

Johnson: By trained, you mean the people who have had that personal survival training, first aid and all that? It goes well over 1,000.

Q. How many do you think you will be able to call on in the event of an emergency?

A. In specialized training in an emergency, I imagine, almost anywhere from 250 to 300 people.

Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the Metropolitan controller said that he needed 90,000 people to conduct a proper defence scheme here in Metropolitan Toronto. In one zone, the zone controller says from 250 to 300 people.

Q. Paul Tuz is the controller of the north zone; how many trained volunteers in your zone?

A. Trained specialists, approximately 750.

Q. And you could call on all of these and get them out?

A. Well in the case of a disaster, if necessary, I could probably count on 250.

Announcer: Bill Wilson, is the controller of the west zone. How many trained volunteers in your zone now?

A. At the present time, I could muster 150.

Q. How many do you think you will need?

A. Well I think we would need in the neighbourhood of 10,000 to 14,000—and he has 150!

Q. How long do you think it will take to reach this complement?

A. Well, I do not feel under the present conditions, under which we are working, it is possible to reach this.

Q. Ever?

A. No.

Announcer: In the central zone the available trained volunteers, as Mr. Atkinson mentioned, stood at about 1,200. We should mention here that in preparing the programme we talked to the zone controllers and the co-ordinators separately. They have no knowledge of what the other said. We also talked with a man dedicated to training you and me to survive, and how we can help others to survive, Metro's chief civil defence instructor, Reg. Johnson.

Q. What message do you have for getting information to the public?

Johnson: Mainly by personal contact with organizations. Home and school groups, churches, I.O.D.Es, and any existing organizations.

Q. Do you think personal contact is adequate?

A. Personal contact alone, definitely not. No.

Q. What else do you need?

A. To do the job properly as far as public education is concerned, you must have what you would eventually call an advertising programme—TV, radio, booklets, newspapers, pamphlets—and I suggest something in every home in Metro.

Q. Why is this not being done?

A. It is just incomprehensible to me, I do not know.

Q. Do you have a public information office?

A. No, we do not.

Announcer: The purpose of civil defence as outlined in this civil defence report is to educate the public in ways and means of surviving. In last year's budget Metro's civil defence received $25,000 to spend on public education. On public education they spent only $5,000. The second duty of civil defence is to help voluntary evacuation of the city. In the event of an impending attack it is still conceivable that we should have some warning, perhaps three hours or perhaps three days. Civil defence was designed to assist any one of us who wish to leave the city to do so before the attack occurs. Evacuation is voluntary—that means I could go if I wish or stay if I wish. Let us assume that I am one of several hundred families who decide to go, will I be able to get out?

A. You will, under a certain amount of traffic control. Which means the same as any traffic control. In the case you have just quoted the roads will be pretty well filled. Persons would have to be directed to the various roads, according to road capacity, to keep the traffic rolling.

Q. What are your plans for traffic control and voluntary evacuation in your zone?

A. Well, we have no specific laid-down plans because it is something we are not in a position to do ourselves.

Q. As well as getting people out of the city, civil defence must be prepared to keep some people in the city, Mr. Atkinson explains. Some people would have to remain in the city in the event of voluntary or mass evacuation. Who would have to remain and how many people would have to remain?

A. They are labelled as "chief personnel". They are the people who would maintain public utilities which cannot be left without attention; also certain essential industries which are vital to any emergency proposition would have to be kept going. For instance, a foundry; you just could not walk out at a minute's notice and leave a foundry. The same with public utilities, your water, pumping system and that sort of stuff, would have to be manned.

Q. How many people would be required to stay?

A. That is up to the individual utility, and up to the individual commercial organization.

Q. What part does civil defence organization play in the maintenance of public utilities?

A. Merely the co-ordination of planning. Each one makes his own plan, and these plans have to be co-ordinated here.

Q. What is the plan?

A. I do not follow the question.

Q. I mean, what is the plan for maintaining services in the area?

A. Well, there has been a lot of discussion on it but the plans are not actually completed yet.

Q. When did civil defence headquarters last call a meeting of all Metro municipal services, existing services, with all the various departments of Metro Civil Defence?

A. All the various departments—you mean the existing departments?

Q. Yes.

A. To my knowledge there has never been one that I know of.

Announcer: Although in a natural emergency civil defence works in conjunction with the Army, its responsibilities never cease. To carry out this responsibility, civil defence needs facilities and equipment. What equipment is needed by civil defence in this area to face the possibilities of an attack?

A. Well, generally there is enough equipment outside of one or two special types available in Metro to cope with most phases of disaster. You would need some specialist equipment, like geiger counter equipment and that sort of stuff, which will either have to be bought or obtained from the federal government.

Q. As late as May, 1961, an important man in the civil defence set-up said he had no geiger counters. When will these be available?

A. Well, the policy has not yet been decided.

Q. Does this mean that if a strike were registered here, within the next six months, we would certainly not be prepared?

A. We would be fairly well prepared.

Q. We would not be prepared before six months?

A. Yes, I think we are in pretty good shape now.

Q. What about equipment — training equipment — radio sets, trucks; have you sufficient equipment in this respect for training purposes?

A. For training purposes, no, not by any means.

Q. What about operational equipment?

A. That is not my field, but the equipment we have is training equipment only; it is not operational equipment.

A great set-up, Mr. Speaker, they have not even enough equipment for training purposes, let alone operational purposes.

Q. Have you asked for more training equipment?

A. Within the limits of our budget—as far as I understand—I have asked for more equipment.

Q. Why has it not been forthcoming?

A. I could not say.

Announcer: The key to co-ordination of all civil defence communities lies with a plan. Now a plan may not be perfect; in fact, under constant changing conditions it can never be perfect. Yet a plan provides the necessary basis for any civil defence co-ordination. And so we come to Metro's plan for survival, the plan for your survival.

Q. These volunteers in your zone can be co-ordinated along with volunteers in other zones in the event of a nuclear disaster? In other words, is there a Metro plan?

A. To the best of my knowledge, not at the present time.

Q. In the event of disaster what is the plan for the volunteers you now have?

A. Well, actually, to my knowledge there has not been laid down—and this is to my knowledge—any particular plan, any overall plan.

Q. Why not?

A. I have often wondered.

This is the controller of civil defence. "I have often wondered."

Q. Have you asked why not?

A. Yes, I have asked.

Q. What answer did you receive?

A. That, when a plan has been developed that they felt was what they were looking for or needed, we would be notified in due course.

Q. When you say "they," are you referring to Metro headquarters?

A. I am referring to the higher echelons in Metro civil defence.

Q. Is there a plan, an overall plan, in the event of nuclear disaster?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Is a plan necessary for you to carry your work out?

A. Oh, absolutely; as a training officer you must have some knowledge of an operational plan before you can do your training.

Q. You have asked for such a plan?

A. Definitely.

Q. Was any answer received?

A. It will be forthcoming.

Q. For how long have you been getting this type of answer?

A. Well, I have been with the organization five and a half years.

Q. Has civil defence any overall plan?

A. No. All sorts of plans have been worked on, are now being formulated. The overall plan will finally rest on co-ordination by the municipal, provincial and federal authorities. That will become the overall plan.

Q. If we have no overall plan how effective can the organization be?

A. Just as effective as the plan—as far as planning has gone.

Q. And the planning has really gone nowhere?

A. I would say there has been a lot of discussion on it, and a lot of thinking on it; but as for a complete plan, I do not know of any plan that has been completed yet. However, some planning has been done by eager civil defence personnel.

At this point the announcer introduces the east zone controller, Johnson, who explains the plan he is considering; and there is a man by the name of Dr. McCallum who, apparently, has a plan for the east. They were thinking seriously about Dr. McCallum's plan and some training took place along that line. There are then questions about this.

Q. You said you hope it [and that is Dr. McCallum's plan] will be accepted by whom?

A. By the Metro civil defence committee or authority.

Q. Have they been exposed to the plan?

A. Yes, they have been exposed to it by the doctor himself.

Q. Have they accepted it or rejected it?

A. It is undecided. It is under constant review.

Q. How long has this been going on?

A. Since 1956, actually.

Q. The final decision for all plans—correct me if I am wrong—rests with Ottawa?

A. That's right.

Q. Then Ottawa must have local plans submitted to them before they can co-ordinate and finalize them?

A. Yes.

Q. Now why are they held up at a local level in submitting their plan to Ottawa?

A. Well, there is quite a bit of information that is not available to us to complete our plan.

Q. Who is responsible for holding up this information?

A. Oh, it isn't a matter of holding it up; it is just that the information is not forthcoming; it has not been decided on yet.

Q. Well, how does one go about deciding on these things?

A. Well, there are three various levels of government. I would like to give you an example of how they hold them up. We will take the policy of traffic control here. Any plan that they make must be compatible with the plan of the provincial police going from our borders out, otherwise one is going to plug the other. Now, we have not received that plan yet. I know they are working on a completed plan for mass evacuation and that is pretty workable.

Q. Again this seems to be a provincial responsibility?

A. Yes, that would be natural because we deal with the province and not directly with the federal government.

Q. I see. How long have these plans been held up? How long have you been working on them, trying to get information from the provincial level? That you need to make the final decision?

A. Well, actually we have not gone after the province on the policy plan, I just gave that as an example. When they get their plan drawn up they will let us have it.

Q. So that nothing can be finalized here?

A. We can finalize our own plan and submit it.

Q. Have we finalized our own plan?

A. No.

Q. What then has been the hold-up?

A. Well, the hold-up has been, since the change we have been depending on a lot of information which has not been forthcoming yet. We know that their planning is coming, there is no use asking for the impossible.

Announcer: But without public information, without enough equipment, without even a plan, there is still the trained individual. Key civil defence personnel, properly trained in fundamental civil defence are in a better position to ensure our survival; and such training is available at the federal civil defence college at Arnprior. The three 'perimeters' own controllers have met with Metro civil defence since last September.

Question to the first zone controller: When were you last at the civil defence college at Arnprior?

A. Well, I haven't been.

Q. You haven't been?

A. No.

Q. Have you been asked to be given the training?

A. Yes.

Q. You think the training is necessary?

A. I felt it would be helpful.

Question to second zone controller: When were you last at the federal civil defence college at Arnprior?

A. Very good question; I have never been.

Q. You haven't?

Question to third zone controller: When were you last at the civil defence college at Arnprior?

A. I have not had the privilege of attending at Arnprior.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that since May, and since this broadcast, that some of these gentlemen may have been to Arnprior. The headquarters personnel at civil defence have been trained at Arnprior.

Announcer: It is important to note that, since we made these films two weeks ago, the zone controllers have been informed that they, too, would be sent. In fact, two of them have already gone. But now the question: What else is needed to make civil defence more efficient? Have you any suggested improvements for civil defence as it exists now in the area that could be implemented?

A. It is a very difficult question to answer until you have the plan fully formulated. The plans are not formulated.

Q. What is your job? You are the co-ordinator of civil defence in the area. What is the role of the co-ordinator?

A. To be responsible for everything that happens in civil defence.

Announcer: Perhaps the large part of the civil defence story could be summed up in the civil defence budget. Last year Metro civil defence received $334,000, they spent only $215,000, there is still $118,000 remaining unspent. $25,000 of this sum was not received until last December when it was possibly too late to include in the expenses of the fiscal year, but the money is available. Volunteers are available and dedicated staff is available. Because of the importance of civil defence, the nature of civil defence, we have asked Ozzie Waffle, chairman of the Metro civil defence committee, to be with us to have a last word.

Then Mr. Waffle comes on, Mr. Speaker, and says that everything is going to be fine and there are funds available, and certainly there is going to be a plan—some day. Well, the postscript on this, Mr. Speaker, is the closing announcement that was made:

Tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. Prime Minister Diefenbaker and many provincial premiers will be heard on CJBC and CBL in Operation Tocsin 1961. A programme designed to inform the public in emergency planning for civil defence, stresses the importance of learning personal survival methods. Hear Operation Tocsin on CBL and CJBC.

Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard such nonsense!

Here we have two responsible levels of government—or at least they like to class themselves as responsible levels of government—here we have a very carefully researched television broadcast conducted by our C.B.C.! The gentlemen who are responsible for survival plans in this area have been asked what are they supposed to do, what trained personnel are there, what plans are there; and almost 100 per cent the batting is zero, zero, zero.

Have hon. members ever heard of such a farce, have they ever heard of such nonsense? And this government calls itself a responsible government!

A year ago, Mr. Speaker, when they were shuffling around the department that used to be called The Department of Planning and Development and changed it into The Department of Commerce and Development—now they have changed it into something else again—I understood that one gentleman was going to be deputy minister in charge of civil defence. In the reshuffling and the new bills we have seen this year I have not heard him mentioned at all.

Somewhere along the line I gathered from the newspapers, not from the speeches of the hon. Prime Minister or of any of his hon. colleagues in the Cabinet, that civil defence is going to find its way to the hon. Attorney-General's department. If so, why have we not had a bill about it? Why have we not had some remarks about it in the Throne speech? Why have we not got a plan? What sort of nonsense is this government trying to perpetrate on the people of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, let us be honest with the people of Ontario. I do not think that civil defence is possible, but I am certainly willing to be shown. If it is, let us have a programme for all of the people of Ontario, not just for the wealthy people who can afford to build a shelter, and ignore the poor people. Let us look after the school children and the people in offices and the people in apartment buildings. Let us look after the people in hospitals.

Let us do all these things and let us do it as a part of a government programme. Let us stop the hysteria that this programme is producing and let us build up the morale of the people of the province rather than tear it down.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, last August, exercising my wisdom and good common sense, for which I am well known, I stated in Kingston that enjoying as I did good health and having had the opportunity to serve this historic riding of Kingston both as a private member and as a member of the Frost government; enjoying also as my wife did good health, I indicated at that time that come the next general provincial election I did not again intend to run in Kingston.

I had a little difficulty after having made that statement when I met the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in Renfrew at a time when he was present there, on a very sad occasion, with his political executive adviser, Dr. Boyd Upper. He even at that time thought I had some sinister motive in going there, in that I was going to be appointed to some other office. We had breakfast together, as he will remember, and I thought perhaps—I was in good form and so was he—that he might pick up the chit, because I was going out of public life. But no, sir; every man for himself that morning.

I assured him I was going to do exactly what my father did after he had represented Kingston, not only in this Legislature but indeed in the House of Commons, at one time having been the Attorney-General when Mr. Ferguson was the Prime Minister. I am going to do exactly what he did and when the time presents itself, come the next general provincial election, I am going to return to Kingston and practise my first love, my chosen profession, the law.

Now I can quite understand the hon. Prime Minister, being a member of the legal profession, perhaps might even frown if I were to make any comment this afternoon about when I intended to start, so I will say it depends on when my hon. leader calls the election. But to those of the legal profession who are in this House this afternoon, I would indicate to them without reservation—I am not unmindful of the fact since I entered this House some ten years ago that there may have been a little inflation—but when I return to Kingston I will be in the old stand, at the old address and at the old prices. Anything that the hon. members of this House can with dignity and sincerity refer to me, I shall be glad to attend to on a reasonable agency basis.

Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions in this chamber of a congratulatory nature concerning your occupying your present position at this time. Many people have stopped short and simply said they wished you well. But as I consider and think of some of the exciting moments we have had in the first two or three weeks of this session and if what has happened in that time is going to be indicative of what takes place when we meet again in January or February—then, sir, I go a bit further than some of my hon. colleagues and with all reverence and humility I will say I will give you my Presbyterian prayers and wish you good health to carry on to discharge in fairness in the future, as you have in the past, all that goes with your very great office.

Tributes of respect, of sympathy and understanding have been made in this House in connection with the death of three of our members, Mr. Maloney, Mr. Nixon and Mr. Wren. I lived for years, when I was in Toronto, in the Royal York with these three gentlemen. Two of them had a political philosophy different to mine, but at this time I would like to say that on a tremendous number of occasions, sir, we had breakfast together, we had dinner together. I am the only one of the four that is left, still living at the Royal York—and I want to say that those who have not lived there, who did not get to know Mr. Maloney, Mr. Nixon and Mr. Wren as I did, as friends rather than just political acquaintances, that I have missed probably more than anybody in this House, the sincere, basic understanding that went and existed between gentlemen of a different political philosophy when we had an opportunity to break bread and discuss the problems of the province, always with a basic thought that we were all, each in our own way, proud to call Ontario home.

There have been references to my hon. leader since he has taken over his position as the hon. Prime Minister of this province. I am satisfied, I think as all hon. members of this House will be satisfied that since he has taken over the leadership of the government, the leadership of the Conservative Party, he has handled himself extremely well. If I am any judge of public opinion, when the ballots are counted come the next provincial by-election—

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Careful now! That is where the hon. Minister made his first—better not go too far.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Just give me a chance to finish! If the hon. member is honest, and I think he is, he will agree with me that in his riding, as a result of certain things that have happened, he is very apprehensive about a majority of those by-elections; and he knows that just as well as I do.

I want to say something more. The hon. leader of the Opposition, if he is going into the ridings where these five by-elections are going to be held, will have to be a little more careful in connection with his utterances than he may have been in the immediate past.

At this opportunity, which may perhaps be my last opportunity, because I am not the man to say when the next provincial general election is going to take place: a great many references have been made concerning the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), the former Prime Minister, in regard to the very outstanding administration he headed as the Prime Minister of Ontario for 12 years.

The responsibilities incidental to his high office demanded his presence throughout the length and breadth of the province and indeed of other jurisdictions, and for the purpose of the record and speaking on behalf of the women of this province, I think this is indeed the time and forum to pay tribute to Mrs. Leslie M. Frost, a gracious, charming and attractive woman who was just as much a public servant of the people of this province as was her husband and who, in her official capacity, discharged her duties with dignity and credit as the wife of the Prime Minister. She shall always be respected and loved by the good citizens of this province and to her I say, thank you, Mrs. Frost, for a job well and thoroughly done. To Mrs. Frost I say, we shall miss you, as we shall miss your husband, in reference to the political life of this province.

There is a saying, in relation to a family, that where a son does well and succeeds his father, it is a compliment to say of him that he is a worthy son of a worthy sire. I would change that just a little bit and say that the present leader of the Conservative Party is a man who has been trained at the knee of a very great sire and will prove very worthy in the administration which he leads.

Of course I can say that with all the sincerity in the world, because I want to make it crystal clear, hon. members know that as well as I, that there is nothing I want except to return in good health to the great city of Kingston and with my wife enjoy our friends.

A very recent dinner which I attended at the Royal York was that of the War Amputees of Canada. These people came from one end of this country to the other. At this time I would like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the hon. members of the government, that these people who attended that function; men who in two wars had lost an arm or a leg, or some of them two arms; some both legs—that these people have their problems.

When we talk in a sinister way about some of the problems to protect the little people come a third world war then, I say, we must try to use such protective measures, sir, that if bombs drop—people of our vintage, people of our age on both sides of the House have had an opportunity to enjoy our way of life—but in relation to our children I do say this, that if there is a conflict then we should not laugh off the problem and the challenge of any administration, irrespective of its political point of view, in trying to protect the children. After all, when everything is said and done, the child of today is our best asset for tomorrow.

I would like to direct a few remarks in connection with a matter which concerns the city of Kingston. I asked the support of the hon. Prime Minister and indeed of my colleague the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart). In presenting his estimates to this House a few days ago, he made mention of the plaques that had been erected in Ontario by the Ontario Archaeological and Historic Sites Board and I am very happy to say that among the memorials that have gone up in Kingston, one is in reference to the building of Fort Henry.

Fort Henry—The present Fort was built 1832-36, as part of a larger scheme of fortifications for the defence of the Kingston Dockyard and the Rideau Canal.

The Stone Frigate, 1820—To store gear from the Lake Fleet. It was the first dormitory building at the Royal Military College.

Heathfield—This house, erected prior to 1841 and purchased by Professor James Williamson of Queen's, was used by the Williamsons and Sir John A. Macdonald's sister, Louisa.

Bishop Alexander Macdonell, 1762-1840—Born 1762 at Glen Urquhart, Scotland, he was educated for the priesthood in Paris and Spain. In 1826 he was consecrated Bishop of Kingston, the first Catholic Bishop in Upper Canada. In 1831 he became a Member of the Legislative Council; and in his portrait in the Bishop's house in Kingston he will be seen wearing two rings, his episcopal ring and the ring of office as a Legislative Councillor. In 1837 he founded Regiopolis College. He is buried in St. Mary's Cathedral in Kingston.

At this point, I want to pay tribute to George F. G. Stanley, dean of the faculty of arts and head of the department of history at the Royal Military College, and formerly deputy-director of the historical section of the general staff. He is a member of the Ontario Archaeological and Historic Sites Board since its inception. As the member of this board from eastern Ontario, his particular responsibility is for historic sites in that part of the province.

Today I want to recommend for the favourable consideration of my hon. colleagues in the government, the erection of a further plaque in Kingston in memory of that great Liberal leader of yesterday, a former resident of Kingston, Sir Oliver Mowat, who held office as leader of the government longer than any other man in our history. The house in which Sir Oliver was born and lived still stands in a very excellent residential section of Kingston and although other plaques have been erected, the time has now come when the memory of Sir Oliver Mowat should be perpetuated. I give you this great man's history: "A Presbyterian with a sincerely religious bent—a Christian statesman"—this was Sir Oliver Mowat's self-evaluation.

Born in Kingston July 20, 1820—both his parents being Scottish born—Oliver Mowat was educated in Kingston district schools and at the age of 16 became articled to a prominent Kingston lawyer, John A. Macdonald.

In 1840 he left Kingston for Toronto and the next year was called to the Bar of Upper Canada. The year 1856 was an eventful one for Mowat as it brought his appointment as a Q.C., appointment as one of the commissioners to revise and consolidate the statutes of Upper Canada and election as an alderman for the City of Toronto.

Implementing one of the recommendations of Lord Durham's historic report, the British Parliament in 1840 passed the Act of Union, uniting Upper and Lower Canada under one Legislature. Mowat was first elected to this Legislature in 1857 by the riding of South Ontario and the next year he accepted the post of Provincial Secretary in the short-lived Brown-Dorion administration.

In 1861 the former student-at-law ran for election against a formidable opponent—his one-time teacher, John A. Macdonald—but lost, as the voters of Kingston endorsed Macdonald.

During the John Sandfield Macdonald-Dorion administration of 1863 and the great coalition of 1864, Mowat served as Postmaster General. In those momentous years when men of vision met to discuss the confederation of Canada, Oliver Mowat was the delegate from Upper Canada at the Quebec Conference of 1864.

Taking leave of politics, Oliver Mowat in November, 1864, was raised to the bench as one of the Vice-Chancellors of Ontario.

The British North America Act, 1867, which created the federal union of Canada, also established Ontario and Quebec as separate provinces. Returning to the Ontario political scene in 1872, he succeeded Edward Blake as leader of the Ontario Liberal Party. Elected by the constituency of Oxford North, Mowat was sworn in as Prime Minister and Attorney-General of Ontario, October 25, 1872. Mowat was Ontario's third post-confederation Prime Minister, being preceded by the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald (July 16, 1867-December 19, 1871) and the Hon. Edward Blake (December 20, 1871-October 25, 1872).

Mowat served the people of Ontario as Prime Minister and Attorney-General from 1872 continuously through to 1896. He then resigned to enter federal politics as a supporter of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Appointed to the Senate where he became the government leader, he also held the portfolio of Minister of Justice in the Laurier Cabinet.

A fighter for provincial rights, Sir Oliver Mowat, while in the Ontario Legislature, introduced the ballot system of voting into both provincial and municipal elections.

Knighted in 1892 as a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, he was later named a Knight Grand Cross of the Order.

Sir Oliver Mowat retired from political campaigning in 1897 but continued his distinguished career of public service as Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario from 1897 until his death, April 19, 1903.

From the first day of his first election to the Legislature of Canada in 1857 until his death at Government House, Toronto in 1903, this "Christian statesman" from Kingston served his home city, his province and his country in many capacities for 46 years—nearly half a century.

Records of the day attribute many qualities to explain his success as a party leader—"tactful, politically sagacious and of high integrity" are terms which were applied by his contemporaries.

As concerns this province, he left behind—among other important Acts—The Ballot Act of 1874 and The Manhood Suffrage Act of 1888. The University of Toronto and Queen's University tendered honorary degrees and Toronto University honoured him as a member of their senate (1852-1872).

Sir Oliver Mowat was born in an exciting time in Upper Canada's history—he was part of the formation of Canada—he served this new country in its difficult early years—and he saw the early years of this 20th century—the century that "belongs to Canada" because of the efforts of her faithful public servants of the last 100 years.

I might say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are some in this House who have never really understood or appreciated why, from the time I came here until this very hour, I have always sat in seat number 2. The reason is that the leaders of the government, from the time I came here some ten years ago, have always given me seat number 2 because it was the seat my father occupied when he came into the House and was the Attorney-General under Mr. Ferguson.

But I am not going to run in the next provincial election and I may say, Mr. Speaker, when I retire from public life, I will be leaving seat No. 2.

Speaking of Sir Oliver Mowat—

An hon. member: May I have it?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: What, this seat? Well, I am very sure the hon. member would like it. I would wish him well, but he will never make it unless he changes his tactics. I will tell the hon. member something else to give him some Christmas comfort. I suppose today, as a member of that great regiment—the Algonquin Regiment, is that not it, from which all the men who served in distinction are working for the Ontario Northland Railway up in his riding the hon. member and I were there one day—and there came the call for liquor help from Kingston. I turned the request for the extra help over to the president of the Canadian Legion—allow me to finish, because this is really worthwhile—I turned the request for extra help in the liquor stores at Christmas over to the president of the Canadian Legion and I told him to try to get men who had long and faithful active service in some theatre of war, either the First War or the Second War. Hon. members will at least know what I do in Kingston.

On a personal basis, I find in going through the papers of my father, who died a few years ago, this parchment which any lawyer will appreciate and recognize as the occasion of his appointment, the appointment of William Folger Nickle, as a notary public in the year 1900. A man who in the opinion of the then Lieutenant-Governor possessed loyalty, integrity and ability. The man who signed the parchment and named my father as the notary public in and for the province of Ontario was none other than Sir Oliver Mowat.

I will continue tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Nickle moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go on with second readings that are on the order paper and the Throne Debate. We will have a night session tomorrow night and Thursday night.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1961

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme, from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr1, An Act respecting Greater Oshawa Community Chest.

Bill No. Pr3, An Act respecting the City of Belleville.

Bill No. Pr4, An Act respecting The Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Incurables, Toronto.

Bill No. Pr8, An Act respecting the Village of Markham.

Bill No. Pr13, An Act respecting the Township of Nepean.

Bill No. Pr15, An Act respecting The High School Board of the Township of Nepean and The Collegiate Institute Board of the City of Ottawa.

Bill No. Pr23, An Act respecting the Young Men's-Young Women's Christian Association of Cornwall.

Hon. F. M. Cass presents the second interim report of the select committee appointed on April 12, 1960 and re-appointed on March 23, 1961 to inquire into and review all provincial legislation and regulations respecting expropriation of land by public authority and moves, seconded by Hon. J. P. Robarts, that the committee be re-appointed and continue with the same membership and with the same powers and duties as heretofore; also, that the said committee be authorized to sit during the Christmas-New Year adjournment of this session and that the same allowances for expenses to the chairman and members thereof be payable for such meetings as are provided by section 65 of The Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1960, chapter 308, for meetings held during the interval between sessions.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the report just tabled, I would like to say it is as usual the unanimous report of the committee which has now finished its public sessions and public hearings and is in the process of considering the very many serious and important problems connected with powers of expropriation by public authorities.

I think, sir, that it is the opinion of the committee—I know it is the opinion of many of us at least, and it certainly is the opinion of this House, I am quite sure—that as soon as possible there should be some concrete results from this committee by way of recommendation and report to this House so that the many very obvious inequities which presently exist in the law may be corrected. For that reason, the committee was very anxious that they should be re-appointed by this hon. House and be free to continue as soon as possible their further research and if possible to produce some good recommendations for the consideration of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves that the select committees on the cost of drugs and on crop insurance be authorized to sit during the Christmas-New Year adjournment of this session and that the same allowances for expenses to the chairman and members thereof be payable for such meetings as are provided by section 65 of The Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1960, chapter 308, for meetings held during the interval between sessions.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, this is just a motion to permit these committees to carry on between the time we adjourn and the time we resume in the hopes that perhaps we that we will not be blocked at his level as we were in the instance of a previous Royal commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, what a question! All I can say is this: I will deal with that when the commissioner consults me.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope the hon. Prime Minister deals with it differently than his predecessor.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I would like to offer an apology. I made a very grave error the other day and I have a letter here that I would like to read to correct the error. It was during the discussion of the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity and my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter). It has to do with the Scottish people and I want to apologize to them for the mistake I made.

Here is the letter:

During the debate on the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity Tuesday, December 5, A. Cowling, member for High Park, referred to Tobermory as a beautiful Irish name, Hansard, page 217. I agree that Tobermory is a beautiful name, but I cannot allow even a fellow P.C. to alienate it by calling it Irish. Tobermory is as Scotch as the Highlands themselves.

In the Encyclopedia Canadiana, volume 10, page 91, it states:

Tobermory, Ontario, named after Tobermory, Scotland. The original Tobermory is located near the northern end of the Island of Mull in the Inner Hebrides.

A few years ago the Rank film called "I Know Where I'm Going" the locale of which was Tobermory, Scotland, had its North American premiere at Tobermory, Ontario.

Incidentally, old country locals pronounce the name "Tubmury", both "u's" being pronounced as in the "Tub". As a matter of fact, many of the localities in Tobermory refer to it now as "The Tub".

(Signed) Ogden Hershaw.

There is my apology, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to speak just for a moment about the procedure that we will follow for the balance of the week. Tomorrow there are two committees meeting, both of them in the morning. I would like to meet here at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon, 10.30 o'clock on Friday morning until 1.00 o'clock in the afternoon, and if it is necessary to resume Friday afternoon.

I would like to get as much work done as possible prior to the Christmas adjournment which I would like to reach on Friday. If it is possible to reach it on Friday we will adjourn Friday, if not we may have to come back next week.

That is the programme that I propose for the balance of the week. We will have a night session tonight but none tomorrow night, Wednesday, and a night session Thursday. If there is a motion necessary for this I will revert to the orders of the day later on and make it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE INCOME TAX ACT, 1961-62

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves second reading of Bill No. 43, The Income Tax Act, 1961-62.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): In moving second reading of Bill 43, The Income Tax Act, 1961-62, I would like first to outline briefly to the House the new federal-provincial fiscal arrangements that have been negotiated with the federal government. Under these arrangements—which will replace the existing arrangements due to expire on March 31, 1962—the tax rental system will be discontinued and the provinces will be free to impose, adjust and vary their tax rates in the major fields of direct taxation, in accordance with what they deem necessary to meet their own requirements.

Effective January 1, 1962, the federal government will withdraw from the corporation income tax field, to the extent of the existing standard rate or abatement of nine percentage points of taxable income; and from the personal income tax field by 16 per cent of federal rates of tax—thereby raising the provincial share by about two percentage points over the existing standard rate of approximately 14 per cent of 1960 federal rates of tax. In each of the following four years, the federal withdrawal from the personal income tax field will be increased by one additional percentage point so that, in the fifth year, the federal withdrawal will be equal to 20 per cent of its gross rates of tax. In the succession duty field, the federal government will continue the present system of allowing an abatement of 50 per cent of its estate tax in any province which elects to impose its own succession duties.

or of paying an amount equal to half the yield of the federal tax to any province which chooses not to levy its own succession duties.

The federal government has offered to collect, free of charge, the individual income tax or corporation income tax, or both, for any province, provided the provincial legislation imposing such tax or taxes, conforms with the draft bill presented by the federal government to all the provinces as a model that would permit the federal government to act as a collection agent for the provinces. Under a collection agreement, the provincial individual income tax must be expressed as a percentage of the federal tax rather than as a schedule of rates imposed on taxable income, and this percentage must remain constant throughout a taxation year. The corporation income tax must be expressed as a percentage of taxable income as defined for federal income tax purposes.

I should point out that the proposed collection arrangements are a substantial improvement over the type of collection arrangements offered to the provinces—as an alternative to tax rental arrangements—for the period 1957-1962. Under the collection arrangement offered in 1957, the provincial rate of tax could not exceed the standard rate of tax employed in the tax rental arrangements and a province was required to pay the cost of collection. The collection arrangement at that time offered no financial advantage over tax rental arrangements, since it did not allow an agreeing province to obtain more revenue from the tax fields than it could, under a rental arrangement—and required a province to pay a collection fee as well. The new arrangements overcome those defects of the earlier offer of tax collection agreements and, at the same time, retain the advantage of a consolidated and simplified tax system. They also retain the advantage of allowing provinces to enter into collection agreements for either the personal income tax field, the corporation income tax field, or both—a flexibility which was not available under the tax rental arrangements until 1957.

Under the new arrangements, the method of dealing with succession duties will be identical with that under the present agreements. The federal government is not prepared to collect succession duties under legislation which is different from its own and the provinces are constitutionally unable to enact legislation comparable to The Federal Estate Tax Act.

The federal government will continue to make equalisation payments under the new arrangements, although the method of computing them will differ from the present formula in two principal respects: First, the new equalisation formula will be based on the yield from standard rates of tax in the three major direct tax fields—as at present—plus one-half of the three-year moving average of gross natural resource revenue. Secondly, the revenue over this broader base will be equalized to the national average per capita yield in all provinces rather than the average per capita yield in the two highest yield provinces. Thus, in each of the five fiscal years, 1962-63 to 1966-67, a province will receive a basic equalisation payment sufficient to bring its combined per capita yield from standard taxes at the proposed rates and one-half of the three-year moving average of its gross natural resource revenue up to the average per capita yield of all provinces from these sources. This formula is supplemented by two guarantees:

(a) No province entitled to equalisation under the national average formula will receive less in total—under the new arrangements—than the amount that would be payable under the 1957-62 arrangements, if extended, for standard taxes, equalisation and Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants; and

(b) No province will receive less in total than it received in the final year, or on the average in the final two years, of the 1957-62 arrangements, whichever is the greater.

While the equalisation provisions of the new arrangements do not benefit the province of Ontario, they represent an improved means of distributing fiscal assistance to the provinces accurately and equitably in accordance with relative need. It has been unrealistic under the present formula to ignore revenues from natural resources which vary widely from province to province, and account for such an important source of revenue in some provinces. Moreover, the adoption of the national average per capita yield as the equalisation level—rather than the per capita yield in the two highest yield provinces—has the advantage of channelling a larger proportion of the equalisation payments to the most needy provinces. In addition, the federal government has undertaken to increase the special Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants from $25 million to $35 million, and to continue the special grant to Newfoundland of $8 million per annum.

Under these new tax-sharing arrangements, the province of Ontario will continue to collect its own corporation taxes and succession duties. In the individual income tax field, the present arrangement under which the province has surrendered its tax rights to the federal government—in return for a rental payment—will be discontinued. The province will now exercise its own tax powers, and will enter into a tax collection agreement under which the federal government will collect, free of charge, an individual income tax to be imposed at rates of tax equivalent to the federal withdrawal from this field. Under this arrangement, there will be no increase in the burden of taxation on individuals.

The Act which we have before us will implement the new fiscal arrangements that have been negotiated with the federal government. It will impose an income tax on individuals resident or carrying on business in Ontario. The basis upon which the tax is to be calculated is that the rate of tax, payable by an Ontario resident to Ontario, will be a percentage of the tax otherwise payable by that resident to Canada, under The Income Tax Act of Canada. The rates of tax provided are the same percentages that Canada has proposed to abate from its gross rates, so that each province might impose its own tax up to the amount of those abatements without imposing duplicate taxation. Thus, when this Act becomes effective, the total of the taxes payable by an Ontario resident under The Federal Income Tax Act and under this Act, will equal the amount of tax that would have been payable by the same taxpayer under The Federal Act alone, had this arrangement not been made. In other words, this bill does not increase the amount of the total tax an Ontario resident will be required to pay on his income beyond that which he now pays. It merely divides the total tax between Canada and Ontario in the following proportions:

Taxation Year	Ontario	Canada
1962	16%	84%
1963	17%	83%
1964	18%	82%
1965	19%	81%
1966	20%	80%

No Ontario resident will be required under this bill to pay more tax to Ontario than the indicated share of the total income tax payable for the year to both Canada and the province.

This bill is arranged so that all the provisions of The Income Tax Act of Canada, that affect the calculation of the amount of the tax payable under the Act, will apply in exactly the same way under The Ontario Act. Thus, the calculation of the incomes of residents of Ontario—for the purpose of determining the amount of tax payable under this bill—will always be the same as that under The Federal Income Tax Act.

This bill follows precisely the form and content of the model bill presented by Canada to the provinces in offering to collect provincial income taxes on behalf of the provinces. It provides authority to the Treasurer to conclude a collection agreement with Canada, whereby Canada will collect—on behalf of Ontario—the tax imposed by this Act, and pay it over to the province at stated intervals. The agreement will permit Ontario residents to pay their income taxes to Canada and Ontario together, with single returns and remittances.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might inform the House at this time that the federal government has offered to collect Ontario corporation income tax assessable—with respect to the calendar years 1962 to 1966, inclusive—at any rate of tax the province wishes to impose. While there is a decided advantage for the province to enter into a tax collection agreement with respect to the individual income tax field, it is a very different matter with respect to the corporation tax field.

In the first place, the collection of the corporation income tax is quite different from that of the individual income tax. The collection of the latter tax would involve the processing of close to 2.5 million returns, whereas in the case of the corporation income tax only about 60,000 returns are required to be processed. The province of Ontario is large enough and important enough to collect its own corporation income tax efficiently and economically. The present cost of collecting Ontario corporation taxes, including capital, place of business and special taxes as well as the tax on income, amounts to approximately $650,000 or about four tenths of one per cent. This is the lowest administrative cost of any tax levied by Ontario, and is less than half as expensive as the next least costly, which is the gasoline tax at one per cent. Furthermore, there is very little duplication or inconvenience to the taxpayer. The same allocation of corporation profits among the provinces is required whether the federal government or the province collects the tax.

Secondly, the federal government is not prepared to collect the taxes now levied by Ontario on capital and places of business of ordinary corporations and on banks, railways, express companies, telegraph companies and insurance companies. These taxes now yield a revenue of $17 million per year. As I have mentioned, the total cost of collecting the province's corporation tax revenue is approximately $650,000, and this amount includes the cost of collecting these special taxes. If the province entered into a corporation income tax collection agreement, the cost to the province of collecting the special taxes could be reduced very little, if only these taxes were collected.

Thirdly, the entry into a corporation tax collection agreement would require the tax to be levied under the model corporate income tax bill drafted by federal officials. Under this bill, the tax would be levied on a corporation's taxable income earned in the taxation year in Ontario. This is different from that employed in The Corporations Tax Act of Ontario, which levies the tax on the world income of corporations operating in Ontario—whether such profits are earned in Ontario or elsewhere. Under the Ontario Act, an abatement of tax is given on those portions of income deemed to be earned outside Ontario from the tax levied on world income. There are situations where the latter form of taxation provides greater certainty and security of collecting the revenue than the basis upon which the model corporate income tax bill applies the tax. On the basis of the collection agreement that has been indicated to us, our own administration should bring us a greater amount of tax revenue than would be collected and remitted by the federal government. We are not only closer to our taxpayers, and can give their accounts scrutiny when necessary, but the form of our legislation—which has been accepted by the corporate fraternity—brings us additional revenue, because of the imposition of the tax on the world income of corporations with tax abatements for business transacted outside Ontario.

Fourthly, the entry into a corporate tax collection agreement would initially result in a considerable amount of confusion. The agreement would apply only to profits earned in Ontario following January 1, 1962. This means that the new income tax bill that would provide for this tax, would allow deductions from the tax imposed with respect to all those fiscal years, of corporations that do not coincide with the calendar year which commenced in 1961. Correspondingly, The Corporations Tax Act would have to be amended to allow abatements to all corporations with fiscal years that do not coincide with the calendar year, but end in 1962—to the extent that such fiscal years pass after January 1, 1962. Thus, all corporations, the fiscal years of which do not coincide with the calendar year, would have to be assessed by Ontario and given refunds if they have overpaid the tax on the basis of a full year's operation, or be assessed at the net amount; and the same corporations would have to be assessed by Canada for the same fiscal year and the opposite proportion of the fiscal year subjected to tax. Undoubtedly a considerable amount of confusion would result, because Ontario would be refunding to corporations tax that the same corporations would have to pay to Canada for the account of Ontario; and even if it were arranged for Ontario to pay Canada in order for the matter to be kept straight, a tremendous amount of arithmetic would have to be done to ensure that the two bases properly corresponded with each other.

It should be noted in this regard that a large number of corporations—the fiscal years of which end in 1962—have already paid full instalments under the Ontario Act. All of these amounts would have to be taken into account and, where necessary, refunded. If the province repealed its capital and place-of-business taxes and special taxes, the large portions of these taxes that have already been paid with respect to corporations—the fiscal years of which end in 1962—would also have to be refunded. Furthermore, it should be noted that all corporations—the fiscal years of which end in 1962 and the last is November 30, 1962—are allowed six months from the close of such fiscal year to file returns. The last of these returns will not be filed until May, 1963. This means that the present staff would have to be maintained, or largely maintained, until all these returns have been assessed.

Another disadvantage of a corporation tax collection agreement is that The Treasury Department would lose the ability to obtain the information it can now obtain from corporation tax returns, of a statistical character regarding the economic growth and development of Ontario. The data that the province now receives from most of the large national companies, and all of the smaller companies operating in Ontario, would no longer be available.

Finally, and most important, we believe that the province would weaken its position in subsequent negotiations with the federal government, if it dismantled its tax collection machinery. The history of tax agreements with the federal government provides little assurance that there will be any more permanency in the new arrangements, than there has been in former agreements. Just as the previous five-year arrangements were altered upon their termination, the new set of five-province has surrendered its tax rights to the federal government—in return for a rental payment—will be discontinued. The province will now exercise its own tax powers, and will enter into a tax collection agreement under which the federal government will collect, free of charge, an individual income tax to be imposed at rates of tax equivalent to the federal withdrawal from this field. Under this arrangement, there will be no increase in the burden of taxation on individuals.

The Act which we have before us will implement the new fiscal arrangements that have been negotiated with the federal government. It will impose an income tax on individuals resident or carrying on business in Ontario. The basis upon which the tax is to be calculated is that the rate of tax, payable by an Ontario resident to Ontario, will be a percentage of the tax otherwise payable by that resident to Canada, under The Income Tax Act of Canada. The rates of tax provided are the same percentages that Canada has proposed to abate from its gross rates, so that each province might impose its own tax up to the amount of those abatements without imposing duplicate taxation. Thus, when this Act becomes effective, the total of the taxes payable by an Ontario resident under The Federal Income Tax Act and under this Act, will equal the amount of tax that would have been payable by the same taxpayer under The Federal Act alone, had this arrangement not been made. In other words, this bill does not increase the amount of the total tax an Ontario resident will be required to pay on his income beyond that which he now pays. It merely divides the total tax between Canada and Ontario in the following proportions:

Taxation Year	Ontario	Canada
1962	16%	84%
1963	17%	83%
1964	18%	82%
1965	19%	81%
1966	20%	80%

No Ontario resident will be required under this bill to pay more tax to Ontario than the indicated share of the total income tax payable for the year to both Canada and the province.

This bill is arranged so that all the provisions of The Income Tax Act of Canada, that affect the calculation of the amount of the tax payable under the Act, will apply in exactly the same way under The Ontario Act. Thus, the calculation of the incomes of residents of Ontario—for the purpose of determining the amount of tax payable under this bill—will always be the same as that under The Federal Income Tax Act.

The history of tax agreements with the federal government provides little assurance that there will be any more permanency in the new arrangements, than there has been in former agreements. Just as the previous five-year arrangements were altered upon their termination, the new set of five-year arrangements might be completely revised upon its termination. With the exception of the five years, 1952 to 1956 inclusive, we have collected our own corporation tax in the post-war period. We would have remained in the corporation tax field in those years had it not been for the fact that the federal government insisted upon renting, in one parcel, both personal income tax and corporation income tax. This was the only way at that time in which we could obtain the revenue represented by individual income tax without imposing and collecting our own individual income tax. In 1957 we re-entered the corporation tax field because we were able to negotiate a separate individual income tax rental agreement from 1957 to 1961. The present situation is exactly the same, in that we have the option of entering into a separate individual income tax collection agreement; we are not obliged to enter into an agreement for the federal collection of both individual and corporate income taxes. We can see little value in altering our position and dismantling our corporation tax collection machinery, particularly when the province might be faced with the task of re-instituting it five or ten years hence. The province should not at this time be placed in a position where it could not negotiate from strength. Ontario is big enough to be master in its own house and we do not believe that the cost of collection is an excessive price to pay for the stronger bargaining position the province achieves in its negotiations with the federal government by remaining in the corporation tax field.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, this bill landed on our desks just a few minutes ago and, as far as I am concerned at any rate, I have not had a chance to study it. I am not complaining about that because I believe it is substantially a repeat of the bill that was before us last year. But perhaps the hon. Treasurer will forgive me if I am not too familiar with its contents. I would like to have one point clarified by him: with respect to the percentages of federal tax that Ontario taxpayers will be called upon to pay—are those specifically stated in the bill or are they to be provided for by regulation?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, it is stated in the bill. I might point out to the hon. member that those rates could, of course, be changed by giving sufficient notice in any year.

Mr. Bryden: It would require a further Act of the Legislature, as well as notice to the federal government, to change them.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I followed with close attention the lengthy statement made by the hon. Provincial Treasurer. I am in the same position as the hon. member for Woodbine insofar as we only received this bill today. I note that in the final section but two of The Act, it repeals The Income Tax Act 1960-61, as well as a number of other statutes. Are we to take it that this will be an annual statute?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I would say "no." I think the hon. members realize we had thought, at the time of the last session, that we had passed an Income Tax Act which would be adequate. We have learned, however, that the federal government requires us to pass this Act, which in reality, is an Act to collect income taxes by the province of Ontario; it is based on a model bill provided by the federal government. After we have such authority we will enter into an agreement with the federal government to collect this tax for us. It is not necessary to pass the Act each year.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, you, sir, I know, will appreciate this. In the normal course of events—and I do not know whether "in the fullness of time" is still a popular phrase around here—these bills do not go to a committee where we have an opportunity to ask these questions, so perhaps hon. members will grant me their indulgence to ask them.

Last year I asked whether the administration of the machinery—I think that is the best way to put it—insofar as the appellate tribunals, the complaints of the taxpayer, the question of assessability and quantum of tax were concerned, will be provided by both the Ontario and the federal governments, insofar as it affects the proportion paid to the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Allan: No, the taxpayer will deal entirely with the federal government.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I think that is a very good thing. Somebody once said, Mr. Speaker, that governments which are paid a portion of tax, should have the responsibility of collecting them; but I think it is a very good thing if the taxpayer needs to complain, that he complain about the federal government, because I venture to say that the majority of taxpayers in this province view the matter in this way: that they pay income tax to the federal government, and if they blame the federal government, that suits our purposes over here, being one united whole; and if they blame the provincial government we will take care of the blame on the provincial government here.

I did detect, sir, that there was at least an element of suspicion in the remarks of the hon. Provincial Treasurer about the future behaviour of the federal government. Now, it may be that the hon. Provincial Treasurer is not quite sure, from the point of view of prediction, who is going to be in power down there. We have reason to believe that the complexion is going to change in other centres of government. He did not say this: that it would weaken their position; it would weaken the position of the provincial government with the federal government if it dismantled its tax collecting machinery.

Now, sir, that is devastating frankness that he articulates this afternoon. I am not sure that I understand precisely what it means; whether or not this government intends to approach the federal government and ask for a greater share. I am only guided by the newspaper accounts because we never did get a very full report on this side of the House as to what went on in the last Dominion-provincial financial conference—all of those things, of course, were held in camera. That is the fashion in Ottawa; to hold things in camera.

At a later day perhaps you will permit me, sir, to address some words, from the point of view of one who would like to be a constitutional lawyer, about another little meeting in camera down there monkeying around—that is not a very nice phrase, monkeying around—with the constitution, fooling around with the constitution—

An hon. member: Horsing around!

Mr. Sopha: Yes—with the constitution of this country. But we will reserve that for another date.

As I say, we never got a very full report about what went on. Are we to presume that it is the intention of this government to go back to the authorities at Ottawa and ask them for a greater share before the agreement expires in 1966? Or when he speaks of not dismantling the tax collecting machinery, is he, by inference—and I detected this in other parts of his remarks, as I say, sir, I followed him very closely in what he said—saying that it is the intention of this government, or it is anticipated, that these percentages of income tax intended to be collected by the province through this machinery are going to be increased? I suppose that is sufficient to cause anxiety among the public of this province.

This government is—and I do not want to get into the budget debate but permit me to make this comment—this government, according to their own financial statement which they published, is running in the red for this fiscal year to the extent of $180 million or more. Notwithstanding that they anticipate collecting in the neighbourhood of $150 million under The Retail Sales Tax Act, we are still going to run in the red $180 million more. Now that is an increase, a progressive increase—in The Department of Economics they would call that a geometric progression, I think—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): At least the Conservatives would.

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. C. H. Lyons (Sault Ste. Marie): How much of an increase is it?

Mr. Sopha: Well it is quite an increase.

Mr. Lyons: How much of an increase?

Mr. Sopha: Let me put it this way.

Mr. Lyons: How much of an increase, does the hon. member know?

Mr. Sopha: Let me put it this way, that in the three years, sir, that I have been in this House it has been a dramatic, startling and anxious increase every year—every year it has been more than the preceding year. I take it—or at least are we to take the inference—that it is intended, because the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) did refer to that—

Mr. Lyons: How much is it?

Mr. Sopha: Is it intended that they are going to increase the percentage? I just forget the exact words he used, I would not want to paraphrase him incorrectly, but he did make some allusion in his remarks to the case where the provincial government wished to increase their proportion?

Well, he shakes his head, sir. I will have to read his remarks whenever they come out.

But he made some reference to it, that if they wished to increase their percentage this year, the 1962 taxation year would be 16 per cent of the federal tax with 84 per cent going to the federal government. I for one am wondering, as no doubt a great many other people in the province are wondering, in view of this increase in the provincial debt whether it is their intention to increase that percentage and, if so, to ask the federal government to collect the increase.

It may not be that they intend to increase it this year, but do they anticipate in view—I wish I could think of another word than increase to satisfy the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons), but one has to call a spade a spade—

Mr. Lyons: I am wondering what is the figure at which the hon. member is aiming.

An hon. member: Balanced budget?

Mr. Sopha: Balanced budget? Yes! Thanks.

Mr. Whicher: Is that the government's policy? Something they have never even heard of.

Mr. Sopha: Put it this way. I am a man who always likes to state things in the simplest terms possible.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I have noticed that.

Mr. Sopha: But when we get into hundreds of millions of dollars, to the aerie heights of high finance, one can admit to being a bit confused.

To put it this way, they are running $180 million in the red this year. Now supposing next year, and they act like they are the last group of great spenders of all time, supposing it were to go to $225 million, the amount they run in the red. Do they anticipate that they will have to go to the federal government and say: "Instead of collecting 17 per cent in taxation year 1963, we want to increase that by five per cent; we want you to collect what will be the equivalent, let us say, of 22 per cent of the federal government taxes." Now, I hope, sir, that puts it in as clear terms as possible; if the hon. Treasurer will look back in his remarks he will see some allusion he made to that very situation arising.

Let me conclude this way. In my humble opinion, sir, I have always felt—knowing as little about it as I do—that when this government were dealing with our colleagues in Ottawa, as they were for many years, they did better in the amount of money they brought back after a pilgrimage to Ottawa to ask for assistance in tax-sharing from the federal government. And notwithstanding—and I hesitate to refer to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) in anything but the most glowing terms—we, sir, on this side of the House have anxious memories of that famous speech in Massey Hall during which he and John had their arms around each other—

An hon. member: Big John.

Mr. Sopha: —and he said—I do not know who said it to whom, but they certainly put the message across—that if you elect John at Ottawa we are going to give you $100 million.

An hon. member: A hundred and fifty.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I think it was 100—nice round figures. He never got it. I do not know whether he is even calling him John any more—

An hon. member: He is calling him Bad John.

Mr. Sopha: —or John calls him Les. I do not know; but he never got it.

An hon. member: He is not paying too much attention.

Mr. Sopha: But that is the whole point. Although I may allude to it in facetious terms, the stark reality of the financial picture of this province remains that the government has not got enough money; and the deal they made with the federal government the last time they were there, which was last year, was not a very good one. I, sir, would not employ any of them as my lawyers to conclude any financial transaction in which I had an interest. Let me put it this way. I would prefer—instead of the country lawyer—a downtown slicker from Bay Street.

An hon. member: Perhaps he would not get anything either.

Mr. Sopha: That is the situation; that is the gist of my query. Now, I say to the hon. Treasurer before I sit down that he did make some allusion to this situation in his remarks—and far be it from me to accuse him of saying something he did not say. I would not sleep this night if I thought that I—

An hon. member: We want you to sleep.

Mr. Sopha: I am asking the hon. Treasurer whether he anticipates that he will have to ask the federal government to collect more than is provided for in Section 3, subsection (3)a to (e) inclusive.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I want to say first of all that I appreciate the sincerity of the hon. member for Sudbury, especially when he said that we would be down in Ottawa, negotiating in 1966. I believe, Mr. Speaker, he faces situations fairly and squarely and that he is honest in his statements.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Treasurer is really on the bit today.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We used a magnet.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I am just as anxious to inform the hon. member with respect to anything in this Act. I was endeavouring to indicate to the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that there was flexibility in this Act which will provide for the collection of additional income tax, if a province so desired. However, the rate of abatement is set for the five-year period, I can say that we presently have no thought of increasing the percentage that we will ask Ottawa to collect for us. I would like to inform the hon. member—because of his intense interest in the welfare of this province—that we will be getting the greatest amount of money from our share of the income tax—personal income tax paid in this province—that we have ever received when this new agreement comes into effect.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Provincial Treasurer, in saying that he will be getting the greatest amount of money in history, considers that amount to be sufficient? Does he? Perhaps he had better not answer that one.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MILK INDUSTRY ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves second reading of Bill No. 48, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, ONTARIO VETERINARY COLLEGE AND MACDONALD INSTITUTE

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 49, An Act respecting the Ontario Agricultural College, Ontario Veterinary College and MacDonald Institute.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have been searching feverishly for this bill in my book and I still have not found it.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that the bill has arrived but has not yet been put in the book; it will be in there before it goes to committee. Is that acceptable to the hon. members?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can have a complete debate for the benefit of the hon. member when it goes through the House in committee of the whole. I thought they were here because they are marked as printed on the order paper.

Mr. Bryden: I would just like to get a look at it.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE OF ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 50, An Act to provide for the establishment of the Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last evening there were still a few remarks I wanted to make, having regard to my contribution to this debate. One of the things I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is the trip last fall from North Bay to Moosonee by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario and his wife, Mrs. Mackay. The arrangements in connection with that tour were approved by me at the time when I was the responsible Minister. The tour started at North Bay and I think the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) will agree that he and other hon. members of this House, who were in that vicinity at the time of the visit of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, had every opportunity to meet with him and his wife, and to go with him to the different schools from, as I say, North Bay to Moosonee where His Honour spoke to the children.

There were times when the weather, for instance at Kirkland Lake and Kapuskasing, was very, very bad—snow and rain. But when the celebrations could not be held outside, then His Honour went to the different schools, and spoke to the children. As a result of a conversation I had with His Honour, I understand he spoke to about 50 or 60 children in this part of Ontario. This fact should be known because, as I recall it, I saw nothing in the Toronto papers indicating this very wonderful visit which meant so much to the people of that district.

Yesterday when I was speaking, Mr. Speaker, I could not put my hand on a copy of the Renfrew Advance from which I wanted to read an editorial dated October 5, 1961, in reference to the death of my friend and colleague, the late hon. James A. Maloney. I would not want when I sit down to have somebody quip and say that I had chosen a paper owned and published by my son-in-law, Mr. Donald W. McCuaig; but the fact is that he is the owner and publisher of this paper, and for posterity I want to read today into the records of this House, his editorial tribute to my late colleague. This is what he says:

When he stood up to speak or move to the front of the platform a change came over the audience. If the people listening were from his own riding; a ripple of excitement preceded his opening phrase. In other places the first sentence was enough to tell that he was an orator. The Hon. James A. Maloney who died Sunday night was in the tradition of his century of Canadian political speakers, and he came by this fluency and forcefulness and platform power through both inheritance and exposure in his birth place of Eganville, where the art of politics is ingrained.

Jim Maloney was every inch a politician. He loved public life and he worked hard at it. Probably few people, outside close associates and family, have any idea of the demands made of a man in his position. He was a fighter and never veered away from the rough and tumble, either in the courtroom or in the Legislature. But he loved life too, and lived it to the fullest.

After his first try at election as a candidate he waited several years before running again. When he succeeded the late James Dempsey in the Ontario Legislature, he was not left with the back benchers for long. In quick succession he was named chairman of the private bills committee and Cabinet Minister with a portfolio of Mines. As Minister and member he worked hard for his riding of South Renfrew, with a great natural ability, astuteness and a practical sense of the facts of political life. There is no one around who will take Jim Maloney's colourful place in the history of this riding. Other men have and will serve in other ways but none the same as this one. To his wife and family we extend our deepest sympathy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, last June when the then hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Frost) opened up Upper Canada Village at Morrisburg, we in the province of Ontario had as our guests, Field Marshal Sir Gerald W. R. Templer, representing the British Army; the Honourable Douglas Harkness, representing the federal government; and Major General P. D. Scott, Colonel of the Irish Guards. And I think the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) will go along with my comment when I say that this development has meant a very great deal to the eastern part of the province of Ontario. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, this Legislature would be interested to know that, although Upper Canada Village has not been completed, a great deal has been accomplished; a great deal more has yet to be done but this year, this current season, we had 221,000 visitors, which indicates the wisdom, the foresight and the judgment of the administration in making this development possible for the people who tour eastern Ontario. They have brought a great deal of money to my part of the country and I think their contribution to the grocer, the merchant, the motel operator, the hotels, every way of life, has been enhanced as a result of this very big development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to pay my respects to Mrs. Jeanne Minninnick, who has looked after all the furnishings in the houses. She has arranged the gardens, the purchasing of the silver, the glass and the textiles to bring the homes of yesteryear to life so that the newcomer may know the way of life of our forefathers who hewed their way through the roughness of Ontario as it was a century ago.

I also want to pay my respects to Mrs. Duncan Boucher of Kingston who, free of charge, has looked after all the landscaping.

Another remark, Mr. Speaker, which I wanted to make today is this: that in connection with the reorganization of my former department of government—wherever my people may go who at one time served under me—I want to say that whoever gets them, whatever hon. Minister may get them will find he is getting loyal, enthusiastic, capable people; and he will find that they will serve faithfully and well with my successors as they have with me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a point I would like to make, an opinion I would like to express as my own. Frankly I think that, if the United Kingdom goes into the European common market, governments of all levels—federal, provincial and municipal—are going to have some trials and tribulations by way of adjustment while this change takes place.

I have read statements in the newspapers, by people who perhaps in my philosophy are easily offended and who say that, if the United Kingdom goes into the common market, it will be the first step towards the disintegration of the Commonwealth.

My submission is simply this: Since when did the dollar take the place of the blood of the old land that flows in our veins? And I am satisfied, though industry may for a time have to make readjustments, that the Commonwealth will stand in the future as in the past—a bulwark for freedom, representing what we think is a worthwhile heritage to leave to our children when our time comes to get off the stage of public opinion.

I am not prepared to consent, nor accept, nor subscribe, to the dollar against British blood. I take the position of the man who once represented Kingston, the first Prime Minister of this country: "A British subject I was born, a British subject I will die." That will be the point of view throughout the Commonwealth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had, when I was a responsible Minister, Dominion-provincial conferences. We had one in London, we had one in Kingston, and latterly we had one in Toronto. I think these conferences are worthwhile and, quite frankly, I want to pay my respects today to the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the federal government in that he has arranged that all his trade commissioners—as and when they return from any part of the world—come to the different provinces and tell the responsible Ministers and the industrial officers what they found there; what they, in their opinion, think that we—from our raw materials—can make and sell to other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I am not so naïve as to take the position that we have not in this country today the very serious problem of unemployment. That is caused in two ways, first by automation, and secondly by the tremendous number of our young men who have a very, very poor education. Many of them did not go past the primary schools, with the result that, when opportunities present themselves, they are not able to accept them. One of the things that we have to face up to is this fact: that in the next 10 years we will have to find for our people 500,000 jobs—in other words, 50,000 jobs per year. Now, it is fair to say that Ontario is the workshop of the nation. We manufacture here today, more than 50 per cent of all the goods that are made in the nation; and, sir, we make in this province today more goods than were made in the whole of Canada prior to the outbreak of World War II. But what concerns me is this: that between 1950 and 1960 our manufacturing output increased by 40 per cent, but our employment only increased by six per cent. Anybody who has any sense of arithmetic at all will realize and appreciate that, when our output is being increased and our employment is going down, all levels of government have a very great problem to face in connection with the employment of so many of our people.

We have to sell our products in the market, Mr. Speaker—in foreign markets. A year ago this summer I was in the United Kingdom and in Europe with my wife—I always like to protect myself a little bit, we went there at our own expense. When we were there we met some of the industrial people. There has been a great deal of publicity, sir, in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway. People in foreign countries tell me they have saved a very great deal—in relation to the cost of the manufactured product which they ship here—by not having to reload their produce at Montreal as they used to do in years gone by when we had the canal system in the River St. Lawrence.

What concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is this: When I stand on the south boundary of my riding of Kingston and look out into Lake Ontario, I see the ships from foreign countries sailing up, going westward, loaded to the Plimsolls, loaded with all they can carry. They are going to the Lakehead, maybe going to Duluth, but what bothers me is that, although I see these same ships going up loaded, they are coming back light.

My definition of trade is that it is a two-way bargain, and I hope that the day is not far distant when these ships that come over with their products will take back to their different jurisdictions, things we make in this country. I am one who believes, sir, that if we can ship less of our natural resources out in order to buy the goods that are made in other countries back again, we would be further ahead if we could make those goods in this country. Every time a person in a foreign jurisdiction makes a product from our natural resources, then, in my judgment, we are, what I might call, exporting jobs.

I would like to say a word this afternoon in connection with the industrial branch of the former Department of Commerce and Development. We have our agency in London headed by the agent general, Mr. J. A. Armstrong, who, in relation to public relations, carries on an admirable and outstanding service. From time to time he entertains those who register at Ontario House; he holds receptions, he attends receptions, and I think he does a very outstanding job.

He has, associated with him in charge of his industrial branch, an industrial commissioner of great ability, Mr. Webster Thompson, and with his immigration branch, Mr. Donald Donaldson. These are the people who do, in my judgment, an outstanding administrative job. Working in close co-operation with the head of the branch in Toronto, Mr. S. J. Lyle and Mr. Richard Stapleford, in my opinion, are co-ordinating the potential market for our people in connection, not only with the United Kingdom, but indeed with Europe.

Through the vision of the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) an economic council was constituted. A twelve man team of top men in the fields of banking, manufacturing, retailing, utilities, atomic power, the press, labour relations, and the oil industry is already functioning to solve the major problems of industrial productivity.

Captained by Mr. O. D. Vaughan, and with eleven other names no less illustrious in varied fields of economic activity, this crack team has a two-fold purpose—

1. To review industrial employment problems which in the opinion of the committee are important to the industrial life of the province.
2. To deal with specific problems referred by government.

I say this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that in my considered opinion—and it is only my opinion—that the point of view of the exporter from Europe and the United Kingdom is this: They are going to try to make what we need, as good as we can make it, and put it on our shelves and sell it for less. The one thing we have got to appraise ourselves of is this: that we are careful that we do not price ourselves out of the market, and make our goods and put them on our shelves, available for export which will not be purchased because they cost too much in other jurisdictions.

Now, at this time, Mr. Speaker, if I had a text it would be this: “and if any man compels me to go with him a mile, I will go with him twain.” We have done the first industrial mile together, let us continue that second mile for we find we are a goodly company.

Business today is highly competitive. The grade grows steeper and more and more of our strength will be called upon, but I have no doubt that the view from the peak that we most certainly will reach, will be splendidly rewarding, and what we then survey will be the results of our own united endeavour directed for the Prime Minister of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion at this time I would like to say to you and Mrs. Murdoch, the hon. leader of the government and Mrs. Robarts, to the hon. leader of the Opposition and Mrs. Wintermeyer, to the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party and Mrs. MacDonald, to your families and to those who support you in your house—the time is running out. December 25 is not far away—and at this time let me be the first in this House to wish you, one and all, a very merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate of this House, I do so for the purpose of bringing to the Legislature some information with regard to the progress and the development of our parks system of Ontario.

However, before doing that I would like to make a very brief comment and be permitted by you, Mr. Speaker, to reminisce for a moment about The Department of Labour—which I had the honour to administer for some 18 years.

Back in 1943 when the Hon. George Drew was elected to lead the government, he phoned me in St. Catharines in the mayor's office—I happened to be the mayor at that time—and asked me if I would come over and be sworn in as Minister of Labour. It came as quite a surprise to me, I can assure you, but I was honoured and pleased that I—and my riding—had been so honoured to be asked to assume this position. I immediately resigned as mayor so that I could devote my full time to my new responsibilities.

At that time my friends said to me; “You are taking an awful chance taking that job. You are sticking your head into a hornet's nest. They will tear you to pieces. They will defeat you,” and many other things. One fellow added “The job will never last.”

I met that fellow the other day and he reminded me; he said: “I told you that job would never last.”

Everyone knows, at least a great many people who were in politics at that time—there are not so many left in this House who were in the House at that time—that there was a very limited amount of labour legislation on the statute books: Principally the establishment of a labour court at that time. This functioned reasonably satisfactorily but it was subsequently decided that it was not what was needed and a Labour Relations Board came into being. I am not going into any details of this but I thought that on leaving that position I would like to draw something of it to the attention of this House.

Long before my time a Building Construction Trades Protection Act was enacted and the responsibility for the administration was placed on the municipality. We have heard a great deal about the Building Construction Trades Protection Act in the last year or so and I thought I would like to make a little bit of explanation in that regard.

That Act was not completely ignored by the municipalities. A great many municipalities did do what they felt they could—what their finances would permit them to do at that time. Some of the smaller municipalities, I must admit, did not fulfill their entire obligations. The Act did accomplish a great deal, and in the larger centres of Toronto, for instance, and in many of the more financially-able municipalities also, an excellent job was done under that Act. But as things went on from year to year, new Acts came into being which rendered that Act not so necessary as it had been at the outset.

Right from the start in my administration—and it has been said by me publicly and in the papers—I have always maintained there should be a minimum amount of labour legislation. I believe that labour legislation should certainly be fair and impartial and that it should be clear and understandable. Labour and management should accept the responsibility to negotiate their differences over the bargaining table. That is where the deals are made; they are not made because of some legislation—they are made right at the bargaining table.

Labour should be given the right to bargain after certification procedures have been followed and bargaining rights acquired; the right to organize without discrimination and, after all the procedures are followed, the right to strike. Management rights, on the other hand, should certainly be preserved.

To everyone's surprise at that time there was a tremendous expansion of industry: more services demanded, more staff, more conciliation and so the labour department grew. From about 125 members when I took over, the staff has grown to something around 400 at the present time.

I think I can say that this province with this explosive industrial expansion had possibly less industrial disruption of any place with equal industrial expansion.

I was fortunate enough to have some very experienced people on my staff, Mr. Speaker. I had—not at the outset but shortly after—Mr. Metzler as my deputy. I had Mr. Finkelman as the chairman of the Labour Relations Board, who has consistently been there with the exception of three or four years when he resigned to return as professor at the university—but we were fortunate enough to get him back—and Mr. Louis Fine, who is well known across this country and other countries as a chief conciliation officer.

I adopted at that time a policy—because certainly I admit that I was not familiar with this sort of business—of meeting with these three men on the staff monthly—sometimes weekly—to review every phase of the Act—its administrative problems that developed—and from our collective opinions to bring to this Legislature amendments to the Act—with the result, I believe, The Ontario Labour Relations Act was considered on a par or even better than most jurisdictions in Canada and copied by quite a few. We all know The Department of Labour, Mr. Speaker, cannot be free of criticism, and I do not expect it to be, I do not object to criticism, for constructive criticism often leads to improvements.

Throughout the years I have personally sponsored and had passed by this Legislature many Acts to improve conditions affecting the safety and welfare of the workers in the province: Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act, Trench Excavation, Construction Hoist Act, Elevator Inspection Act and some others.

With the help, again, of some very fine, competent people in the department, I was able to evolve and write regulations on these various Acts: Mr. Gibson, down there, who is the Director of Technical Services, Mr. Ehmke, boiler inspection, and many others; we would meet and devise these things that we thought would improve the safety and welfare of the worker in this province.

Much criticism of me has arisen in this House or other places on the fact that we have not made regulations covering the foundries of this province. Mr. Speaker, I worked with my people for years endeavouring to make regulations, but we always came up with the stark fact that to incorporate, and put into a statute, regulations concerning the foundries would simply have eliminated about 90 per cent of the small foundries in this province. Men who had worked in them for years and knew nothing else but foundry work would certainly have been out of jobs, because competition has become awfully keen between the small foundries and the big ones. We had no trouble with the big foundries, they did not need regulations or anything. They built according to the regulations that we had designed. So I decided rather than implement regulations I would get some good foundry men, practical men, to go into these foundries and by some pressure and some education and encouragement get them to follow out what would have been in regulations had they been enacted and to improve their plants, improve their housekeeping, improve their ventilation and do many things.

That proved extremely successful. It did not put these people out of business and it did make the plants healthier and cleaner and better to work in. It was very satisfactory, I thought, but of course one can never allay criticism.

I did not want to see all the foundry work in this province going to the big plants. The number of these shops has reduced for competitive reasons to not over half what there were 10 years ago. I think big business is essential in our economy, but I still think the little fellow should have every protection. So, as it has been said, I have always endeavoured to protect the little fellow and to that I will have to plead guilty.

Safety has been constantly under review, particularly The Operating Engineers and The Boiler Pressure Vessels Act.

Next, in labour relations, came the revolution, shall I say, the select committee. This committee sat for over two years and The Department of Labour was stymied. For that particular length of time, we could not suggest amendments because we had to wait.

So we waited. The report came down and the report was a very well studied report and in the opinion of the select committee was a very worthwhile document. But when it became public, when the information got out, I attended with the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) meetings with both management and labour. They advocated that the hon. Prime Minister leave the Act alone. It was a good Act as it was.

Well, he said, you people have been criticizing this Act for years—now you tell me it is all right, it is all right and leave it alone. But changes were made, Mr. Speaker. The difference has been that the Labour Relations Board's work has been tripled, they are operating in panels now—at least three and maybe four panels. It is harder to get a decision.

The Labour Relations Board today is a legalistic battlefield, it is a lawyers' paradise, shall I say, where they are contesting every decision now. Decisions used to be made quickly, speedily. It now takes about four times the length of time to get a decision.

I have spoken to the professor at different times, asking why we cannot get these decisions out quicker; it is because the lawyers are contesting the interpretations of the new sections that have been put in the Act and it is a very complicated piece of legislation.

As I have said, in my opinion, I always thought that labour legislation should be simple and not too complicated.

Mr. Speaker, from suggestions and talk in this House I rather got the impression, and I thought the public might, that The Department of Labour is like the song, "The Old House Has Fallen Down," it is not going to last. But that is not so. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that The Department of Labour today is well housed in a fine building, able to do actual, efficient administration and manned with competent people.

I am going to name a few of them: Mr. McNeill, apprenticeship training; Mr. Ehmke, elevator inspection; Mr. Turton, factory inspection; Mr. Hutchinson, boiler inspection; Mr. Lacey, operating engineers, who has just recently been presented by the Operating Engineers of Ontario with a life membership for outstanding service to the operating engineers of this province; Professor Finkelman, the Labour Relations Board; Mr. Fine, conciliation; Mr. Gibson, technical advisor and Mr. Metzler the Deputy Minister of Labour.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if there are more competent people to do the kind of work that these men are doing and are so skilled in, I simply do not know them. Each of these men graduated from the ranks of the department, because it has been our policy over the years to promote from within.

Mr. Speaker, 18 years ago this was just a small department, almost insignificant in the affairs of this province. Today it is a live, active department which makes a good contribution to the affairs of this province. I do not want the impression to go out that I am handing over to my successor a broken-down department. I speak for him, and I know he will get the conscientious support of the excellent personnel that I have been favoured to have worked with all these years. I would say that the government of Ontario all these years has been most considerate and most generous with moral support and financial support to carry on the work of The Department of Labour.

The purpose of my getting up here was to acquaint hon. members, because I believe it is of some interest, with the developments in the parks field in which I have the honour to play a part.

Niagara Falls—During this year the number of park visitors shown on our traffic meters is recorded as slightly less, contrary to opinion, than it was in 1960. The traffic count is taken at the three main entrances to Queen Victoria Park, also one of the north parkways and one of the south parkways and into Queenston Heights Park. Traffic count through the year was 3,188,350 cars. That is slightly less than in 1960.

This would be a logical place, I think, to mention the traffic survey presently being made by the city of Niagara Falls and the township of Stamford. This is being done by H. G. Acres and Company, Limited, at an estimated cost of $65,000. The Niagara Parks Commission pays $4,400 toward this and the Niagara Falls Bridge Commission $1,500 and under existing legislation, The Department of Highways contributes 75 per cent of the balance. The traffic into Queen Victoria Park is of considerable interest in the overall traffic and transportation survey.

Two years ago the commission, at some considerable expense, installed on a trial basis special landscape illumination in Queenston Heights Park covering an area of about 10 acres. This advanced lighting treatment is new on this continent as far as public parks are concerned. This year we decided to carry this further and proceeded with the same sort of lighting in Queen Victoria Park. If hon. members have not seen it, I suggest that some day when they are in the area they visit there. It is very attractive and draws a lot of interest from the public. The lighting enhances the natural colouring and contributes to the enjoyment of the people in the park. This was a capital expenditure and, I think, ran in the neighbourhood of some $125,000 to complete this work. But it gives a very beautiful effect.

We had to build a new 20,000 gallon water tank at Queenston in order to keep our water supply there sufficient to operate. From that line we also supplied water to the township of Niagara.

There was a great deal of work done at the Hydro intake near Chippawa. When the Hydro completed their work, they turned the land back to us and we have had to do a lot of work in this connection.

Now we are erecting a new building at the school of horticulture which will provide lecture rooms, administrative offices, laboratory, herbarium and other facilities badly needed. The building is 40 by 100 ft. and replaces an old frame building which has been there since 1935. This school is of interest; it has been mentioned here for many years, and I think it is one of the attractions of the area. It is certainly a beauty spot and the students, who are carefully selected, come not only from the province of Ontario but from other provinces, of which we are glad. We believe it is a contribution that the Ontario Parks Commission has made to the beauty of Canada as a whole because these students eventually accept positions—very fine positions—all over this country and even in the United States.

Of the new projects we have taken on this last year: When the Queen Elizabeth Way was built through the township of Louth in Lincoln county, the beaches along there—about three-quarters of a mile long—were, in a practical sense, deprived of access by the general public. Our new beach park is located at the effluence of the Fifteen and Sixteen Mile Creeks. There are about nine acres of land and the plan developed for this area includes a parking area for about 500 cars, a service road into it was built by The Department of Highways, running from Gregory Road west to the new park, and included a bridge.

The land was purchased from Mr. Jeffery, the farmer who owned it, for $55,000. The contracts for the parking area and the grading totalled about $55,000, and the contracts for the new buildings which we are establishing there, changing-houses and various necessary facilities, are running about $53,000. We feel that this is going to be a great addition to the parks system in the area and it is the first time that the Niagara Parks Commission has extended its activities beyond the borders of the Niagara River.

During the year, our commission, with the approval of the Ontario Parks Integration Board—and at the suggestion of the Welland county council—undertook to search out possible beach areas along Lake Erie. Two of these have been inspected by the integration board, namely a beach at Sherston, about five-eighths of a mile long; and a property near Fort Erie, close to the south end of the Niagara parks system. This latter property was formerly the old Erie Beach amusement park and comprises about 50 acres. It is owned by the Bardol family.

In line with government policy, The Department of Public Works land valuers are presently negotiating with the owners of these two areas, seeking to establish whether the properties are for sale and the price for which they can be purchased. When this has been established, the matter will be reviewed again by the Ontario Parks Integration Board. Beach areas have, over the years, fallen mostly into private hands in that area. This is an endeavour to get back some public beach and places of recreation for the use of the general public.

There is also another area of land, a vacant area of about 140 acres, owned by Welland Securities Limited. This property occupies a prominent position along the parkway near the Hydro intake area at Chippawa. In the long-term planning of the parks at Niagara, it is considered by the commission that this property is important as it provides, for one thing, parking areas to service the many visitors to Niagara Falls who come to view the falls and Queen Victoria Park, and who presently find great difficulty. Similar negotiations are proceeding with the owners with regard to this property.

Our commission owns a substantial acreage at the shipyards about five miles north of Fort Erie, and also has under lease a substantial acreage at the north end of the parks system—the former ordnance lands in the town of Niagara. These lands I have mentioned will be very costly to procure for the parks system which presently works on a budget; the system will have to have these lands acquired by the provincial government. But the commission and myself feel that we have to look with some vision into the future. These lands are very necessary for the continuance and maintenance of that great attraction.

There is great commercial development taking place over there along the fringe of the Niagara parks system. One of these is going to be a great tower which is presently being built some 300 feet high overlooking the falls, with restaurant and sightseeing facilities—300 feet in the air. It is being located there now. They have had a bit of trouble; hon. members might have read there was a fire the other night, during the construction. But there is another building planned, supposed to cost $25 million, being located on the escarpment just above the falls. All these great expansions on the fringe of the Niagara park will make it necessary for the park to keep alive and protect its interests and the interests of the people in that area.

Another new project for the Niagara parks commission is the Stoney Creek battlefield. During the year negotiations were carried out between the provincial government and the federal government. They have an interest in that monument at Stoney Creek, and the Wentworth Women's Historical Society and The Department of Northern Affairs desire that this monument be perpetuated. It is a historic battlefield but has fallen into some disrepair.

The suggestion was made that the monument be taken over by the Niagara Parks Commission. This we have agreed to do under certain circumstances. It was necessary to secure some additional land there at a cost of $55,000, and the federal government are going to put up $25,000 and the provincial government are paying the balance. The federal government are going to rehabilitate the monument which needs some considerable stone work, and the Niagara Parks Commission are going to take on the job of landscaping and the maintenance of this area.

I am sure that when it is completed, the people in Wentworth will be quite pleased with what has been accomplished there, and the main thing is that it will perpetuate another very worthwhile historical monument in this province. The historical society have had this monument under their care since 1890, and never really had enough funds to do a proper job on it; they all seem to be very pleased that at last this historical area is going to be properly looked after.

The revenue producing facilities—the commission is engaged in commercial operations in a substantial way. We have about 10 revenue producing facilities from Old Fort Erie to Fort George and Navy Hall at Niagara-on-the-Lake. Chief among these are the Refectory restaurant, Table Rock House with the scenic tunnels, the Princess Elizabeth building in Queen Victoria Park, the Niagara Glen restaurant and the Queenston Heights restaurant.

The commission also has agreements with three private concerns, namely, the Maid of the Mist Steamboat Company, the Niagara Concessions Limited and the Spanish Aerocar, over the whirlpool. With the exception of these last three, all other commercial operations are operated directly by the commission and this has been true since early in the century.

The commission's gross income runs now to about $2½ million, with a net profit of about $850,000 annually. This, with the water rentals from Hydro and the Canadian Power Company, totalling $800,000, provides the revenue to operate Niagara parks and to make any capital expenditures considered necessary. These capital expenditures will run to a figure of about $450,000 during the current year.

An 18-hole golf course near Niagara Glen continues to operate on a satisfactory financial basis and to the enjoyment and enrichment of the lives of about 45,000 people each year who play there.

The matter of the water levels in the Niagara River is something that is giving us and the people in the area some considerable concern. This is a subject that has engaged the attention of the commission, particularly in recent times, when the flow over Niagara Falls, the combined flow, was reduced to 50,000 cubic feet per second on November 1, 1961. This is in line with what is permissible under the 1950 diversion treaty, but the general appearance of the Falls and particularly the upper rapids and the lower river has caused public and government concern.

All of this is being studied by the International Joint Commission and by the Hydro and by the Power Authority of the State of New York. Some months ago, the two governments authorized the International Joint Commission to proceed with an extension of the Niagara control structure, and this work is going on now. Generally speaking, it is designed to preserve the level of water in what is known as the Grass Island pool and also to facilitate the passage of ice through the structure and downstream.

In 1950 a treaty between the United States government and Canada was enacted dividing the use of water equally between these countries and stipulating that there should be 100,000 cu. ft. per second flowing over the Falls with lesser amounts during the night and certain hours in the winter time in the day time. This called for certain remedial work to be carried out—which has been largely completed—to provide for an even curtain of water flowing over the falls. This wonderful engineering feat was very successful and the beauty of the falls was not seriously impaired in the season when millions of visitors come to view this wonderful sight.

However, in the river below the falls where the Maid of the Mist operates, the picturesque rapids have deteriorated to a considerable extent. I mention this because there is a movement on foot to permit the power companies to utilize a greater amount of water, which would certainly lead to a change in the treaty. I, and my commission, and in fact the people of the area including Buffalo and Niagara Falls, New York, are convinced the maximum is presently being taken.

A story in the Buffalo newspaper reads, and I quote:

Sorry, but we can find little reassurance in the Robert Moses protest that no plot is afoot to mar the majesty of Niagara Falls. "There will be no ambivalence" in the minds of powermakers, said the State Power Authority chairman, because they know "the beauty of the Falls comes first."

"After all," said Mr. Moses, "we are the watchmen. We do not carry water on both shoulders." So far, well spoken.

In the next breath, however, Mr. Moses conceded that the power people in New York and across the river are seeking—"for experimentation" only—to divert from the Niagara, more water for power purposes than permitted in the 1950 international treaty guaranteeing the cataract's beauty.

This is not carrying water on both shoulders? What is the "experimentation" for if it is not leading up to a clamour for revision of the 1950 treaty for a greater power diversion? All Mr. Moses had to do—and all he has to do now—to prove how good a watchman he is, is to say flatly that he opposes any further diversion of water beyond that allowed by the 1950 treaty.

In view of this I personally went to New York to discuss this problem with Mr. Moses, and I can say in fairness to him that he assured me that he was equally concerned along with myself about the preservation of the cataract.

On the other hand, Mr. Moses stated, and one must agree, that if further water can be taken and used rather than wasted without further deterioration of the majesty of the Falls, then it should find favour. My commission has authorized me, as chairman, to take all steps possible to prevent any further deterioration unless it can be proven beyond the question of a doubt, by actual tests on the site, that there is additional water available for the making of electrical energy without causing greater damage to this world-famous spectacle.

I bring this to the attention of the House because I am sure there will be a great deal of discussion about it. It is a very important thing.

In regard to the staff on the Niagara Parks Commission, they are civil servants; they enjoy all the benefits similar to other civil servants in the province with the exception of the students at the school of horticulture. Our year-round staff totals about 260 and in the summer season the number reaches about 775.

That is a brief outline of the activities of the Niagara Falls Parks Commission. I am very serious when I say, Mr. Speaker, I think the people would be, should be, greatly concerned about the question of water, additional water, being taken from the Falls. It is, as I have pointed out by reference to the millions of people who have come there, by the revenue that it produces for the province and by the great opportunity that so many have for relaxation using its 35 miles of parkways, vital that nothing should ever be allowed that would permit the deterioration of that great spectacle.

Next a brief outline of the Parks Integration Board. I have had the honour to be chairman of this board since it became a board, that is for five years now. I think the board has played an important part in park development in the province of Ontario. We have, during this time, taken a very active part in the co-ordination of parks administration and development. We have been, in fact as well as in name, an integration board.

My colleagues, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner), who is vice-chairman; the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Nickle); the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Auld) and the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), have been diligent in their obligations in serving as members of the board. We feel we have accomplished something.

Recent changes in the government have necessitated the introduction by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) just the other day of Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act, which received its third reading on Monday of this week. The amendment provides for the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) to replace the Minister of Planning and Development as a member of this board. This change will enable us to operate effectively in the future.

There is no necessity, Mr. Speaker, for me to tell you all the details of the operations of this board, but I can tell hon. members that the parks system of the province of Ontario is becoming more and more useful and worthwhile within our province.

It is an important subject which is discussed almost daily by a great number of people, and I speak with reference to 1,026,836 persons who visited the St. Lawrence Development Commission historic sites between mid-May and mid-October of this year; the 6,600,000 who visited the Niagara Parks Commission sites during roughly the same period, the 6,250,000 who visited the provincial parks and the 1,750,000 who visited conservation authority parks. I do not wish to dwell on these figures, but they do indicate most dramatically the importance and popularity of parks. Everywhere I go I am told by many who have made use of these parks, how much they enjoyed them and how the parks made possible more memorable holidays which otherwise could not have been considered. People are becoming more park- and recreation-minded,

Mr. Speaker. With shorter hours of work and more financial ability, many of our people who have never enjoyed, or had the opportunity to enjoy, these parks are now taking advantage of them. In these parks, of course, a man can take his whole family and enjoy the various activities, and it certainly gives me a great deal of satisfaction to know that the people who take advantage of this are appreciative of it. You hear it all over and I think the Ontario government is to be commended for the money it is pouring into park development.

We have held 23 regular meetings of the integration board, and as the board members are Ministers, hon. members will recognize that they had to be fitted in between their other activities. I would say that the regularity with which the members attended the meetings was outstanding. During the course of these 23 meetings we dealt with 133 separate items of business, involving many phases of park development and administration. We approved the acquisition of 40 pieces of property of various sizes for parkland, four of these were for the establishment of new parks, the rest were for additions to existing parks. One of the new parks was for the Niagara Parks Commission, one for the St. Lawrence Development Commission, one for a provincial park and one for a conservation authority park.

We now have under investigation 14 sites for possible new parks. No doubt many of these will be found to be unsatisfactory, but they are of sufficient interest to warrant a thorough investigation. There are nine pieces of property being studied for additions to existing parks, the enlargement of which will make for more efficient operation. Seven new parks were proposed during the past year but after careful study they were turned down for reasons of unsuitable terrain, poor location or even prohibitive cost.

We approved the closing of a small park at Mazinaw Lake provincial park on Highway 41 because the 1,450-acre Bon Echo provincial park is located on the same lake only six miles to the south. The action was taken to avoid unnecessary duplication and to eliminate a small inefficient unit.

Recently we have given favourable consideration to the resolution passed by the council of the municipality of Shuniah, located about five miles east of Port Arthur on Highway 17. In the resolution they requested that the 16-acre Shuniah provincial park be transferred to the municipality, and be operated as an improved park under The Parks Assistance Act. This park will soon become the property of the people of the area and when the transfer is completed, application will be made for assistance under the Act. If they agree to meet the requirements as outlined in the Act and regulations, they will be eligible for a grant of one-half of the cost of the development up to a maximum of $50,000.

This action, Mr. Speaker, will release The Department of Lands and Forests from a small project and permit them to concentrate their energies on the development of large parks in the area; at the same time it will provide the stimulus for this progressive municipality to take an active and important part in our expanding park programme.

During the past year we have dealt with 11 applications for aid under The Parks Assistance Act, from cities, towns, villages and townships. These 11, we approved immediately as we were certain that the conditions of the Act and regulations had been met and agreed upon. In order to become eligible for this assistance they must comply with certain regulations. Many others have not as yet completed their applications or met the requirements to the satisfaction of the board.

One new conservation authority park was approved for purchase and development during the past year and one very small area was turned down because it was not considered to be in the best interests of the whole authority area. These conservation authority parks are serving a very useful and important function. Therefore, the board gives them very close attention in order to assure that they will be as effective as possible in the overall park picture.

In recent years, the development of parks has caused a great increase in the traffic on some of the roads leading to the parks. This increase in traffic has caused many problems in maintenance, especially for townships, where road standards are not high. The local governments found themselves unable to cope with the situation and sought help from the province. The board was instrumental in the introduction of section 5 to The Provincial Parks Act, by which the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests could enter into agreements with local governments for the improvement and reconstruction of roads leading to provincial parks.

The agreements are on a share basis. The amounts to be borne by the province are determined by a careful study of the traffic flow. When an agreement has been reached, it is then submitted to the board for study, and if it is found in order, it is given approval for the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests' acceptance.

We dealt with three of these agreements during the past year, involving a total of some 11 miles of road. Provision is also in legislation for this help to be given in the case of commission parks and conservation authority parks.

The Wasaga Beach area has presented a problem for several years, and members of the board have visited the area on several occasions. Some of the members were there early in the summer and met with the local councils to discuss the matter and as a result we are now moving on land acquisition according to plans submitted by the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests' department. I know, sir, that you can look for much improvement in this area in the near future. Development was greatly hampered by space, but this problem will be lessened by land purchases now underway.

Hon. members are no doubt aware of the problems in which we became involved at Stoney Creek. I think I have made sufficient explanation of what is being done at Stoney Creek Memorial.

On June 24 of this year, Crysler Farm Battlefield Memorial Park and Upper Canada Village were dedicated and opened to the public. Since that date, 212,494 people have visited the area. There is considerable to be said about that, but I think one of our commission, Mr. Speaker, would probably give a better explanation of what has gone on in that great new park area than I could.

We have under study the advertising and publicity given to parks which come under our terms of reference. This will be completed in the near future and our recommendations may clear up some confusion which is now prevalent among the public at large.

We have underway an intensive study of the recreation lands within a radius of 50 miles from the Toronto-Hamilton region. This project has taken more time than was anticipated. We were obliged to wait for replies to our questionnaires from municipalities, clubs and associations before we could start our compilations and assessments. We now know that there is in excess of 44,443 acres of land used for recreation in this area.

The parks integration board feel that parks should be developed even more intensely in areas where the population is located rather than far afield to areas which are difficult to reach. A great deal of study is being done on areas where there is heavy population.

Mr. Speaker, I have outlined to you the main functions and operations of the Ontario Parks Integration Board during the past year. You will notice that all of these boards have been far from idle.

I am now, of course, going to have a little more time to deal with these matters. I do appreciate being given the opportunity to make this presentation to the House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): In rising to make my contribution to this traditional Throne Speech debate, I would like first of all to join with others in extending through you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, my continued appreciation of the fine work which our Speaker has done in guiding the deliberations of this assembly.

While you are in the chair, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would also like to extend my congratulations to you on your elevation to this very important post of Deputy Speaker and chairman of the committee of the whole House.

I would also like to join with others in congratulating those Cabinet Ministers who are on their way up, apparently, in the hierarchy, and my condolences to those who appear to be on the way out.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I followed with very great interest that event which—shall we say—preceded the quite significant Cabinet shuffle that has taken place recently, namely, the great circus known as the Ontario Progressive Conservative leadership convention. I followed with particular interest the speeches made by the various candidates for the leadership of the party. I was not at the convention, but I followed the speeches as they were reproduced on C.B.C. television—most of them reproduced live.

I regret that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) is not in his seat at the moment because I would like to extend to him my congratulations on what I consider was quite a remarkable achievement in having outlasted two Cabinet ministers in the race that took place at that convention. The hon. member's success demonstrated that unregenerate, moss encrusted Toryism still has considerable appeal to delegates at Conservative conventions.

The other candidates had been worked over by the public relations people sufficiently that they couched their reactionary ideas in—shall we say—language somewhat more acceptable in this day and age. I will say for the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe that he says what he thinks and he says it in a forthright and honest manner; and although I agree with mighty little of what he says, I admire him for it.

I would also like to extend my congratulations to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). In my opinion he made by far the best speech of all the candidates for the leadership. In fact, I would say it was really the only good one. It was a good speech; his delivery as usual was effective—perhaps even more effective than usual—and the content of the speech was thought-provoking. That of course was his fatal error. He asked the delegates to think and they turfed him out on the second ballot.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) who was the only one who went out of the race before the hon. Minister of Health, made the second best speech. I will say that he did not give any credit to the author but he did have a very good manuscript which he delivered in a loud, clear voice. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, he did not make the mistake that some other candidates made of trying to look up from his manuscript.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He spoke to the ladies, too; remember that.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, he spoke to the ladies too, as the hon. member for Sudbury has reminded me.

These were the best speeches, but the speech that I enjoyed better than any of the others was that of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). Unfortunately, most of these gentlemen are absent when I attempt to pay compliments to them. However, I will proceed with my compliments nevertheless, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Attorney-General was at his uninhibited fumbling best.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Is the hon. member surprised they are not here to hear him?

Mr. Bryden: Well, not exactly. At any rate he certainly fumbled better than usual; he sprayed his fire in all directions, trying to pick fights with everybody. As a matter of fact, I thought he was going to come out with the slogan "Roberts for Rhubarbs" but he did not quite make it. The gong was rung, time ran out, and even then he did not have enough sense to sit down. It was quite clear all through his address that he was waiting for divine guidance, but unfortunately that guidance did not come until after the time limit had expired.

The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) as he now is, but the hon. Minister of Education as he was then, made a speech which was a masterpiece of dullness. But I will say this, he did not make the mistake of trying to say anything. He lulled the delegates to sleep and thereby caught the mood of the convention perfectly. There was no doubt in my mind after having seen all the performances—and very interesting performances they were—that the hon. Prime Minister was the best choice. The delegates made the best choice, there is no doubt about it at all. He had no programme, the delegates had no programme; he is therefore a perfect spokesman for them.

Mr. Sopha: Does the hon. member think they were better than the Flintstones?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: At least there was some choice; the hon. member must admit that.

Mr. Bryden: I thought it was somewhat significant, Mr. Speaker, that the registered delegates at the convention apparently could not work up enough enthusiasm for any of the candidates that they were willing to participate in any of the quite elaborate and highly contrived demonstrations that were put on, ostensibly in support of the candidates.

The result of that was that the candidates had to seek out university students and others who could be induced to synthesize enthusiasm by offers of free drinks and other similar benefits. The convention was not particularly colourful because, in my opinion, the demonstrations were so highly contrived. But I will say that it had its colourful aspects. A reporter for the Toronto Daily Star, writing in the issue of October 25, 1961, managed to catch some of the colour in the following story which I would like to read to the House. I am sure that the delegates to the convention did not have time to read it.

This reporter, who is unnamed, said:

The Conservative convention held at the University of Toronto has produced a new type of campus operator—the slave dealer. With seven candidates vying for support, hospitality is flowing freely at the nearby Park Plaza Hotel. Prominent among the delegates, lurching from room to room uttering candidate slogans and college yells (and sometimes garbled mixtures of both) are enough youths to make up a basketball league.

“But that is nothing really,” explained a senior student. “For years college boys have been drifting into cocktail parties and meetings wherever nourishment is being dispensed on a not-too-security-conscious basis. This year we have done even better.”

So at least one can say that some benefit came out of the convention.

Last week, he said, a member of the committee of one of the candidates phoned a fraternity house and said his group needed some labour. The senior fraternity members conferred and after a polite amount of haggling they came to terms. “We’ll provide 15 husky, willing fraternity pledges for the three-day convention and you will put $150 into the frat funds.”

The candidate’s committee delegates what tasks are to be done—placards to be carried, cheering sections suddenly produced in this or that area of Varsity Arena, handbills to be distributed—then repair to the committee to await progress reports.

And I would like also to quote briefly from the Globe and Mail—a story of some of the colour of the convention—which also appeared on October 25.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): The hon. member was very interested in the convention.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I was indeed, as I said at the outset.

About 50 male University of Toronto students paraded last night for Conservative candidates but they claimed they did it to demonstrate—and this is in quotes:

THE CORRUPTION OF THE CONVENTION

Some students said that though they are not Conservatives, they were promised free liquor as a reward for wearing paper hats, carrying banners and staging “spontaneous”— “spontaneous” is in quotes, Mr. Speaker.

—“spontaneous” demonstrations in Varsity Arena.

As one student put on a campaign hat he said, “I want to make it clear that I am not for or against this guy, I just want to protest against the whole silly system.”

One student said workers for a candidate approached him Monday and asked if he could round up a group of students to demonstrate at the arena. The workers, he claimed, stressed the quantities of free liquor that would be available for the students if they agreed. Yesterday a worker for another candidate made a similar proposal to another student, he said.

So much for the colour of the convention, Mr. Speaker. It was my impression from having taken what I described previously as an avid interest in this convention, that most of the colour and the programme at the convention came inherently from those emporia that are under the jurisdiction of the newly-appointed minister of refreshments.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We should have a Royal commission to investigate that convention; to see how many laws were broken.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn to some of the matters that have arisen in connection with the debate on the speech from the Throne.

Some time ago my hon. leader placed on the order paper of this House a sub-amendment to the address in reply to the Throne speech which contained eight very sensible and valuable suggestions to the government. I am not going to cover all eight of those points, but there are two that I would like to deal with at some length.

The first to which I would like to call attention is item two of the points which the hon. leader of my group proposes should be added to the main amendment. That item reads as follows:

And this House further regrets:

2. That the government has failed to act decisively and with a due sense of urgency to remedy the gross neglects of adequate safety precautions in important sections of Ontario industry, particularly the construction industry, and has thereby permitted the safety and even the lives of countless workmen to remain in jeopardy.

Now, whenever one starts to talk about industrial safety, Mr. Speaker, at this time at any rate, he inevitably refers to the report of the Royal commission on industrial safety which was submitted in the middle of October. That report, though expressed in carefully measured and deliberately unsensational language, is a stinging indictment of The Department of Labour and the government.

I must say that I appreciated the speech made just before I got up by the retired hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley)—I thought it most interesting, certainly some of his reminiscences of his department were—but it surprised me that he apparently was completely unperturbed by the report on safety that has come down relating to one very important phase of the responsibility of the department which he administered until very recently.

I would just like to quote a few extracts which can be found on pages three to five of that report.

Considerable evidence was heard regarding the function of the accident prevention association established under the authority of The Workmen's Compensation Act, and your commissioners have concluded that the present system would function more effectively by placing the associations under the jurisdiction of the Workmen's Compensation Board and operating through an executive administrative committee of the associations responsible to the board.

Then a little further down, speaking in general terms of the Acts and regulations administered by the department, the report says:

Some of the Acts and regulations were found to be archaic and outmoded. This is particularly true of The Building Trades Protection Act which is almost unknown and unenforced.

Then another sentence a little further down on page four:

The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act is generally antedeluvian.

Then the next paragraph:

Evidence of defective construction of arenas is the basis for a recommendation that the plans for public buildings be submitted for departmental approval and that such buildings be subject to periodic inspection.

The Operating Engineers Act dates from 1907 and subsequent amendments have been largely for the purpose of clarification rather than modernization.

Safety regulations relating to foundries and ionizing radiation have been formulated but not promulgated, and workers in these fields are not at present protected by legislation.

Your commissioners recommended that regulations covering these fields be implemented at an early date.

Apparently that recommendation had no effect at all upon the retiring hon. Minister.

Then on page five:

The highest accident frequency rate in the province is in the logging industry, yet there is no legislation for the protection of workers in this field as in sawmills.

Révision of regulations relating to workers in compressed air is recommended, based upon medical evidence and a comparative study of similar regulations in other jurisdictions.

Particular reference is made to "bone death" as a consequence of caisson disease.

Then again:

Considerable evidence was heard on the explosive hazards of agricultural dust in grain elevators and flour mills.

And so on.

I would just like to make one more reference to the report, Mr. Chairman, and that is a paragraph on page seven:

The testimony of the officers of The Department of Labour generally with respect to the adequacy of the Acts, their enforcement and the number of inspections and inspectors required indicates a degree of satisfaction—

notice these words:

—indicates a degree of satisfaction that is inconsistent with the requirements of keeping pace with a rapidly growing industrial technology.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from this report—and I am not relying on any information that I have on my own and that I have brought to the attention of this House in the past, I am relying entirely on the Royal commission which investigated this matter most exhaustively over a period of 18 months—it is quite obvious from this report that we have a most serious situation.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question, please? What is the date of that report?

Mr. Bryden: I would have thought—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This year? Is it this year?

Mr. Bryden: I would have thought that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) would have been sufficiently aware of what was going on in the government of which he is a member that he would be familiar with this. It is about October 15. It is a report that was handed down—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This year?

Mr. Bryden: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is the hon. member aware that millions and millions of dollars have been spent by the grain elevators at the Lakehead to prevent dust explosion and to ensure the safety of workers there? Does it say that in the report?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister without Portfolio): Because of our regulations!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Because of the regulations of this department!

Mr. Bryden: Certainly it says that in the report. I was reading their general conclusions.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Why does the hon. member not bring that out?

Mr. Bryden: Perhaps the hon. Minister could bring that out in due course. He apparently has not even heard of the report. I would suggest to him that before he asks questions he take the trouble to read the report because it is a very instructive public document.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I know that. But the hon. member is not being truthful about it.

Mr. Bryden: I have just finished reading extracts from the report. Apparently it came to the poor hon. Minister as a great surprise. I think that the commission's own summary is a fair portion to read from, I think that they are quite capable of summarizing their findings.

There is no doubt that a considerable amount of work has been done trying to improve this very difficult problem of dust hazard in elevators. I may say that very little was done until there was a terrible explosion up there. That is one of the difficulties with regard to administration of safety legislation at all times—nothing ever gets done until several people are killed. There is never any foresight, and in fact hindsight is frequently very, very slow in operating.

However, I am not particularly concerned to deal with dust hazards in elevators, because, although I consider it an important problem, there are some others that, in my opinion, are more urgent.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the situation that we now have in this province is that the health and safety and even the lives of countless workmen are in jeopardy and yet the attitude of the department as revealed by statements made in this session—and indeed today—is one of supreme complacency reaching even to the point of total indifference.

The Royal commission renders a very fine service in summarizing information for the benefit of the public and of anyone who may be interested. But I think we should bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the basic information contained in that report is not new. It has been well known for a long time that there is a serious lack of safety precautions in many important industries in this province.

Indeed, the hon. leader of my party and other hon. members of this group have called the attention of this House on frequent occasions to urgent safety problems in the province. Invariably, the answer of the then hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) was that we were a bunch of troublemakers who were interested in nothing but trying to stir up trouble.

However, that excuse became tragically inadequate after the Hogg's Hollow tunnel disaster a year and a half or almost two years ago and the scathing report of the coroner's jury which inquired into that disaster. As a result of the disaster and the coroner's jury's report, a situation was created which the government could no longer ignore. However, did it act, Mr. Speaker? Did it do something, even on a temporary basis, to remedy the sort of situation, the kind of abuses, that had given rise to the Hogg's Hollow tunnel disaster and to the serious problems in industrial health that had been created on the Coxwell Avenue tunnel project and other similar projects? It did not, it did nothing! It has set up a Royal commission so it could shelve the whole problem for another year or two. It took no action of any kind to improve any regulation on even an interim basis, it just threw the whole thing off to the Royal commission and said, "We will deal with this subject after the Royal commission has reported."

Mr. Speaker, the Royal commission has reported, it has made a number of valuable recommendations and most of them, I think, should be implemented. In particular it has laid stress on the urgent need for remedial action in the construction industry, and here is exactly what it says on that subject at page 39 of its report:

Finally, the commission wishes to reiterate that a modern, well enforced Construction Safety Act is vital to the safety of the hundreds of thousands of construction employees in Ontario, and the need for such legislation is so urgent that we recommend that such an Act be proclaimed at the earliest possible date.

Now, surely that language is plain enough even for this government, Mr. Speaker. When I read it I felt that here at last we had something that would shake this government out of its complacency and galvanize it into action. Clearly I failed—even I failed—to comprehend the depths of complacency of which the government is capable. The hon. Minister of Labour is in absolutely no hurry at all. The commission said that it is an urgent situation requiring action at the earliest possible date but the hon. Minister could not possibly be hurried by that. Men are being killed and seriously injured on construction work with appalling regularity but that does not appear to bother the hon. Minister even a little bit.

I raised the matter with him in a question before the orders of the day on November 18—in connection with the death of a man called Luigi Trevisiol—and the most the hon. Minister could bring himself to say at that time was that: "... arising out of the McAndrew report we shall do our best to devise something which we hope will adequately cover the situation."

We heard nothing more from him on the subject until nine or ten days later on December 7, when he moved first reading of a bill to amend The Department of Labour Act for the purpose of setting up an Ontario Safety Council.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We did not sit until November 22.

Mr. Bryden: If I said November 18, I meant November 28; I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Ten days difference.

Mr. Bryden: My question was on November 28 and the first reading of the bill to amend The Department of Labour Act was on December 7. I will let the mathematicians worry about whether it was nine or ten days, or how many days it was; but it was an unnecessarily great number of days, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, especially for the small mouse that was produced on that day.

When the hon. Minister introduced or moved first reading of the bill I asked him again about construction safety, and the import of his answer was he did not intend to do anything about it at all, he was just going to pass the buck to the Ontario Safety Council. That council probably will not even come into existence for some substantial time, and we will have to wait until it has had a chance to study this highly urgent problem of safety in the construction industry. I might just say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister, in introducing the bill to amend The Department of Labour Act, certainly created the impression in my mind that this bill would implement the heart of the Royal commission's recommendations. I would agree with him that establishment of a safety council was the heart of the commission's recommendations; but I will say now I have had an opportunity to read the bill—and I did not have an opportunity to do that until today—that it is a real phony, it does not implement the recommendation of the Royal commission at all. I will have more to say about that when the bill comes up for second reading. Certainly it does not set up a body such as was envisaged in the Royal commission report at all. Even if it had, I submit that it is no excuse for delaying action on construction safety. Certainly the commission itself did not envisage that action—with regard to a construction safety Act—should have to wait the establishment of an Ontario Safety Council. The government has simply perverted the recommendation, the very fine recommendation, that the commission made on this point and has turned the safety council into another device for stalling—even before it has been set up.

My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that if the department had been even moderately impressed by the need for modern safety regulations in the construction industry, it could have made a concerted effort in the five weeks between the presentation of the report and the opening of the Legislature to prepare legislation along the lines recommended by the commission—that is, a construction safety Act. Indeed it could have been working on such legislation even before the commission reported, because if the department was alive to its responsibility at all, surely it knew that a serious safety situation existed in this industry without having to be told that by a Royal commission.

If it had followed this course—if it had given priority as priority should have been given to the drafting of proper legislation—that legislation could have been introduced at the beginning of this session. I am certain that every member would have been prepared to give it priority so that, by now, it could be law, so that the recommendation of the Royal commission could have been carried out, that such an Act be proclaimed at the earliest possible date. It could have been proclaimed by now, but, far from this being the case, the hon. Minister's answer of November 28 indicated that on that date he was still in the process of devising something that he hoped might be adequate. And his statement on December 7 indicated that he had given up even trying to devise anything; he was simply passing the buck to the safety council.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker—and I am now using the terms used in the Royal commission report—

The safety of hundreds of thousands of construction employees in Ontario remains in jeopardy.

I submit to you, sir, that we have reached a sad state of affairs in the administration of this province when we have a government which is so indolent that it apparently does not even care about human life.

I would now like to refer in somewhat greater detail—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: May I interrupt for a moment? May I ask my hon. friend if he would adjourn the debate? He seems to have reached a natural break.

What I propose to do after we re-assemble is to revert to motions to cover the sitting of the House and to call one more second reading and come back into the Throne debate. So if my hon. friend would adjourn the debate now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bryden moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, I do now leave the chair and will resume at 8 p.m.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before we leave, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister what second reading he intends to call?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): The second reading of The Police Act. It is Order No. 5, on the order paper.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is this The Police Commission Act?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Second reading, Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The Police Act.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1961

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Roberts (Prime Minister) moves that this House meet at 2:00 o'clock p.m. tomorrow, Wednesday, and also on Thursday next, December 14, and that rule two be suspended so far as it applies to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

THE POLICE ACT, 1961-62

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves second reading of Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The Police Act, 1961-62.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, in moving this bill, I would point out that I did, by way of information, make a statement on first reading. The bill is in my opinion a very important one. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) referred to it yesterday in his remarks. It provides for the establishment of an Ontario Police Commission which will have the powers I mentioned on first reading, including powers of direction, overseeing and leading of the Ontario Provincial Police force which will be directly under the Commissioner of Ontario Provincial Police, Commissioner Clarke, a man with the highest integrity and sincerity of purpose, I am convinced.

The Police Act as it now stands—I am referring now not to the amendment, the amending Act, but the Act as it now stands—makes provision for police commissions at the local level. I might point out by way of example, section 7 of the Act under the heading "Part 2—Municipal Police Force," requires every city to have a police commission and provides the procedure whereby any county or town or any other municipality may constitute such a board. The statute requires the board, to be composed of the head of the council, a judge for the county or district court and such person as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council designates.

There is also presently provided by The Police Act, means for obtaining joint boards for two or more municipalities. I may say that for the most part where we do have local police commissions, they are composed of a judge, a magistrate and the head of council. It will be noted, however, that it is not necessary to have a magistrate and there have been some instances, particularly in the last few years, where the third member appointed has not been a magistrate.

I might say here too that what I might term the Silk report has considerable interesting information and suggestions in connection with this particular work so far as it applies to both magistrates and judges.

It is my view that the Ontario Police Commission, if it lives up to the expectations I have for it—and I am confident that it will exceed them—will be a very fine senior body which may be of very considerable help, in accordance with the terms of the bill now before the House, to many local boards and one of the ways in which it can help is to assist in getting more uniformity at the local level in connection with a number of the problems of enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, I expect this new commission will attack with vigour the many problems in relation to law and order in this ever-growing and expanding province. It will have the power to inaugurate beneficial changes and improvements resulting from its research and its constant day-to-day contacts with the problems involved.

One at least of these three proposed members will be a full-time member—and it may be that two will be full-time members. Certainly this commission is going to have a lot of work and we should give it every opportunity to function to the best of its ability in an impartial, detached, non-partisan atmosphere.

It will be particularly noted that the bill provides, authorizes and requires the Ontario Police Commission to advise the Legislature of the problems it has faced and what it has done during the preceding year. The mechanics of presenting the report follow the recommendation which was made in the 1959 report on government agencies, commissions and so forth and reiterated in the interim report of the select committee dealing with these matters presented at the last sitting of the Legislature; which select committee is still in being.

I would point out that under section 48 of The Police Act as amended by section 6 of the bill before the House, this new commission is given the widest powers to make inquiry into law enforcement. In order that matters between sessions may be attended to without delay where requiring action, the commission would report on any such inquiry as provided in the bill.

It could, of course, report and comment on the same matter in its report to the Legislature. However, that report would come later when the Legislature is in session.

These provisions are all designed to give the board an independence of action and of reporting commensurate with the importance which is attached to the creation and functioning of such a commission.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the personnel of this board will be of such strength and experience as to give to it a very extensive insight into the varied and complex problems with which it will be dealing. As I see the proposed commission, it will have vision, it will play an important part in improving public relations of our police, improving the education and training of our police, and as time goes on, it will grow in the public estimation and will have an ever-increasing good influence upon the police and their work, and upon law enforcement in the province. It will also serve as an excellent body for co-operation and for confidential interchange of views and information with comparable, or other high-level, police and crime investigatory bodies in other jurisdictions.

I am hopeful that there will be unanimous agreement upon the principle of the bill.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I would ask for some indulgence in view of the fact that, until we adjourned at 6:00 o'clock, I did not realize that this particular and very important bill would come before us tonight.

Now I am not making any complaint in any respect, except that I would ask your indulgence in conjunction with the presentation that I make tonight.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would say that there is no question in the world that the bill does embody certain very worthwhile features. But I would ask the very fundamental question: why a police commission at this particular juncture in the history of Ontario? I think that it is quite apparent to all that, over the period of the last seven or eight months—during the prolonged discussions about the extent of organized crime in Ontario—there have been many suggestions about the solution of this problem; one of them has been this very police commission. My recollection of the historical development of the police commission concept is that it was offered to the public of Ontario—particularly by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts)—as an answer to a Royal commission. My recollection is that the primary significance and distinctiveness about the bill was detailed and underscored by the hon. Attorney-General when he first introduced it and first started to talk about it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Before the hon. leader of the Opposition made his address.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, that is right; no question about that. But during that period of time, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General laid particular emphasis on section 6 of the bill—the investigation aspect and the investigation facilities, if you will, of the bill.

I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that section 6, and particularly one of the subsections thereof, provides that the Ontario police commission may investigate, inquire into and report to the Attorney-General upon any matter relating to the maintenance of law and order in the province of Ontario.

Now, certainly that is very wide and all-inclusive authorization. It is the type of authorization that I personally had expected would be included in the Royal commission investigation. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill is founded on the hypothetical presumption that it is primarily an investigation body, then I suggest that it is in conflict with the Royal commission that has just been appointed—a commission which I presume, and certainly hope, is not designed or intended to be a witch hunt of any sort, is not designed or intended to be determinative simply of the comments that I have made in respect to organized crime or any part thereof. That commission should and must function as an authoritative body to investigate, in its widest possible ramifications, all aspects of crime, and particularly the organization of crime, in the province of Ontario.

Now, if my presumption be correct—that this is the authority we in this government have given to the Royal commission—then I say that this particular bill is presumptive. Surely it is in conflict with the intent of the Royal commission, and I say that we are premature in bringing forth this type of legislation when we have a Royal commission designed and intended to study this problem of organized crime, and supposedly make worthwhile recommendations to this very body at a later date.

Now, the recommendations that the Royal commission make may be entirely different from what is suggested here, and I can see no need for hurrying this particular piece of legislation. I am inclined to think that there is great danger that this legislation, designed and intended to be implemented some time ago, as the hon. Attorney-General has said, is now unnecessary. At this particular juncture in the historical development of the province, it is unnecessary.

On the other hand, if this bill is founded on the presumption that it is primarily an administrative facility instead of an investigatory body, then I would ask, what need is there to substitute for the worthwhile work that the hon. Attorney-General has said the commissioner has done? And I believe him. Three men instead of one—is this a good administrative principle? I am doubtful of it.

As an administrative problem, Mr. Speaker, I am not speaking of investigation, but if the bill founds itself in administrative perfection, then I question the advisability of substituting the administrative wisdom or facility of three men for one man. I simply ask this: Have we by virtue of this bill denuded the commissioner of police of all his real authority? Are we substituting his knowledge and his perception for three unknown men?

This brings me to my next point. At the present time we do not know the personnel of the new body or commission. I think it is imperative that we do. I do not see how we can intelligently discuss this without knowing the personnel of the commission.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that the New York State Crime Commission, as it is normally called—its technical name is somewhat different, but you will identify it immediately by virtue of the abbreviated reference—is a wholly independent body, independent of the law enforcement agencies, and I question the advisability of setting up a commission of this sort under the jurisdiction of the chief law enforcement agency of the province. If the primary purpose of this legislation is to investigate independently and on a non-political basis, then—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, the primary purpose is not that. The primary purpose of this is to improve and keep the police of this province on top of all their problems.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, a few days ago that was not the explanation that was made.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I just gave it. The hon. leader of the Opposition was not listening.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, at this juncture let me draw to your attention that this is the inconsistent position in which the government finds itself. Some days, some weeks ago, a different explanation for the motivation behind this legislation was given. And I say today, tonight, a Royal commission having been instituted—a Royal commission which I suggest the hon. Prime Minister of this province will have to clarify tonight once and for all—if that commission has the broad powers that I think it was intended to have, then I commend him for it; I certainly do. And I very much commend him for the appointment of Mr. Justice Roach, a man of unquestioned ability and integrity. I hope he will not curtail the activity of that Royal commission by appointing—as a result of this piece of legislation—another investigatory body that will be duplicating in many respects what I believe to be the authority of that commission.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): A permanent body. What is the hon. leader of the Opposition talking about?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Mines suggests that this is a permanent body. Certainly it is, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, thanks for getting the right Ministry tonight.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Let us debate instead of chit-chatting.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, let me demonstrate to you the inconsistency of the hon. Minister. On a number of occasions he berated me as a witch hunter, and it was said that there was no need for a Royal commission—this was just political manoeuvring on my part. Now he is in the position of supporting a Royal commission. Then I say he must re-examine himself—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, we had—I believe in this very session, surely it was in this session—a report of the hon. Attorney-General's committee on the enforcement of law relating to gambling; a report by two eminent gentlemen, the report commonly known as the Morton Report. Let me read for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, the conclusions of the Morton Report. They are very brief, two pages is all that the conclusion section provides. Mr. Speaker, the conclusions are as follows:

From an examination of the problems reported above, the committee is satisfied that there is a grave danger, if the present illegal gambling operation is permitted to continue, that either domestic or foreign criminal elements will prosper to such an extent as to undermine the very nature of our society. With this real and imminent danger in mind the committee presents this report in all modesty as a basis for an attack upon these grave problems.

The committee has earlier propounded the theory that the criminal law must be realistic if it is to be enforceable. We have attempted in the short space of this report to show how such realism might be achieved in terms both of tolerance and of enforcement.

To quote once again from the report of the New Zealand Royal commission: We are only too conscious in respect of all such topics as are now under discussion of the possibility that our conclusions may prove fallacious. The whole history of gaming has demonstrated that the best considered conclusions either prove erroneous, or prove productive of unexpected and detrimental consequences.

Discretion dictates, therefore, that anything we propose or recommend in this relation should be regarded as tentative and that some authority should be created, charged with the responsibility of watching results so that not only variations and improvements can be given effect, but radical alterations may be made where the indications are that a radical change is necessary.

The committee concludes by recommending the creation of two such new authorities:

CONTROL OF LEGAL GAMBLING

In view of the earlier recommendations as to the creation of a licensing system for legal gambling, the committee recommends that, if those earlier recommendations be accepted, a provincial gambling control board be set up. Such board would be charged with the supervision and control of all legal gambling within the province.

CONTROL OF ILLEGAL GAMBLING

Whether or not any of the other recommendations of the committee be accepted, the committee strongly recommends the creation of a new authority charged with general supervision of the control of crime. In view of the international character of criminal activities in the North American continent, it appears to the committee that such authority should be national in character and form part of the machinery of the Dominion government.

It is the considered view of the committee that problems of law enforcement and crime demand not the temporary scrutiny of an ad hoc Royal commission but perpetual scrutiny by an independent body of a permanent character.

The committee considers that the constitution of such a body should be political or "bi-partisan" and that its main function—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Non-political.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I am subject to correction here. My copy says "political—"

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Non-political.

Mr. Wintermeyer: It does not say that at all, really; now I am subject to correction, maybe it means—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: What page is the hon. leader of the Opposition on?

Mr. Wintermeyer: On page 111. I think it is "political" or "bi-partisan."

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think it is a different word altogether.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no, it is "political, 'bi-partisan', representing all groups."

An hon. member: If it were non-political how could it represent all groups?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Page 111.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Do not tell me the hon. member is wrong again?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I have not got that page in my copy. I think this is the original, and that you are reading from a mimeograph copy.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am of course subject to correction, but the copy I have certainly reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

The committee considers that the constitution of such a body should be deliberately political or "bi-partisan".

It would seem, therefore, that the intent of this recommendation would be that the body should be political, in that it had representation of a bi-partisan nature—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Was the hon. Attorney-General wrong again?

Mr. Whicher: He is always wrong.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And that its main function would be to observe and, if necessary, investigate the process of law enforcement in Canada. As in the case of the temporary commission of investigation in New York State—and this is the committee that I made reference to earlier—it should have power neither of administrative control nor prosecution.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is the federal body.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I know, but just a minute:

Rather, it should operate by way of inquiry and report; leaving it to those at present charged with the responsibility for legislation and law enforcement to withstand such impartial scrutiny.

Mr. Speaker, the point I make is simply this: That here is the report of the Attorney-General's committee; it is not on all fours with this bill at all. That report suggests, if I may paraphrase, that first, if you do have a clearing house—and I think there is real need for a clearing house in relationship to criminal information—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would he go so far as to agree at the federal level?

Mr. Wintermeyer: At the federal level; the clearing house, I think, should be at the federal level. By clearing house, Mr. Speaker, I simply mean a central agency where all data relating to criminal activities is filed. That, I think, should be at the national level. Note, however, that this report does not substantiate this type of legislation at all. I suggest therefore, that in view of the fact that the hon. Attorney-General's committee does not support this legislation; in view of the fact that we have a Royal commission now, which will, in all probability, make recommendations which may or may not support this type of legislation; in view of the fact that the personnel of this new commission is unknown to us tonight, and in view of the fact that the experiences in New York State dictate that an investigation branch, such as is set up here, should be independent of the law enforcement agencies, I suggest that this legislation is premature and inadvisable for general acceptance by this legislative body tonight.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset, by way of a context in which I am going to make my comments, that this is so complex—and I would add confusing—a situation at the moment, that I think it is rather difficult to come to final conclusions.

I find that as I was listening to both the hon. Attorney-General and then the hon. leader of the Opposition, I was agreeing with them at one moment and disagreeing with them at other times. For example, let me take one point which I think is rather a major point of consideration that has been raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

He feels that the bringing in of this bill to establish an Ontario police commission at the present time is presuming to encroach upon the job that has now been given to the Royal commission. On this, Mr. Speaker, I want to say emphatically I do not agree. I think it would have been suicide as far as this body is concerned—in terms of future effectiveness—if it were handed the job at the very outset of cleaning up the mess that we have got at the moment, because this—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh well, I did not—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, do not let me get into an argument with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

The job that the Royal commission has at the moment is partly a job of looking into the full ramifications of organized crime; but it is partly a job of looking into this government, and the compromising position that it has got into in organized crime. Now I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for a body that has got to be a continuing body to have to start out investigating the government of the province. Further, I submit that, by the time it has got into all its investigations it may find it has got to investigate other law enforcement agencies across the province. The result would be the kind of relationship that would make it impossible for it to be a continuing effective body. Therefore, basically, I disagree with the hon. leader of the Opposition on this point.

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a point of order, may I make this point?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am making my speech now.

Mr. Wintermeyer: May I make this point? I did not make that point at all. I never suggested or inferred in any way that this legislation would substitute for the Royal commission.

Mr. MacDonald: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that obviously the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition was as confusing as that of the hon. Attorney-General; we also have to sort out what he was talking about.

An hon. member: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I hope to deal with this in a serious manner and I am certain as I listened to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I was not interpreting him wrongly. The hon. leader of the Opposition feels that we should not have this bill now because the Royal commission has got a job to do. What I am saying is that we should have this bill now, assuming we have the right kind of a body, because there are two different jobs to do. The Royal commission's job is to clean up the mess at the moment; the police commission's job is to do continuing work.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: And that is not what the hon. leader of the Opposition said. I wish the hon. member would not try to confuse my speech so that it will be as bad as his.

An hon. member: It could not be that bad.

Mr. MacDonald: Having emphasized, Mr. Speaker, why I believe the Royal commission has got a certain job to do and it is the kind of job that the police commission cannot do, let me now proceed to examine the principle of the bill underlying the appointment of this body.

I agree with the principle. Now, if the hon. Attorney-General wants unanimity, I can perhaps meet him to a certain degree here. I agree with the principle of establishing this body. I will add immediately—and explain why, in a moment—that I have some serious misgivings as to the implementation of this principle.

The principle is that we need some over-seeing body in the province of Ontario to co-ordinate the law enforcement agencies at the provincial level with the various local police forces and presumably to co-operate with the body at Ottawa. This is a job which is so tedious and so exhausting in its demands that it is unfair to expect that The Department of the Attorney-General can do this job—and if you have got an Attorney-General like our present hon. Attorney-General who cannot see facts when they are right in front of his face—there is double need for this kind of a commission.

I am not surprised that even he brought in the bill before the hon. leader of the Opposition spelled out the ramifications of organized crime in this province; it was very obvious that we had to have some sort of a body to assume responsibility for the enforcement of law in this province because the hon. Attorney-General has failed completely.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will go one step beyond that. Even if our present hon. Attorney-General was out of his position, as I said he should be after his whole policy has been reversed in the last 24 hours, I still submit as a theoretical proposition—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Wait. The hon. member can just bide his time. He will have plenty of time.

Mr. MacDonald: I still submit as a theoretical proposition—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It may be his last, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): When is the hon. Attorney-General going to resign?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: After the people defeat me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would point out to hon. members that we are getting along very nicely. Now, I can guarantee the hon. members that if they keep quiet while other hon. members are speaking, that every hon. member who has something to say will have his opportunity later.

Mr. MacDonald: I am glad this stormy scene looked peaceful from your vantage point, Mr. Speaker.

What I was going to say was that even as a theoretical proposition clearly there is a need for this police commission in the long run because of the size of the job that now faces law enforcement agencies and the government in keeping up with the activities of organized crime, and I think that the officers in The Department of the Attorney-General who have many other responsibilities, including the hon. Attorney-General himself, should be relieved of this and this responsibility be placed with the body which is envisaged in this Act. That is the reason why I support the principle of it.

Let me explain why I have some serious misgivings as to the implementation of the principle as enunciated by the hon. Attorney-General and—as we tried, with some difficulty to find out—exactly what this body is going to be, who its personnel are, and everything else. On this score I agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition that it seems to me that if we are going to assess the worth and the effectiveness of this body we should know who the personnel are.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is putting the cart before the horse. You usually establish the authority before you announce the personnel.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, how are you going to get an effective body, Mr. Speaker? I think there are two or three points. One, I think, as is the case with the temporary committee of investigation in New York State, it must be an independent body. And I am not certain from my understanding of the body envisaged in this bill that it is going to be independent.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Did the hon. member not follow me when I was speaking? I thought I made it abundantly clear that that is exactly what it is going to be.

Mr. Bryden: The bill does not provide for that.

Mr. MacDonald: The great difficulty with the hon. Attorney-General is that he has been living in a world which has been changing every 24 hours for the last week. I am not certain that he knows exactly what he was thinking a week ago because of the impact of events, or what he is thinking now. The hon. leader of the Opposition referred to what would motivate him a week ago. Well, obviously he was in a different world a week ago. He was on top of the world and he was running his own show; now he is being slapped down by a majority of the Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is what you think.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General does not need to argue with me; the facts are very clear that his policy of the last year has been completely overruled and the government in effect has voted no confidence in him. So I would think that silence at the moment might be most becoming for him.

The first point I wanted to make here, Mr. Speaker, is that I think this body should be independent, and I am not persuaded as it is envisaged in this Act that it is going to be independent.

Now, secondly, despite the fact that the Morton report suggests that the body appointed to do this continuing job should be a political and a bi-partisan body, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I find it impossible to conceive of this. I do not know how you are going to—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, the hon. Attorney-General has made his speech. He is not at the Tory convention now—babbling all over the place. Just let him rest quietly.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is babbling all over the place right here in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not certain, Mr. Speaker—in fact, I am convinced—that you cannot establish a body that is going to do what is envisaged in this Act as a police commission if you make it a political body. I can think of nothing that would be more of an open invitation for it being a political dog fight all the time—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Will my hon. friend allow me to say right now that there is not the slightest thought of making it a political body in the sense that he is using it.

An hon. member: It is right under the hon. Attorney-General. It has to report to the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. Whicher: He has a good Tory picked out already.

Mr. MacDonald: Before these interruptions, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the Morton report suggestion, which the hon. leader of the Opposition had raised, and indicated that its recommendation was not in agreement with this bill. I was expressing my view, which is my right, that the Morton report in this instance is not acceptable. I do not see how you can have a continuing body doing this kind of a job if it is going to be a political body. I think that would be an open invitation to the police commission being distracted from what it is supposed to be doing—getting out the facts and co-ordinating things—it would be part of the whole political battle that is going on all the while.

In fact, to say that it is going to be independent and is going to be political, I submit to you, is a contradiction. Now, that is my second point as far as the implementation of this bill is concerned.

I do not think it should be a political body, a bi-partisan body, or anything of that nature. I think it has got to be a body which is going to be independent and certainly not in any sense under the thumb of the hon. Attorney-General. I think it should be responsible to this Legislature. I agree, as is pointed out in the instance of the New York State commission, its independence will be carried to the point that it reports on a situation, but it is not responsible for laying charges and seeking convictions; all it does is dig out the facts in a continuing way.

As a matter of fact, I think the description of the body that I would like to see established is pretty accurately summed up in one phrase in the Morton report at the bottom of page ten when it said, "a perpetual scrutiny by an independent body of a permanent character". I think this is what we need.

The Royal commission is going to do the present job, to clean up the present mess. This will be a permanent body which will maintain a perpetual scrutiny.

Now, how is it going to do this rather difficult task, Mr. Speaker? Again we are not supplied with all of the details, and perhaps it is unfair to demand that all the details should be in the Act, but just let me make this point emphatically, that if it is going to do the kind of job that is envisaged in section 6 of the bill:

The Ontario Police Commission may investigate, inquire and report to the Attorney-General upon any matter relating to the maintenance of law and order in Ontario.

—and if the experience of the temporary committee of investigation in New York State is any guide, it is going to need the most elaborate kind of staff or co-operation with some law enforcement agency—in terms of having the personnel to do undercover work, so that they can find out exactly how organized crime is operating and to what extent the law at the moment is being effective in coping with it.

I think perhaps I have established the two or three principles that I think are necessary in setting up an effective body, Mr. Speaker, but in case they have become lost in the give-and-take here, I would just recapitulate that it must be independent and independent means that it cannot be a partisan body—that it must have the kind of staff to do the investigatory work—in fact that it will be a body independent to establish a perpetual scrutiny continuing after the Royal commission has done its job.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is one other aspect of this that I think this House has to take a solid look at some time, that is that it is impossible to establish effective law enforcement if the law is placed on the books with no intention of enforcing it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Sometimes it is not even possible to enforce it.

Mr. MacDonald: All right; and if it is impossible to enforce it, I submit it should not be on the books. There is nothing that brings the law into disrepute more quickly than to have a law on the books and yet the police and everybody else are ignoring it.

I just want to underline this with one particular reference at the present time. I was interested in reading about syndicated gambling in New York State, in the report of the New York State Commission on investigation, where they have this sentence: "The heart of illegal gambling is bookmaking".

Well, as I was listening to the news at 6 o'clock tonight I find that out in the good city of my hon. colleague here in Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) they have still another of these bookmaking centres where they reported that they have a cool $60,000 a day betting. This even has Max Bluestein's social club, that was running legally under a social charter from this government, beaten—where some $37,000 a day was collected.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: These are matters which should be referred to the Royal commission, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind listening to the book the hon. member is reading, but I do not think that there should be reference made to these matters—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not dealing with what the Royal commission is looking into, I am dealing with the responsibility that rests right here with this body which makes the law. The fact of the matter is, as everybody knows, that enforcement on the illegal aspect of bookmaking is winked at. Any amateur can go out today, in scores of places across the city of Toronto, and place a bet. As somebody points out, it is passing strange that the policeman who is on the beat and going back and forth there, is not aware of what is going on in this particular establishment.

Now the reason why I am raising this, Mr. Speaker, is that I think sooner or later this is going to have to come right back to this Legislature, because we have a dangerous attitude toward it which stems right from the Cabinet down.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: What about the hon. member himself?

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. Perhaps I should recapitulate to remind the hon. members of the House just what the attitude of some hon. members of the Cabinet is towards this issue. In Hansard, page 1060 of March 13, 1957, when the former hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) had his estimates before the House and I raised a question as to whether it was an appropriate procedure for the athletic commissioner, who came under his jurisdiction, to be licensing a certain boxing promoter in this city, to be looking after amateur boxing down at the Palace Pier. I questioned the propriety of this because of the fact that this man was a convicted bookmaker. After I had questioned it, the hon. Minister of Labour in his inimitable fashion entered the debate. This is what he said:

According to the hon. member this man did not do anything wrong in connection with the boxing game, but he did have a book on horseracing. I do not know whether one should throw a man out of the boxing game, especially an experienced man, because he makes a book on horses. I think where he was wrong was in getting caught.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Did the hon. member ever bet on an election himself?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, this has been the attitude of the powers that be towards bookmaking. The only difference between the former hon. Minister of Labour and the government as a whole is that the former hon. Minister of Labour was perhaps indiscreet enough to frankly state it.

However, this is not where it ends. If hon. members look, for example, in the report of the New York Investigation Commission into gambling they point out that our means of communication—and by this they mean newspapers—editorialize against the evils of gambling, yet at the same time in their sports pages they provide just the information the gamblers seek.

With all this issue being such a live one in the last few months, I have been rather intrigued as I have driven around to all parts of this province to find that you cannot go into a single part of the province, with the smallest radio station, in the most rural area but every half hour and every hour the results from the racetrack here at the Woodbine or at the New Woodbine will be given.

Now I am a little puzzled as to whether the farmers who are desperately trying to get their crops in are interested in this. But when Mr. Mackey, the chief of police, informs us that there is not a village or town in this nation in which there are not bookmakers operating, I think we might as well face the facts. What is the point of playing the hypocrite and saying that we are opposed to bookmaking, when the newspapers are publishing all of the information without which the bookmakers could not operate?

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, all I am saying is that here is a problem that we have to stop playing the hypocrite on. Certainly this government has to quit playing the hypocrite on it, when we have Cabinet Ministers making that kind of statement. The reason I am raising this whole issue at the moment, Mr. Speaker, is that if we are going to set up a police commission which is going to have a more effective enforcement of law across the province, co-ordinating it with the local police force, the O.P.P. and the federal, we have to take a look at the laws and make certain that we do not put laws on the books which we have no intention of enforcing; alternatively if we do put them on the books, we must enforce them.

We must not have the fatuous proposition of policemen walking up and down this street—five, ten times a day—going right past what any amateur can find out, any time he wants, is a bookmaking establishment. I just do not believe that the policeman does not know it is there.

I am not blaming the policeman. Why should I blame the policeman, when the former hon. Minister of Labour frankly said there is nothing wrong with bookmaking except getting caught. This is the thing that I am asking, Mr. Speaker—that this House has to take a look at if we are really serious about getting law enforcement. We cannot have effective law enforcement if there is not the will to enforce it. At the present time there simply is not the will to enforce what in the next moment we will be proclaiming to the world as illegal.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I just want, lest there be any misunderstanding, to say that I agree with the general principle establishing a police commission. I can state on behalf of our group that we agree with it. We think it is a long-term job, picking up after the Royal commission has cleaned up the present mess.

But I have serious doubts with regard to the machinery that the government is now proposing. I do not know exactly what one does in this situation, Mr. Speaker. I presume one votes for the principle, because we think it is a good thing, and then later if we do not get satisfaction on the implementation of the principle, in the committee or in third reading, at that point we may vote against it. But because we are in favour of the principle, we will vote for it at this stage.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I never cease to be amazed by the garrulous geyser from York South to my left. Did hon. members notice him when he got up on his feet and said that if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) wants a demonstration of unanimity—his hands went up as if he were almost calling upon some higher power to assist in this unanimity—and he leaned a bit towards the hon. Attorney-General and he said to him in no uncertain terms: "We will give you the unanimity, sir." From there on not only did he assail almost every section of this bill, but he assailed it with a concomitant of a considerable amount of personal abuse of the hon. Attorney-General.

He coupled both. He coupled an assault upon, as I say, almost every section of the bill, with a personal attack upon the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. member his friend now? He was not six months ago.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I have always been that, because I do not, Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for York South, use this floor as a vehicle for personal attacks upon hon. members opposite because I consider them to be honourable gentlemen.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member is bucking to be the Attorney-General when the present one resigns.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I must have been reading the wrong newspapers during the last six months.

Mr. Sopha: Let any man point to a line in Hansard in the three years that I have been here and show where I have used this forum as a vehicle for a personal attack on any other hon. member. Let them point to it! Until an hon. member can point to it, let them keep silence.

I might say to you, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Ward-rope) is concerned, would you say to him, Mr. Speaker, when I am speaking to the organ grinders, the monkeys should keep silence.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the members to keep order. Members should try to stick to the principles of the bill. I would suggest that if the member has some remarks with regard to the principles of the bill that he now resume.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to stick to the principles of this bill, if this bill had some principles that were clearly discernible.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) assailed the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in trying to put words in his mouth—which is his customary wont—in saying that the hon. leader of the Opposition had said, if I understood it correctly, that this bill—that is, this police commission—would be in direct conflict with the Royal commission that at long last has finally been appointed as a result of our insistent demands.

Part of the resentment of the hon. member for York South, let me say, Mr. Speaker, is that the Liberal Party in this Opposition has demonstrated such effectiveness in bringing this about that he is now crying sour grapes. I could go on to say the hon. member can hardly sleep at night when he sees some other politician with his name in the headlines.

Hon. members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Sopha: Let me point to two phrases, and I point to the terms of the Royal commission, item three thereof:

The Royal commission to inquire into and report upon the extent of crime in Ontario and the sufficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it.

I do not have Hansard, I am reading from a newspaper—and so as to demonstrate no favouritism to the hon. gentlemen in the press gallery I will not say what newspaper I am reading from—but this is what it says:

The extent of crime in Ontario and the sufficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it. Section 6 of the bill, subsection 2, para. 1A: The Ontario Police Commission may investigate and inquire into and report to the Attorney-General upon any matter relating to the maintenance of law and order in Ontario.

Now as to the generalities of those terms, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members would agree with me, I think, both those paragraphs are exceedingly wide and general in their terms. So far as the characteristic generality is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I defy and challenge any hon. member—for that matter any other person—to point to any distinction or difference between the subject matter that may be treated under either one of them.

What I fear, Mr. Speaker—and the hon. leader of the Opposition did not say this—but as a private member what I fear is that during the progress of this Royal commission—and who is to say that it will not last a year or two years, so important to the life of this province is the object of its search—that at some time during its progress the commissioner himself might feel that he is in conflict with the terms of this statute. Instead of the commission going on, someone might point to this statute and say that is a matter that ought to be left to the Ontario Police Commission.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that would be wrong! The hon. members of the government—fortunately they have not said it in the last couple of days, but I am always thinking of the predecessor hon. Prime Minister, he was such an imposing man when imposed himself upon this House—the hon. member used to say that it was sub judice once it was in the hands of a Royal commission. I recall the hon. member saying that, and I am going to develop this point in a moment.

When the Sarnia land transaction went to a Royal commission, the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South got up on their feet and wanted to say something. He said it was sub judice. I say, Mr. Speaker, that having appointed a notable judge—a man distinguished in the field of law, a man who has given many years of valuable service to the bulwark of the judiciary in the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order in this province—that is it not a bit of an insult to him to pass a statute in face of those wide terms of reference and say very much the same thing.

What the hon. leader of the Opposition did say—and perhaps it might bear repetition, Mr. Speaker, so that all hon. members in this House will understand it—and there are some that have more difficulty in comprehension than others—was that the commission should investigate the extent of crime in Ontario and the sufficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it. We in this party wonder, having stipulated that power in the terms of reference, why it was necessary in any account to stipulate one and two.

We are not so naïve as to say we do not know why the government stipulated terms one and two. We know!

Politics is politics, and never the twain shall meet.

It may be that this vehicle of an Ontario Police Commission—replacing as it does in the administrative field the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police—I do not think I go too far in saying that this bill demonstrates a considerable lack of confidence in the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police because he is demoted of his powers, his powers are taken away entirely.

I notice the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) is now trying to act like one of those monkeys. Pretty soon he will be swinging from bars.

Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly serious in my remarks. I intend to be serious, and if it takes me until the House adjourns, I intend to say what I have to say about it.

It may very well be—and I repeat—the Royal commission that is appointed would not recommend this type of vehicle, and that leads me, naturally, into the next point I wish to make.

One of the bastions, one of the foundations upon which this government has always operated—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: What was that, bastion?

Mr. Sopha: —on which it has always founded its principles is the autonomy of the municipalities. How many times have we heard in this Legislature words which were calculated to give the impression that we have great faith in the municipalities, that we believe in local government and we do not want to interfere in the local affairs of people? We have heard that time and time again. Now what evidence is there, what evidence is there in view of section—subsection one of section 6, sir—I will read the whole subsection, if I may—

An hon. member: Oh, no! We will take it as read.

Mr. Sopha: Now, listen, sir! Mr. Speaker, your honour, I am being perfectly serious. I am being perfectly serious and if during the by-elections, sir, I happen to go on the hustings I will be talking to the people who are going to vote in those by-elections. I will not hesitate to say, sir, that on this day and this night I stood in this Legislature speaking on a very serious subject for the future of this province and certain hon. Ministers of the Crown took it as a laughing matter.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I resent the foolishness that is exhibited on that side of the House. You would hardly recognize, sir, that they are grown men the way they act.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the members once again to keep personalities out of this debate. The Speaker will not stand for doubletalk. If a member is going to stay with the bill, I think he should stay with the bill no matter where he is, and not wander off into personalities. I would just repeat to the members again that we will get much further with this bill if we do stay with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Sopha: Subsection 1, sir, of section 6:

The Ontario Police Commission or any member thereof designated by the chairman, may investigate, inquire into and report to the Attorney-General upon the conduct or the performance of duties by any chief constable, other police officer, special constable or by a law-enforcement officer—and here are the important words:

—the administration of any police force, the system of policing any municipality and the police needs of any municipality.

Now, sir, posited on my remarks in regard—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would my hon. friend just let me point out that is exactly the wording of 48(1), that the commissioner can do at the present time.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I quite agree.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. member's point then?

An hon. member: Why does the hon. member not listen and he would find out.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Start from the first.

Mr. Sopha: I posited my remarks on the basis that one of the things that we have heard a great deal of in this Legislature is local autonomy. I say to you, sir, that replacing the commissioner of the provincial police, an official, as I understand it, directly responsible to the hon. Attorney-General, by this so-called independent body that is to be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, this, sir, is a step in the direction of destruction of local autonomy and local control over police forces.

Now, by sheer coincidence, the two places, two of the most flagrant examples of mismanagement and maladministration of the police forces at a local level that have occurred in recent years, were one in the city and constituency of the present hon. Prime Minister of this province, and the other in the city and constituency of the previous hon. Prime Minister of this province. In each case when there was maladministration and when there was dissatisfaction with the management of the local police forces, those matters apparently were cleared up by the voice of the ratepayers and that cured the situation.

I ask hon. members then, what is the need for the creation of a super body of this nature to have the power to go into municipalities and if it be not satisfied with the way it is being policed and with or without just cause, as in its opinion apparently its discretion is the governing factor, it can go in and make whatever recommendations it wishes after it causes an investigation to be made on the policing, the administration of that police force?

I say to you, sir, what is wrong with the way it is being done now, that we need to create this independent super body to be called the Ontario Police Commission?

That leads me, finally, to the other major objection made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Is this body to be primarily an investigative body, or is to be primarily administrative? I do not recall whether the hon. leader of the Opposition adverted to this, but we know that this legislation was conceived and was born as a device to combat or meet the insistent demands and cries which we had put up on this side of the House, which have been echoed in the public prints, for a Royal commission.

We were told—although I cannot quote chapter and verse at this time—we were told that this was going to be the device and it would seem to be armed with powers to carry out that type of operation in section 6 of the Act. But in another section it denigrates completely the office of the commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police. I do not use any term of opprobrium when I say that it makes him a foreman, he is now a foreman, under the police commission subject to the direction of the Ontario Police Commission. The commissioner has the general control and administration of the Ontario Provincial Police force and the employees connected therewith.

An hon. member: Was Mackey appointed to the police force?

Mr. Sopha: What is he if he is not a foreman? He is a supervisor, he is a superintendent, under the police commission. As far as his administrative duties are concerned he could not, under those words as I understand their plain meaning—subject to the direction of the Ontario Police Commission, I assume that means what it says—he could not order 25-cent postage stamps any longer without getting permission of the Ontario Police Commission.

What the hon. leader of the Opposition said and what I repeat is that a body, sir, of this nature cannot be both. It must be one or the other—

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Sopha: I think this in effect was what the hon. member for York South was trying to say. I think that was the point of his reading from the commission report, which we discovered about three months before he did. We got a copy of it—

Mr. MacDonald: If somebody had not written for it we would never have seen it. We are never given anything.

Mr. Sopha: It cannot be both, sir; it cannot be both fish and fowl; it must be one or the other.

If it is to be a body concerned with the maintenance of law and order in the province then it must have a large staff for that purpose to keep it alive to developments in the province and to combat the infiltration of those bent on evil, those bent on being anti-social and those bent on breaking the law. It must direct its attention to those in these various activities.

If, on the other hand, it is to be an administrative body, then these three men—and the hon. Attorney-General gratuitously tells us, sir, that only one of them will be permanent, full-time, only one of them will be permanent! Now that is an interesting exercise in verbal legerdemain. Only one of these three is going to be permanent.

So we have one commissioner of provincial police now and we are going to have three people—only one of whom is going to be permanent. Now, I would like someone, including the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), to tell me the distinction and difference between those two. If the commission is going to be mainly administrative, then administration is going to occupy most of its time, especially in one field. There are only 24 hours in the day for the three members of the Ontario Provincial Police Commission—as there are for every other person. In matters of discipline in the force, the officers and other ranks of the Ontario Provincial Police, of course, have the right to appeal through an appellate ladder—if I may call it that—up to the commissioner of the force. That is their final appeal as I understand it. In all these matters the provincial police commission replaces the commissioner. They will occupy a great deal of their time hearing appeals on disciplinary matters from the members of the force. No doubt, if one had the time to stipulate another 25 or 30 administrative duties, they would occupy virtually all the time of this police commission.

We understand the confusion and the complexity of this legislation and what will attend its adoption—even if the hon. member for York South and his colleagues do not understand it, we do—we see the difficulties of it.

I would say, sir, that the government has no right to anticipate the recommendations that will be made by Mr. Justice Roach.

We say secondly, sir, that this body cannot perform both functions—those in section 6 and those in section 5 of the bill.

We say finally that we are entitled to know who the personnel will be on this commission, before we are asked to vote for it. The government, no doubt, has made up its mind as to who they will be. Unless we ask these questions we will never be told, because the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—and I do not criticize him too severely—got up before the supper recess, blandly looked over here and asked the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) to adjourn the debate so that we could have a second reading of a bill. He did not say what bill. We would never have been told what bill it was, unless the hon. leader of the Opposition—solicitous as he always is for the protection of our rights over here—got up and asked him. Then we were told that this important legislation—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege, I anticipated a remark like this from hon. members on the other side of the House, so I checked the record. This bill was introduced on November 28. I called second reading, I think, every day without exception, since that day. Therefore this bill could have been called on any one of those days. It is on the order paper. It has been there for hon. members to see, yet the hon. leader of the Opposition gets up and makes that little speech—that little insinuation—that I had been juggling the rules. Then his supporters jump up. I am just pointing out the facts. This bill could have been debated any day since November 29.

Mr. Sopha: I was here before the dinner hour, Mr. Speaker, and I heard what the hon. Prime Minister said. He said we are going to have second reading of a bill. I have looked, and I see there are 12 bills for second reading on the order paper, so our chances of selecting this one would be one in 12. On the other hand, if I remember correctly, the hon. predecessor of the Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) used to keep us informed as to what was going on.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is quite apparent to everybody in this Legislature that when we get away from the principle of the bill we get into trouble. Now there is too much innuendo, I believe, and I do not believe that any hon. member should impute motives to other hon. members. After all, this is a House of men elected by the people of Ontario, and I do not think any member should impute motives to other members. They alone know their own motives. As I say, we stay with the principles of the bill.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. If the hon. Prime Minister is going to give second reading to any bill, then he should indicate what bill it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The member has asked a question. As I see it, on any day that we are in session from 3 o'clock onward, there have always been a number of bills on the order paper and, as I see it, any order can be called at any time.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, if I may state just one word.

Mr. Speaker: That is the answer to the question.

Mr. Sopha: Now, may I complete my remarks, sir—and I hasten to assure you that I shall give them in short order. Everybody will be gratified to hear that. I say this: Let the government admit that they devised this legislation for the purpose of meeting the intolerable situation that had descended upon our shores, because of the infiltrations and manifestations of organized crime in Ontario. And let the hon. Prime Minister, having dealt with our demands in the courageous fashion that he has in complying with our demands—nay, the demands of the whole of the people of Ontario, and of all the newspapers—let him and his hon. Attorney-General, whom apparently he is directing, he is showing him who is boss—let them not be so bull-headed as to force this legislation through, sir.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Now, what is this sneer about saying that the hon. Prime Minister is boss? Do not hon. members agree that he is boss? Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good idea for those over there who do not agree that he is a boss, that the hon. Prime Minister send them a copy of The Unemployment Insurance Act for Christmas.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: It is quite remarkable when you get up here how many people want to make the speech with you.

I make my plea—part of it, having made those two points heretofore—that so far as the autonomy of local boards of police commission are concerned, I do not see, sir, why the government needs to take this step and to let its lack of confidence in those boards be broadcast in the province. They have been doing a remarkable job. We have said on this side of the House that the composition of them does not meet our wishes, we do not see—the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) said very effectively, a year ago, that we do not see—why a magistrate should sit on them. One judicial officer is sufficient. If you have a county judge or a district court judge, he is ideal, because judicial matters have to be decided. Of course they do. Matters of discipline have to be decided. They do not need a magistrate. Perhaps, at some more appropriate time, I may be allowed to elaborate on what I think is wrong with having two judicial officers on those boards; but I will not take the time of the House at this time.

Generally speaking, the boards of police commissions — and for that matter local councils, where they are empowered with the power of administering the police forces—have done a good job. When they do not do a good job, the remedy is with the rate-payers to correct it. And I invite the government not to take this step—not to create a body which has powers, wide powers, that are being given to it in this bill, and to superimpose that upon the local autonomy of municipalities.

Now I have made my plea, sir, and I have made it in all seriousness. Attendant as it was at times with a great deal of levity—principally from the government side of the House—I made that plea in all seriousness. I ask the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Attorney-General at this time to withdraw this bill. Withdraw it—they do not have to lose any face about it—and wait for the recommendations of the Royal commission.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first of all that there was a time when I, and I am sure that many other citizens of the province were in the same position, scoffed at the notion of organized crime in this province. When I heard of such references I thought that people must be talking about Chicago or some other place south of the border featured in Hollywood movies.

I have certainly taken a totally different view of the matter over the last year or so with the persistent revelations of the seriousness of this problem, with statements from such unquestioned authorities as Commissioner Harvison and Chief Mackey.

All of these developments certainly brought home to me that this is a very serious problem requiring an all-out attack and a many-pronged attack. I am happy to say that the government, after very much pressure, finally agreed to set up a Royal commission which, in my opinion, is an important step in clearing up this problem. But it certainly does not appear sensible to me, Mr. Speaker, to assume that is the only step that is necessary at this time.

This is a problem requiring a multiple attack and I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I am concerned it is not a problem with which anyone should try to play politics. It is far too serious for that.

As a matter of fact, in a sense it reminds me of the emergencies in which our country has found itself from time to time when it was fighting against an external enemy. I do not think anybody wanted to play politics with that sort of problem. Now this enemy that we are dealing with here in a way is almost as insidious, and perhaps more insidious, than an external enemy. I think it most important that as far as humanly possible we should pull together to present a united front to this menace.

The government has gone a long way in meeting the demand to set up a Royal commission. I, for my part, feel inclined to go as far as it is humanly possible to meet any proposals that they see fit to put before this Legislature. In my opinion, to oppose the principle of this bill now before us is the height of irresponsibility.

I think that the government has a right to expect support in a matter of such urgency for any reasonable proposal which on its responsibility it thinks might contribute to a solution of the problem. It seems to me—I am not expert on these matters—but it seems to me that this particular proposal will be of substantial benefit if it is implemented.

I complained earlier today in another debate about the government deferring action of any kind until a Royal commission had reported. I am now not going to be so inconsistent as to complain because they are proceeding with action in certain areas where it appears appropriate to proceed. This seems to me to be a good idea.

My hon. leader has indicated that we had certain reservations with regard to some features of the bill. I will mention one only and I again mention it as a person who is certainly not learned in the law and it is perhaps possible that my interpretation is incorrect, but I am more than a little concerned about the question of the independence of the commission.

The hon. Attorney-General has assured us that it is his intention that this commission will be totally independent. I am not such a novice in the law that I do not know that the important thing is what the statute says and not what the hon. Attorney-General, distinguished as he may be in such matters, may say.

I have searched this bill and have been unable to discover any provision whatsoever regarding the tenure of the commission and it is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that independence is intimately bound up with tenure of office. If any person has a secure, unchallenged and unchallengeable tenure he is independent, but if there is any chance that he is subject to arbitrary dismissal, then his independence is to some degree reduced.

It may be that that I have missed something here, if I have I will be glad to have it called to my attention. But I think that it should clearly be stated in this bill either that the members of this commission will hold office for a specified term of office which should not be less than 10 years, or I might say even preferably, that they should be removable only by address of this Assembly. That, in my opinion, would create true independence and would create confidence that the commission is truly independent. I might even go further and make what may be a novel suggestion, that the appointments should be subject to review in this Assembly, but once the members have been approved they should then have unquestioned tenure of office.

That, Mr. Speaker, is certainly the most serious reservation I have in mind. It may be that I have simply missed something in the bill or in the statute which it proposes to amend. I hope that when we get into the committee stage of his bill, the hon. Attorney-General will be in a position to give us a complete assurance on this matter, not only on his own say-so but based on the wording of the bill and of the statute which it proposes to amend. If there is any inadequacy on this question of tenure, I would suggest to the government that they should consider bringing in an amendment at the committee stage of the bill.

However, that is a reservation on a matter of detail, important as the detail may be. On the question of principle it seems to me that it is most important that all of us should pull together and support any reasonable measure the government may propose to try to deal with this very serious problem and I would merely reiterate the position stated by my hon. leader, Mr. Speaker, that this group plans to vote for the second reading of this bill, thus indicating our support of the basic principle of the bill.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I am even running the danger of being called irresponsible by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) by saying that I have what I think are fundamental and very serious difficulties with the bill itself. I think it falls very far short of what the government expects of it. The portrayals by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on various occasions, seem to me to be out of line with the clauses of the bill itself.

I want to go back just for a moment or so to a few weeks ago when there was first talk of this bill being brought into the Legislature. The purpose of the bill at that time, as I recall it—and I know it was emphasized by both the hon. Attorney-General and the hon. Prime Minister in subsequent speeches—the purpose of the bill was to allay the fears of those who felt there was organized crime in this province and that some instrument ought to be brought into being to cope with that situation. This bill was designed to do that very thing, it is not designed to do the thing that is suggested tonight, that it is supposed to do.

Now that is my first real objection to it. It is not a bill to investigate, it is an administrative bill. There is a clear line of demarcation and distinction between the two. Up until the past few days, it was a bill that would have embodied in it powers of investigation, powers of finding out, powers of searching and bringing back to the government the result of their inquiries. But tonight it is an administrative bill and it is of entirely different complexion when one views it in that light.

The other serious objection that I have to the bill is this—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. member let me—

Mr. Oliver: No, I want to finish what I have to say. The other serious objection has to do with the Royal commission itself. That Royal commission has been clothed with the widest powers, I think we all agree now that we at least interpret that it has quite wide powers—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): The hon. member's leader disagreed.

Mr. Oliver: The hon. Minister should just keep quiet, he will have trouble enough looking after his liquid refreshments; he is not doing too good a job of that.

What I want to say about the Royal commission is this: they will be called upon to examine and to report. I would think that they will make some very fundamental recommendations in their report and I would think, Mr. Speaker, that one of their recommendations might well be the very kind of thing that we are putting in this bill here tonight. We are in my estimation pre-judging what the Royal commission might very properly do when it makes its recommendations to this government and to this House. Therefore, I say it is untimely, it is not the proper time to bring the bill before the House.

The other point is, of course, as to personnel. I do think that before we are asked to vote on this bill we should know who are the people who are going to be on the commission.

The other point, of course, is the political aspects of the bill itself. Any commission that is set up under the terms of this legislation, if it is to be worth anything at all, it must be completely non-political. Now I ask this House to judge how we can say that this commission will be non-political when its members are appointed by order-in-council and it is responsible to the hon. Attorney-General of this province? Now surely that is a political commission and nothing else.

Therefore I suggest to hon. members that if the commission is to be worthwhile, and if it has a function to perform, it should be so non-political that it does not report to the hon. Attorney-General of the province, it reports to the hon. Prime Minister and through the hon. Prime Minister to the House. How we can argue for one moment that it is not political in its operation when it is appointed by the government, and reports to the hon. Attorney-General, is beyond me.

For those reasons and from a layman's point of view, I cannot see why there is any hurry for this bill; I cannot see why we should support its second reading, because of the reasons we have given.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, at the actual time of the first reading of the bill it was quite clear that the government had no idea of having a Royal probe. It appeared, I think, that it was actually trying to hide behind the report and the introduction of that bill. In its mind, I think, was this: that it would take the place of having a Royal probe. Now, and I think that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) will have to admit this, it was only by the constant pounding on the part of the people of the province that a Royal probe was finally brought about. That is true.

I have noticed that in other probes the government does not make any hidden effort at all to muddy up the waters, it merely appoints a commissioner and also appoints a counsel for the commission. Any Royal probes that I have seen in the last 18 years, the man who is appointed or the man who has been appointed as counsel for the commission has always been a high ranking Tory in this province—with no exceptions at all. I think that we should have the absolute assurance of the hon. Prime Minister of the province that this probe will have the widest possible powers; that there will be no restrictions. The hon. Prime Minister knows what I am talking about.

Five times now the hon. leader of the Opposition has asked you for this one question: Are the powers, are the terms of reference broad enough that they will embrace all forms of crime and all the departments of the government? I think it is pretty nearly time that the hon. Prime Minister of the province stood up in the House and gave all of us his absolute assurance that it has the broadest of powers.

An hon. member: He has done that!

Mr. Reaume: He has not.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have heard an expression used in this House on several other occasions and I guess it is true again tonight; the Opposition is trying to suck and whistle with the same breath.

The Opposition is opposed to crime and all its ramifications, imagined crime, unimagined crime, all kinds of crime, and when we come in here with a bill to set up a police commission to put the investigation of crime in this province on a continuing basis, what do we meet? We meet legalistic arguments, we meet questions of whether it is administrative, we meet quibbling about when the bill was called, which I must say I do to a certain extent resent because this bill was on the order paper for a long time. It could have been called at any time since November 29 and I would assume that the hon. leader of the Opposition was ready to debate it at any time from that date forward because it had sat on the order paper from that date.

However, I will just point out a few of the things I see that this bill can do. In the first place, I can see no conflict between the functions of this bill and the Royal commission. The Royal commission is set up to do some very specific things and it will function, I would hope, within a specific period of time, in order that we may get the answers to some of these problems.

These matters have come about as a result of certain allegations, many of these matters are presently under review by the courts of Ontario, and who is to say when we will receive the report from the Royal commission? No one tonight is able to say when that report will be here. But this government is not prepared—as the Opposition would ask us to—we are not prepared to leave this whole question with nothing to be done about it until the final report of this Royal commission comes in. This police commission has many functions that it can carry out while the Royal commission is discharging its functions and duties as well.

It has been mentioned by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), and he has quoted the Morton report, in which he speaks about a national body, and which recommends a Canada-wide body to deal with these matters. Now what better function could this police commission serve, for instance, in the event that the federal people do decide to move; because we all know that the criminal code is a matter of federal jurisdiction.

We all know that there are great fields of crime and various facets of crime over which this assembly has no control. What better function could this body serve, for instance, than to co-operate with the federal government in solving these problems? I point out this, that could be done, and should be done, and is that which we intend to do.

There are all types of research projects which could be carried out in the field of criminal investigation and police training. These are matters that will fall under the jurisdiction of this commission.

There is the whole question of co-operation with similar bodies that are set up in jurisdictions that are adjacent to this province. A great deal has been made of this matter in the past few weeks and we are taking steps to appoint a body that can deal with similar bodies and other jurisdictions to satisfy itself as to what is going on and satisfy itself as to what steps it might recommend that this government or other jurisdictions or other police commissions should take in the province in order to provide the police protection that we need.

I mention these matters that can be dealt with by this body. I consider it to be nothing but obstructionism on the part of the Opposition to oppose this on what I term and believe to be the completely legalistic basis that has been advanced. It is impossible for us to appoint the personnel to this police commission until we have the bill passed and until we have power to appoint them, because the power of appointment lies within this Act and I can assure this House that we will—

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is pretty technical—

Mr. Robarts: It is not the least bit legalistic. What power have we to appoint this commission until this bill becomes law? We have no power whatsoever.

Now I can point out that I am presently negotiating with certain people to sit on this commission. I am not in a position to tell the House who they are because I have not as yet obtained their agreement to take part and to sit on this commission. But I can assure the House that as soon as I am able to do so I will and if the appointments—if I can arrange the appointments during the recess—I will make a public announcement of it as soon as possible.

I can further assure the House that we will be satisfied with no one but men of very high integrity and of ability and of knowledge in these fields. I have made some notes here upon what was said by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). I did not really understand his reference to my own community of London. He made some reference there to the police force and—

Mr. Sopha: Did not a policeman run for mayor?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes!

Mr. Sopha: Down there?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes!

Mr. Sopha: After an unsavory situation in the police force, he ran for mayor and it was investigated by a judge—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I fail to see the significance.

However, as far as the point that was made by the hon. member for Sudbury, that we are derogating from municipal autonomy, this is a pretty tattered old garment to produce in a debate of this type because as he knows under the bill as it stands now, it is the commissioner of the Ontario police who carries out the function that we are going to give to a commission of three people. We will in no way derogate anything from municipal autonomy that is not already derogated, if I may put it that way.

I can only repeat that as far as this government is concerned, we feel that this bill will create a body that has a real job to do. We will obtain proper personnel to do the job and I would ask the House to support this bill in the interests of what we are all attempting to do. We have heard many high-sounding phrases about crime and so on. This is a very concrete step that we propose to the House to deal with this problem. I suggest that it falls to the sense of responsibility of all of us to the people of this province, to proceed with these matters as rapidly as possible.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, one thing that I want to point out is that I hope that no hon. member from the government benches will say that I am bringing in legal obstacles to this bill, because I assure them that I know nothing of legal matters whatsoever. However, even we laymen are very interested in bills such as this and I think that it is only fit and proper that we should have some things to say about it.

First, may I say that we in the Opposition benches resent very strongly the observations of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) when he stood here just a minute ago and said that we were trying to obstruct the cause of justice in this province, when in reality what we are trying to do is to help him out. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, had it not been for the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the members from the Opposition benches, we would not have had a Royal commission in the first place. We are the people who caused the Royal commission in this province and nobody else. It was the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Why only a few days ago they were saying there was no need for one.

Mr. Whicher: It was the hon. leader of the Opposition, with the great amount of work that he did in gathering the material which he so ably gave in this House a few days ago, that caused a Royal commission. He gave the information to the papers of this province and the papers demanded that this government have a Royal commission. Hon. members of the government saved their skins and their political hides when they caused a Royal commission to be established. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. Prime Minister that he is going to have to do a whole lot more than that to save the political hide of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), because it is nailed to the wall right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the hon. member to speak on the bill which is before the House.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On a point of privilege. I will stake my personal and political career and I expect the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) will have to do likewise, on the outcome of this inquiry.

An hon. member: The hon. Attorney-General has not got one. He has nothing at stake.

Mr. Sopha: It ended on October 24.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Whicher: If he is staking his political career, it is very small stakes indeed.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask this question as a layman who knows nothing of legal matters. Is there no rule in this House that says that even discussing a bill such as this is sub judice, in as much as a Royal commission has already been appointed by the government of this province?

Mr. MacDonald: No! No! And do not get that rule established, because the hon. member will be arguing against it.

An hon. member: He only asked Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Whicher: I am only asking a question! There may or there may not be, but I am not nearly as well-informed about legal matters as the lawyer from York South.

Mr. Speaker: Order! order!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members of this House are fair, they will admit these three points.

First, this bill was conceived before the government decided to have a Royal commission. There is no question about that whatsoever.

Second, it was brought forth as an excuse for not having a Royal commission. Is there any question about that whatsoever? I heard the hon. Attorney-General on more than one occasion in this House say that inasmuch as this bill was coming forth, there would be no reason why we should have a Royal commission in the province.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On a point of privilege in answer to that: the only reason we are having a Royal commission is the charges of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and he will stand or fall on those.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) should never use the word "fall" in this House, because he is the one who is falling.

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a matter of privilege, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Robarts) whether the explanation the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has made is accurate? Is that the reason? The hon. Attorney-General has said that the only reason for the appointment of a Royal commission is because of the so-called charges that I have made.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is not a simple thing to answer the question. As I said in the House, at the time the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) made his address in the Throne debate—I said subsequent to that—that I would examine all the matters which he had raised and decide what I would recommend to the government to do; and that is what I did. The decision was based on an examination of all those facts that were revealed in the speech that the hon. leader of the Opposition made, as I said before. I do not particularly want to go into this again, but if he reads the address I made on Monday when I announced the appointment of the Royal commission he will see in that speech the reasons why I recommended to the government that the Royal commission be appointed.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is the hon. Prime Minister denying the statement that has just been made by the hon. Attorney-General?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of real personal privilege; I am addressing myself to you.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): State the privilege!

Mr. Wintermeyer: My point of privilege is basic and elementary, as I stated.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. leader of the Opposition has not stated it yet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General rose in his chair and said the only reason for the appointment of a Royal commission was because of certain charges that I had made in this House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No privilege in that! The hon. leader of the Opposition was not insulted.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, just a minute, there certainly is.

Mr. Speaker, I am addressing myself to you. I ask you to rule whether or not; first, this is a matter of privilege and I have the right to ask of the hon. Prime Minister whether his hon. Attorney-General has made an accurate statement or not.

Mr. Speaker: No ruling is necessary on that.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted I was not at all through; I think we will have to talk for a long time to get the government to change its mind. As a matter of fact, I assure hon. members opposite that if they do change—and I say this in a very kindly way—we are not going to boast to the people of the province that they had to change their minds or anything like that. We will be very nice about this thing. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if we make mistakes on this side of the House we will be only too pleased to admit it to the public.

Only the other day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) admitted to all of the six million people of the province of Ontario that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) had made a mistake and he had formed a Royal commission when the hon. Attorney-General said it was not necessary. The hon. Prime Minister admitted this to six million people.

Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Attorney-General and the hon. Prime Minister are honest and conscientious, as they were in forming a Royal commission, that once again they will say to the people of this great province: "Yes, in our inexperience in this new government, we have made mistake No. 2." And as I say, we will be kind in our criticism and not say another word about it. We will let the people be the judge.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, on this bill I have three points to make.

First, this bill was certainly conceived before a Royal commission was ever thought of. Second, it was brought forth as an excuse for not having a Royal commission. Things have changed completely since the hon. Prime Minister stood up in his seat and said he had made a mistake and they were going to have a Royal commission.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: When did I say that?

Mr. Whicher: By the actions of the hon. Prime Minister. Actions, Mr. Speaker, speak a whole lot louder than words.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the other day they spoke very loudly to all the people in the province. Particularly the people in the five by-elections that they are having on January 18, will speak very loudly and clearly.

Mr. Speaker, this is my final question. Let us for one minute put ourselves in the position of that very learned man whom all members of the legal profession have said is a fine man and a credit to his great profession; let us put ourselves in the mind of Chief Justice Roach, who has been given by the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario the job of investigating organized crime. Then, all of a sudden, two days afterwards, the hon. Prime Minister, by bringing forth this bill in this House has said he is not trusting this Royal commission. They have to have some proof from The Department of the Attorney-General to go and check on it and do the job twice.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not necessary at all and I do hope that even if the new NDP's do not support us, in our views, that the government will change their mind correctly and sincerely as they did two days ago.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, such consummate rudeness, such rudeness!

I shall try to be brief. If the hon. back benches of the government will be quiet I shall try to make my remarks as brief as possible.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, is "schizophrenic" unparliamentary?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, since I came to this House almost three years ago, I have come to learn that the government benches opposite have a favourite phrase and I think it is something about "in the fullness of time." Coming to know the policy of the government which is apparently being one of caution, I have come to expect them to go slowly.

It is somewhat confusing to me to listen to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) when he rose to his feet a few moments ago. In trying to castigate the Opposition he stated, or he repeated, the expression which has been used in this House about "sucking and whistling at the same time." Mr. Speaker, if ever I saw an example of whistling and sucking in the same breath, it is in the action of the government benches in forcing this bill through at this time.

The hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has made a statement not once, not twice but many times over the past few months, stating that there was no need for a Royal commission in this province. He has amplified it. He has criticized the hon. members of the Opposition in calling for one. Now the government has done an excellent case of manoeuvring or of whistling and sucking at the same time by changing their minds within a few months and calling for a Royal commission.

I saw the same principle followed by the hon. Prime Minister just a few moments ago when the government benches would not even answer a short, straightforward question from the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). When the hon. Prime Minister was asked whether or not the statements of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) were part of the policy of this government, he could not answer straightforwardly. Mr. Speaker, if that is not sucking and whistling at the same time, I do not know what it is.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that some of the government supporters cannot understand the function of an Opposition. We are quite willing to pull with the government when we believe that they are right. My hon. leader has tonight commended the hon. Prime Minister in the appointment of a Royal commission.

Certainly there should be some consideration for our views when we oppose this bill which we believe to be duplication, which we believe will hurt the purposes of the Royal commission, which we feel will hinder the Royal commission. Surely there is some reason when we feel that there is a duplication.

We have pointed out that this is a very serious matter, in our opinion and we will not do anything in this party which will hinder the cause of that Royal commission, which we feel to be all-important in the life, the social and economic life, of the people of this province.

I find it difficult to understand the reasoning of the hon. Prime Minister when he says that there is no conflict between the purposes of the Royal commission and the purposes of the police commission. In my opinion, and the opinion which has been voiced on this side of the House, there most certainly is a similarity. I think to say that they are not trying to accomplish the same purpose, or to give that impression, is erroneous.

I think, as I said, that there is a conflict. I think that if the government and the hon. Prime Minister would take a little bit of time, would allow this commission to come forward with their views, and providing the Royal commission did not indicate a different course of action, I think the hon. Prime Minister would receive the support of this party. But for the hon. Prime Minister or the hon. Attorney-General to say, or for the hon. members of the N.D.P. party, who made some kind of foolish statement that because we disagree with the government, we show the height of irresponsibility—I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if ever I heard an irresponsible statement that was it. The function of the Opposition is to oppose the government when they feel that it is wrong. And I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) made some kind of a comment about understanding why I had been in the Opposition so long. I have been here for a considerably shorter period of time than he has been in the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, we oppose this bill on principle, we oppose this bill because we feel it should not be coming forward at this time. We will support any progressive measure which we feel will get at the heart and the soul of organized crime in this province, but we are prepared to go forward in a sensible, systematic manner and not get into a panic and have the whole thing duplicated, and perhaps hinder the cause of the Royal commission in so doing.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Will those members in favour of the motion say “aye”.

As many as are opposed please say “nay”.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I might say at the outset that as an Opposition group I hope that we can distinguish between opposition and obstruction.

Before this particular debate was adjourned at the supper hour, I was dealing with what I consider to be a highly important matter, although the Liberals considered it so unimportant that they did not even mention it in their amendment that covered what one would have thought was almost everything under the sun. That was the question of industrial safety.

Before I leave that subject, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer in somewhat greater detail than I did when I previously referred to the matter, to the answer given by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) to my question on November 28 regarding the death of Luigi Trevisiol. I would like to quote again the report that he quoted from the inspector from the Toronto department of buildings:

I have made an inspection of the above property. A permit was issued under the above file number [that is 64888] to build an 11-storey building.

On Monday, November 27, 1961, at approximately 3.30 p.m. a brick-layer fell to his death from the ninth floor of the building. This man, Luigi Trevisiol, was engaged in laying brick in the south-west corner of the building, near a projecting balcony approximately 5 ft. by 15 ft. in size. Guard rails and kick planks were in evidence here prior to this accident.

However, the above foreman, Feareno Orsolini, has informed me that the short kickplank and guardrail on the balcony at the east end were removed in order to string a line in preparation for the first course of brickwork east of the balcony doorway. Luigi Trevisiol walked backwards in setting this line and fell nine storeys to his death.

This job had ample protection throughout the building as guardrails and kickplanks and steel cables are in evidence on all floors that are not enclosed in masonry.

That was the report of the building inspector of Toronto. I will not now repeat all of the hon. Minister's comments on it, but I would like to refer to one comment he made. He said this:

It is interesting to note that he [that is, Trevisiol] fell from the ninth floor and had worked on all the lower floors under identical circumstances. No reason [says the Minister] can be given for this accident, I am told. It is put down as a sheer accident, a misadventure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to this House that it is sheer nonsense to say that this tragic occurrence was sheer accident. The report states specifically that the guardrail and kickplank at the east end of the balcony had been removed and that Trevisiol backed off the balcony at that point to his death. Clearly there was negligence somewhere. Who removed the guardrail and the kickplank and by what authority? It is the responsibility of an employer, or should be, not only to provide proper safety devices but also to ensure that they are used.

There was a foreman on this job. Why did he permit the work to proceed without the safety devices in place? I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that workmen are human beings like everyone else, and they may sometimes be negligent themselves. They may disregard their own safety in order to find an easy way of doing the job.

It requires a large and continuous measure of education reinforced if necessary by discipline, to prevent such an attitude from becoming prevalent. The hon. Minister's report is too sketchy to indicate if the men engaged on the job where Trevisiol was killed were to some degree responsible for the unsafe conditions that existed. But if they were, they ought to have been properly warned and if by any chance they ignored the warning, they should have been disciplined. It is far better for a man to be disciplined than to be dead.

If the highest possible measure of safety is to be achieved, there must be a high degree of safety-consciousness at all levels from The Department of Labour to the employer and the individual workman. Constant vigilance against unsafe working conditions by everyone concerned is essential.

When, however, The Department of Labour, which ought to be setting the standards, adopts the attitude, and I submit that this was the attitude that the hon. Minister himself adopted in answering my question on this subject, that the problem is not too serious or, alternatively, that it is too difficult to do much about, what can one expect from the ordinary workman, or for that matter from the employer? The unfortunate fact seems to be that of the negligent "do not bother us" attitude of The Department of Labour which certainly has existed in that department as long as I have been in this House. That attitude has permeated the whole industry. The grim results are seen in the death of Luigi Trevisiol, a fine-looking young man—I say he was a fine-looking young man, on the basis of a picture I saw on the front page of Carriere Canadese—skilled in his trade, whose life was cut short before he even reached his maturity. They are seen in the death of Trevisiol, and in many other deaths and serious injuries.

Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that Trevisiol's death was the twenty-third construction death in this city since the beginning of this year.

A discussion of safety in the construction industry inevitably leads to a discussion of licensing. The Royal commission discussed this matter at some length on pages 12 to 14 of its report and it arrived at the firm recommendation—which I cannot take time to read but it is in the report for anyone to see—that builders, contractors and sub-contractors should be licensed by a provincial authority with adequate right of appeal. It is instructive to study the reasons the commission gave for its recommendations which are found on pages 12 and 13 of its report, and which I will quote in part. The commission said:

A substantial number of contractors have established a commendable record of safety-consciousness and high standard policies governing safety on jobs.

On the other hand, your commission is concerned with a growing area of irresponsibility, characterized by the "fast-bucker," or "fly-by-night" builder, or the unqualified and speculative newcomer whose record demonstrates a serious lack of knowledge of safety, responsibility and respect for legislation.

The increasing intensity of competitive bidding creates and stimulates a special and unfair advantage for this irresponsible element. Decided savings may be effected by disregarding even minimum precautions against accident.

The irresponsible contractor avoids stabilization through collective bargaining. His contractual identity is not constant.

—that is a point I would like to deal with a little later, Mr. Speaker—

To preserve his special advantage he must avoid all forms of restriction required as current standards of conduct and performance.

It is a reasonable assumption that if unchecked, this element enjoying special privileges will seriously hamper and may well destroy the work and ability of responsible contractors to advance the cause of safety in construction.

That was on page 12 of the report. I would now like to read two or three paragraphs from page 13:

If, after years of safety legislation, education, persuasion and example, such employers selfishly persist in evasion of the law, their right to operate in this industry should then be qualified by a requirement for adherence to the law in practice as a condition of a licence and of the right to obtain subsequent building permits.

Then a little further down:

Evidence clearly demonstrates that the failure of this industry in self-regulation is largely attributable to the tactics and policies of the irresponsible segments. Present penalties for infractions are inadequate deterrents. Savings effected by evasion of the regulations more than offset penalties if and when infractions are detected. The loss of a licence as a result of a record of failures to comply with these regulations would clearly focus the actual area of responsibility for non-compliance. The safety record of the individual contractor should be given paramount consideration in deciding whether to grant, renew or cancel his licence.

I agree entirely with those comments as far as they go, Mr. Speaker. But they do not go far enough, partly because the Royal commission was limited by its terms of reference to merely questions of safety. The matter, in my opinion, should be put on a much broader basis and for two reasons:

First, not all of the blame should be put on the builders, contractors and sub-contractors. Certainly some of them are blameworthy enough but equally blameworthy are the developers and speculators and promoters who lurk behind these contractors.

This industry is plagued by small contractors and especially small sub-contractors who are lured into it by prospects of huge profits but actually have not got sufficient capital behind them. They come and go with confusing frequency and in doing this they create chaos in the industry.

Then the promoter moves in to fatten on the chaotic situation. He can get his work done at cut-rate prices just because there are always builders around who will cut corners on safety and who will chisel on the wages of their workers. The promoter who lets a contract on this basis, in my opinion, is just as culpable as the contractor himself, and there is just as great a need to regulate his activities.

My second reason for wanting to broaden the whole question of licensing is that almost everything the commission has said about safety and about the demoralizing effect of the fast-buck operator in any efforts to promote safe conditions, is equally applicable in other fields.

These are the same people who fleeced and chiselled their employees and flagrantly violated the laws relating to vacations with pay, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and almost everything else, until the whole seething mess blew up last summer in a violent strike of construction workers.

They are also the same people who have driven trucks through municipal zoning by-laws by building buildings in full knowledge that they were acting in contravention to the by-laws, unloading them on unsuspecting parties and then moving into another municipality before they could be caught. It has even been alleged, Mr. Speaker—in fact it has been frequently alleged and charged—that some of these people have even gone to the extent of corrupting or attempting to corrupt municipal officers and municipal councils.

The problem of keeping track of them is compounded by our lax corporation laws and by the lax administration of those laws. I think that may be what the Royal commission had in mind when it referred to the fact that the contractual identity of these people is not constant.

Under The Corporations Act of this province—and I have no doubt it is much the same in other provinces, but just because it is lax in other provinces is no justification for it being the same here—under our laws the leopard can readily change his spots by going through the relatively simple and inexpensive procedure of setting up a new company. All he needs to do is to put the name of his wife, and the name of his mother or—if they do not trust him, and heaven knows they probably know him well enough that they may not trust him—the name of his stenographer and his lawyer's stenographer, along with his own, as shareholders and directors of the company and pay a nominal fee. Then he has a brand new charter for a private company, with a brand new name.

Some of these men have more aliases than professional con men but they have this advantage over the con man, that, Mr. Speaker, their aliases are all registered under The Corporations Act of this province. In most cases the companies, of the nature to which I am now referring, are nothing but dummies designed to conceal the identity of the principals who are operating behind them.

Shoestrings have been parlayed into huge fortunes by fast footwork and sharp practice, in real estate promotion and building in this city and this province.

An hon. member: Not always.

Mr. Bryden: Not always, that is true, but there certainly have been some fast-buck operators who have parlayed shoestrings into huge fortunes. And now they luxuriate in a vulgar display of wealth, having contributed practically nothing to the province—except chaos for their industry, and heartache for their employees and their customers.

Clearly, there is an urgent need for closer supervision of the activities of these people; I am talking now not only of the little ones—and there are a lot of little ones that certainly need to be watched—but some of the big ones, too.

The Royal commission on industrial safety did not make detailed recommendations for a licensing procedure. It suggested instead that the whole question should be studied by the safety council. Unfortunately, this council is still only in the process of being set up, and in any case, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that it is the best body to conduct this particular study, since—as I have already indicated—the problem extends well beyond the safety field. There is a problem in the safety field, but there is a problem in many other fields as well. However, one thing I am certain of, is that the problem should be studied—and soon—by some appropriate body, and that the government should aim to introduce appropriate legislation dealing with licensing during the 1961-62 session of the Legislature.

Though the details have to be worked out, the basic principles, as I see them, are quite clear. There should be an authority to license builders, contractors and sub-contractors—and, I think, promoters and developers, too, not all of whom are necessarily builders. This authority should be a provincial authority. This is certainly not a proper area for municipal jurisdiction; to hand the responsibility over to the municipality is merely to invite uneven and inadequate enforcement of the legislation. Therefore, the licensing authority should be provincial in scope; it should have the power not only to grant but also to refuse, extend or cancel licences—subject, of course, to a proper appeal to the courts—and it should work closely with the administrators of The Corporations Act to ensure that a company applying for a licence, is not a cover-up for someone who has already been refused a licence, or has had a licence cancelled.

I feel certain, Mr. Speaker, that reputable businessmen in this industry will have nothing to fear from a licensing authority. In fact I think—I admit I have no evidence of this—but I think they would welcome such an authority, because it would help to produce order out of the present chaos so that the legitimate businessman can carry on his business in an intelligent and business-like way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a different subject, raised by my hon. leader in his sub-amendment to the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne—that is the question of the sales tax.

We rejected the provision of the main amendment on this particular question—the Liberal amendment which spoke vaguely of a $25 plan, or something like that; I am not quite sure what it is, but I think I can judge what is meant from the statements that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr.

Wintermeyer) has made outside the House. We rejected that particular clause in the main amendment because we do not think it is good enough. Our position is—and was last year when this bill was brought in—that there should not be a sales tax in this province; our amendment calls for the repeal of that tax. When the bill was introduced last year, we indicated our opposition to it in no uncertain terms, and even went to the extent of moving an amendment on second reading which was designed to defeat the government's bill. We still oppose the tax as our sub-amendment indicates.

The reasons for our opposition were set forth fully in our amendment of last session and more briefly in our present amendment. They are twofold: First, in our opinion, this kind of tax is inherently regressive and unfair because it bears most heavily on those who are least able to pay. There is no need for it in Ontario at this time, since other, fairer, methods of raising money are still available to the government. Our group has frequently placed before this House, suggestions for alternative methods of raising money and a little later I am going to review some of these suggestions. But before I do that, I would like to refer to our second reason for opposing, or for calling for the repeal of, the three per cent sales tax. In our opinion it is particularly unfortunate during the present period of economic stagnation and chronic unemployment, because it directly discourages consumer purchasing, which is already inadequate.

We have, as I said, carried on quite a campaign—first to prevent this tax from becoming a law, and now to have it repealed; and I must say that we have always run into difficulty in mounting a strong offensive because of the way in which the ambivalent Liberal party has contrived to muddy the waters. That group does not seem to be able to make up its mind whether it is in favour of the sales tax or against it. For two years the hon. leader of the Opposition stumped this province, campaigning in favour of a sales tax; and I think it is quite fair—I always believe in giving credit where credit is due—to state that he is the father of the sales tax in this province. However, when his child was presented to him by the government in the last session, he repudiated it. He and his group, after a great deal of wriggling and squirming, even ended by voting in favour of our amendment and against the tax. I thought myself—I admit that I am fairly naïve—but I thought that, having first been in favour of the bill and then against it, the Liberals had exhausted all conceivable positions; but I must admit that I underestimated the nimbleness of Liberal footwork because they have now found a third position; they are in favour of the sales tax, and against it at the same time. And I am sure that if they run—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): How can the hon. member explain that?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. leader of the Opposition should read his amendment. Everything comes to those who wait; I will explain it. I cannot explain it while the hon. leader of the Opposition is talking.

I have no doubt that if my hon. Liberal friends should run across someone who is neutral on the tax they would tell him that they are on his side too.

The hon. leader of the Opposition has now proposed something which is quite different from the proposal he made last year or the year before—that the sales tax should be continued, but that, except for certain items—cigarettes and liquor, I believe—there should be an overall exemption of $25. He claims that the loss of revenue to the government, if his plan is adopted, will be about $35 million. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that according to my calculations this is a very conservative estimate indeed. The loss would much more likely be about $50 or $60 million. But, regardless—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. leader of the Opposition need not get so alarmed. What I am going to say is that, regardless of whose figure is right, I submit to him that he has a clear responsibility to say how the difference in revenue is to be made up.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): He did.

Mr. Bryden: In view of the sad state of the province's finances I would be very surprised—he frequently surprises me—but I would be very surprised if he is prepared to argue that the government does not need the $35 million or $50 million, or whatever the correct figure is, which would be lost under his plan. He has been strangely silent on the question of where the money is to come from. If the plan of the hon. leader of the Opposition is adopted, there will still be a tax on such items as automobiles, most furniture, many electrical appliances, much clothing, and most other durable consumers' goods. And it should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that in this day and age most of these items are necessities. They are not luxuries just because they cost a lot of money; they are necessities, even more so than many of the items which would escape the tax if the $25 exemption were introduced.

Earlier in this debate the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume), whom I hear chirping up now, delivered a long, windy harangue which was notable as much for its lack of content as it was for its sound of fury. Yet, throughout his entire speech he did not once mention the sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, I think this House and the people of the province are entitled to an explanation from the hon. member for Essex North as to why he is in favour of continuing the sales tax on automobiles.

Mr. Reaume: Even though they are made in the old country.

Mr. Bryden: It is only a relatively short time ago that we managed to get rid of a federal sales tax on automobiles, which was imposed by a Liberal government down in Ottawa. Now the provincial government has restored that tax, in part, through its provincial sales tax and apparently the hon. member for Essex North thinks that is all right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: As far as our group is concerned, we have always set forth quite specifically the alternative sources of revenue which, in our opinion, the government should rely on in preference to the sales tax. We have done so again in our sub-amendment which itemizes these alternative sources as corporation and income taxes, revenues from natural resources and a weight-distance tax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: After the storm subsides, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed to explain these matters for the enlightenment of those who are capable of enlightenment.

I would like first to deal with the weight-distance tax on large highway transports. Some years ago the select committee on toll roads of this Legislature—that was before my time, but I have read the committee's report—discovered that, in California, four per cent of the highway users were responsible for 52 per cent of highway construction and maintenance costs. I will agree: that was in California, and it is quite likely that the situation in Ontario is not as extreme as that. However, there cannot be any doubt at all that a small percentage of large vehicles is responsible for a very large percentage of highway costs in this province. In our opinion the owners of those vehicles ought to pay something approaching a fair share of the cost which they cause. This could be accomplished through a weight-distance tax.

Secondly, there is the question of revenues from natural resources. For some reason or other this always seems to be a very, very sore point for the hon. members to my right—and I use the word "right" advisedly. They weep bitter tears for companies like Abitibi and International Nickel. Notwithstanding the fact that this always seems to agitate them, I wish to make just a few comments about revenues from natural resources, because at the present time they constitute a picayune percentage of the budget of this province. It is very small, I would think it not more than three per cent.

In fact, the total revenues received from the mines profits tax, the timber dues and so on, taken together are not very much greater than the money that the government spends in servicing the mining and forest industries—so that the companies which exploit the natural resources belonging to the people of the province, are getting these resources for close to nothing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would expressly ask that hon. members—especially when they are between the member who is speaking and the Speaker's chair—remain quiet so the Speaker can hear what is going on. I would appreciate it very much if the hon. members would give the same attention to the present speaker as has been given to other speakers.

Mr. Bryden: Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason whatever why these companies should get their raw materials for nothing. Great fortunes have been made, and are being made, out of Ontario's natural resources and I am going to quote one or two examples again to refresh the memories of hon. members to my right—although, last year, when I quoted from authoritative documents, they denied even the existence of the documents. I will refer the House to the latest issue of the Financial Post Survey of Industries, the 1961 issue, which showed that in 1960 Abitibi made $22 million before taxes and $12 million after taxes.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): They gained 3.25 per cent on their investment.

Mr. Bryden: I quoted both figures, Mr. Speaker, but I think that, in this particular case, the figure before taxes is the relevant one because, if we increase our rates in one form or another, the companies will be able to charge that up against their federal income tax; so it would come out of the $22 million rather than out of the $12 million. Minnesota and Ontario, to quote another example, made $12 million before taxes and $6 million after taxes; I could quote a great many more examples. I will not do that, but I will quote one in the mining field—the great octopus in that field—the International Nickel Company, which in 1959, the last year for which figures are available, made $144 million before taxes and $85 million after taxes. And our Liberal friends are trying to tell me that a company like that cannot afford to pay more for the irreplaceable raw materials that it takes out of the ground, raw materials which belong to the people of this province. In my submission they can afford to pay a fair price for the resources they are using and I think they ought to pay it.

Our third proposal, Mr. Speaker, is that—

An hon. member: Do not confuse them with facts.

Mr. Bryden: I think I have cited some facts but these gentlemen hate to face facts. It is impossible for them to face facts because, if they did, all their preconceptions and prejudices would be knocked into a cocked hat and they would be left naked with nothing to clothe themselves with.

My third proposal, Mr. Speaker, is that we should rely on corporation and income taxes in preference to a sales tax. One reason, of course, is that these taxes are much fairer. It is apparently, a very amusing proposition to the hon. leader of the Opposition to see a fellow, who makes perhaps $3,000 or $3,500 a year, having to pay, shall we say, $200 or $150 tax on an automobile which he needs in a city of this kind, to get back and forth to work. The hon. leader of the Opposition considers that a matter of amusement; I do not; I consider it a serious matter and I would suggest that a fairer alternative is the corporation and income tax. My reason, of course, is that these taxes are much fairer because they result in the money being raised from the people who have it.

In making this proposal, Mr. Speaker, I do so in full awareness that at the present time there is a high-powered propaganda campaign going on in this country to convince the public that corporations and wealthy individuals are already being taxed too heavily. I may say that the most receptive victims of this propaganda appear to be the gentlemen on the Liberal benches in this House.

The theory—if one could call it that—behind this propaganda, is that the rich people and the corporations are the people who undertake most of the country's investments. If they have ample funds available they will invest these funds in employment-creating opportunities—or so we will believe, if we are gullible enough to believe everything we are told.

It was even suggested—not very long ago—in very prominent places, that the relatively few progressive elements which now exist in the country's tax structure should be eliminated, which would mean a further shift in the tax burden from the rich to the poor. It has always struck me as curious, Mr. Speaker, that whenever our country is faced with problems of any kind, the rich always contrive to discover—and to hire all sorts of people who will repeat their discovery for them—that a sure-fire solution to the problem is to make the poor tighten their belts. That is the sort of proposal we hear being seriously made in this country at the present time.

An examination of the national accounts of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows how little substance there actually is in this argument. First of all, I would like to refer to tables 38, 39 and 40 of the accounts for 1960. From these one can discover that, at the absolute outside, only about 40 per cent of the tax revenue currently being raised in Canada by all levels of government—

Mr. Whicher: The hon member is giving Mr. E. P. Taylor's speech of a month ago.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I will say that Mr. E. P. Taylor, who is certainly one of the distinguished citizens of this country, has made some speeches that are worth listening to—as distinguished from the speeches made by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher).

I was trying to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that not more than 40 per cent of the tax revenue of this country—taking all levels of government—is, at the present time, raised by taxes that could in any sense of the world be described as progressive. All the remainder—at least 60 per cent—is raised by taxes that are regressive in varying degrees. And this, I might mention, was before the Ontario sales tax came into effect, so that the situation is even worse now. The result is that the less wealthy are already carrying an undue proportion of the tax load of this country. If one looks at tables 50 and 51 of the national accounts, one discovers that the old argument—about leaving surpluses for the big boys so that they can invest—has really not got anything in it at all. There is no shortage of investment funds in private hands in Canada at the present time. In 1960 undistributed corporation profits plus capital consumption allowances, not including bad debt allowances, totalled $4.6 billion, as compared with $3.9 billion in 1955. Most private investment comes from those sources, from undistributed profits and more particularly from capital consumption allowances which these fellows are allowed to claim under the corporation tax laws.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that Ontario and Canada are suffering, not from a shortage of investment funds, but from excess capacity in the private sector. Our problem is that there are not enough buyers for the goods that we can already produce; existing plants are not being used to capacity. In other words, we are suffering from inadequate consumption. In such a situation there is no advantage to be gained by making funds available for private investment.

What is the point of making funds available for private investment that will not be used anyway? It does not matter how much money you put into the hands of a corporation or an individual; he is not going to invest it if he has any sense at all, unless he can see some reasonable opportunity of selling the output of the plant and equipment in which he would expect to invest. There is no need, Mr. Speaker, to worry about the investment—certainly not about investment in the private sector. The urgent need is to increase consumption. And we certainly will not do that by leaving excess funds—as in the current situation—in the hands of the wealthy. They already have all the goods and services they want. We should be improving the position of the less wealthy.

Mr. Reaume: Socialism at its best.

Mr. Bryden: If that is socialism at its best then I am happy to support socialism.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would appeal to the better sense of hon. members to give speakers in this debate full opportunity to speak. Now, I have noticed at times that members ask the Speaker to call for order on their behalf. When I am calling order, I wish hon. members would listen to the Speaker and allow the member who has the floor to proceed.

Mr. Whicher: But, Mr. Speaker, it makes me so sick to have to listen.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Well, how does the hon. member think we feel when he is speaking?

Mr. Bryden: I have never known of any law of this country, or any rule of this House, that requires anyone to listen, Mr. Speaker, but I must say that I always admire my Liberal friends and the way they torture themselves by sitting listening carefully when they are having commonsense expounded to them. That is real torture to them, I admit.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I am happy to identify myself with any cause—regardless of how it may be described—which has as its objective, to improve the position of the less wealthy. At this particular time, it is a particularly urgent objective because, if we are trying to increase consumption as we should be, we should consider the people who have the lesser amounts of money. They are the people who, if they had more purchasing power in their hands, would spend more; they would buy more goods.

They are already spending up to the limits of their incomes without fully satisfying their wants, and I have no doubt, if we devise ways of making more money available to them, they would spend that too, with a beneficial effect on the whole economy. We could improve their position either by easing the tax burden on them or by improving social services—or both.

I would not care which approach the government took; a combination of both would perhaps be best. But, unfortunately, the government will not take either position. In fact, it has taken exactly the opposite approach. It has reduced the purchasing power of the small consumer by creating a three per cent increase in the price of most of the goods he buys. Since he is already spending all the money he has, he can pay this tax only in one way—by reducing his spending, reducing his purchases. That means idle capacity and idle workers.

I quite realize that the wealthy also have to pay the sales tax, but let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that the impact on them is very much less severe than on the small fellow.

Expenditures on taxable items use up a very large percentage of the income of a man making, say, $3,000 a year. They account for a very small proportion of the income of the person making $20,000 a year, so that the fellow making $3,000, who is just struggling to get along, has to pay—relatively speaking—much higher tax than the rich man.

What is even more important, from an economic point of view is that the sales tax does not significantly affect the excess accumulations of wealth of large corporations and rich individuals which have been plaguing us, over the past few years. If the economy is to grow and prosper, we have to get this excess wealth to work, Mr. Speaker, either in investment on social capital or extension of social services. We cannot carry on with unused capacity and expect that we are going to have sound economic growth.

Therefore, attempts to shift the tax burden from the rich to the poor—of which the Ontario retail sales tax is an outstanding example—are not only socially unjust, they are economically insane. They discourage growth and intensify chronic unemployment.

Anyone who looks around at the situation we have in this province and in this country today can hardly deny that, at least, a situation of low growth and chronic unemployment exists. It certainly is not entirely due to the sales tax; it was building up long before the sales tax came in; but the sales tax is contributing to it, and, in my opinion, is a totally wrong policy for that reason.

Now then, some of the hon. members have been nattering away about the province of Saskatchewan. I put my submission for the moment on a somewhat broader basis than that. I would refer to the fact that most other provinces in Canada have a sales tax; I am quite aware of that fact. But I am also aware of the fact—as some of the other hon. members do not seem to be—that most other provinces are not in the same position as Ontario. This province has been blessed with very great natural advantages and I think we should use those natural advantages for the benefit of all the people, not just groups that finance the government's election campaigns.

Mr. Whicher: How much do they tax corporations in Saskatchewan? More than we do?

Mr. Bryden: As a matter of fact, their returns in Saskatchewan from natural resources are five times as great as the returns in this province from similar resources. A combination of constitutional limitations and economic limitations leaves most provinces with a very narrow tax base and therefore with very little freedom to choose among alternative sources of revenue. When a province has exhausted the possibilities of other taxes, as many of the other provinces have, there is no option but to impose a sales tax. And this is particularly true, Mr. Speaker, when the province concerned is engaged in a broad forward-looking programme of social progress as is the case with the province of Saskatchewan.

If the government of Ontario had exhausted all the possibilities of raising money by more progressive methods, and if it came before this House with bold new programmes, such as a health insurance programme, for example—perhaps the hon. Minister will have something to say on that later, I do not know—but if it came forward with programmes of that kind, as far as my hon. colleagues are concerned, we would be quite prepared to take another look at the sales tax. But the government has not done either of these things.

There are still substantial revenue sources available to it, which have not been exploited to the full, and it certainly has no new programmes of any kind in mind if the speech from the Throne is any indication. The most notable feature of that speech, I would say, was its sterility of ideas. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the case for the repeal of the sales tax is overwhelming. I submit that the government ought to repeal this tax as soon as the necessary alternative revenue measures can be introduced.

I see some of the hon. members of the Cabinet laughing at this suggestion. I will add that I am not so naïve as to think that reason and commonsense are likely to have much effect on this government.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): We are delighted to have the hon. member give us these suggestions.

Mr. Bryden: I would be delighted if the government would adopt the suggestion because even the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) will have to agree that it is a very sensible and reasonable suggestion, and one that the government should have paid attention to long ago. I would be quite happy if they would adopt it now.

Just in case the hon. Minister of Mines is not speaking for the government at this point, and in case the government does not decide to repeal the sales tax, I would urge that it should at least straighten out some of the most burdensome and annoying features of this tax. It is perfectly ridiculous, for example—and I would like to see any hon. member opposite defend this—that Canadian Legion branches should have had to pay sales tax on their poppies and wreaths on November 11.

If the hon. Minister of Mines is prepared to defend that proposition, I certainly would like to hear what he has to say about it. I suggest that something should be done about that particular case. I think there is also a case for removing the tax from certain essentials, such as soap. Above all, if we are going to continue with this tax under this unenlightened administration, surely something should be done to relieve the incredible burden that has been imposed on the small storekeeper and small restaurant operator.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): What do they do in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bryden: I will come to that in a minute. I think the best way of demonstrating the kind of problem that these people are up against—and after all, they are very small men and women with very limited incomes—is to cite the experience of a man who operates a small variety store on Gerrard Street East in Toronto. This man estimates that it takes him on an average about one hour per evening—around 25 hours a month—to do all the record-keeping, bookkeeping and form-filling which the sales tax division requires him to do.

He showed me his tax remittance form for the month of October, 1961; the total amount of tax that he was required to remit as shown on the form for that month was $32.47. Out of this amount he was permitted to retain two per cent, or the munificent sum of 64 cents, as compensation for his month's services in collecting and accounting for the tax. Moreover, the 64 cents was not entirely clear because he had to pay for a stamp and for a money order to send the remittance to the government. By the time he worked it out, this fellow was being compensated at the rate of somewhere between one and two cents an hour for his job as a tax collector for the government. I would suggest to hon. members that this is far from an isolated case. I think every one of them knows of countless similar examples.

I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, that The Department of the Provincial Treasurer got over its pedantic insistence that the small merchant, in particular, has to account for every copper, when his volume of business is so small that he cannot possibly afford to put in accounting machines or even a very elaborate cash register. It should be sufficient for him to keep track of his total sales and collections and make his remittances on that basis. If the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) had taken the trouble to read Professor Due's book on the sales tax, he would find that the procedure is common, not only in Saskatchewan, but in most jurisdictions where there is a sales tax in effect. If the returns, which the man submits, persistently appear to be unreasonable, then certainly there would have to be a further check; but in the main this procedure should be sufficient to ensure that the government gets most of the revenue it is entitled to. If a few pennies slip through its fingers, surely that is a very small loss in relation to the very large inconvenience that it has imposed on this multitude of small merchants.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate that, even though I have made some suggestions for improving the administration of the sales tax, I am certainly not in favour of that tax in this province at this time. I submit that no amount of tinkering with the administration will make the tax acceptable; it ought to be repealed, and I suggest to hon. members of this House that in fairness and commonsense they should support our amendment—not the namby-pamby main amendment to the motion—but our amendment calling for the outright repeal of this tax and its replacement by fairer methods of raising revenue which are still available to the government. Thank you very much.

Mr. J. A. C. Auld (Leeds) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would like to announce that tomorrow we will go on with some of the second readings on the order paper. I would draw to the attention of the hon. members that the estimates for The Department of Insurance have been tabled, and they could be called tomorrow or Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1961

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. R. K. McNeil from the standing committee on agriculture presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. 48, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

Hon. J. N. Allan presents the second interim report of the select committee appointed on April 12, 1960, and re-appointed on March 21, 1961, to examine, investigate, inquire into, study and report on all matters relating to compensation of persons who suffer financial loss or injury as a result of motor vehicle accidents, and moves, seconded by hon. J. P. Robarts, that the committee be re-appointed and continue with the same membership and with the same powers and duties as heretofore; also, that the said committee be authorized to sit during the Christmas-New Year adjournment of this session, and that the same allowances for expenses to the chairman and members thereof be payable for such meetings as are provided by section 65 of The Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1960, chapter 308, for meetings held during the interval between sessions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to find out whether debate can take place on this motion at this time, which would involve not only the contents of the motion but the contents of the report, or whether this will be put on the order paper and debated at another time.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of debating it today.

Mr. Singer: Then, Mr. Speaker, can we hold this motion over until the proper time arises when it can be debated?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be that it will not be debated until we adjourn, and part of the motion is to permit the committee to sit in the interim. I suggest that the motion carry as it is and we will arrange to have it debated in due course.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it would be my submission that this motion involves acceptance of the interim report. One of the recommendations in the report is that the committee be allowed to sit again, so that this motion to my mind certainly involves an acceptance of the interim report. I do not think the report should be accepted until an opportunity is given for debate, because it is a most important issue.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the motion, it is to accept this report and to reconstitute the committee. Surely the situation at the moment can be met if the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) will indicate that this item will be put on the order paper for debate at a subsequent time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, if that is the only assurance that is required, I have no intention of stopping the debate, any debate that may be necessary or discussion of this report. But I just cannot give an undertaking that I will do it before we meet after the interval, that is all.

Mr. MacDonald: But does the hon. Prime Minister propose to put it on the order paper?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will undertake to put it on the order paper.

Mr. Singer: That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: The report is being presented in the same way that all reports are being presented and the motion is that the committee be re-appointed and continue with the same membership as heretofore.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) a question? As I understood it, it is necessary that we have some debate on this in order that the government, if they accept the wishes of the committee, would implement this suggestion of $20 for the uninsured driver. I understood, that would have to come before the Legislature before the government might put that into force on January 1, 1962.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): That is practically the same question as I have. Some of the recommendations here are supposed to take effect by January, 1962. If we do not get an opportunity to debate this before that time, will these recommendations go into effect?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of reading this interim report, but I will look at it and take whatever action the government considers necessary. But I cannot undertake that I will carry out all the recommendations that may be in this report because I have not read it. It has just been tabled here today.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts).

Will the commissioner of the Royal commission on crime—

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I did send this question to the office of the hon. Prime Minister, I am not sure whether he received it.

Mr. Speaker, will the commissioner of the Royal commission on crime be empowered to appoint a chief counsel to assist him?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Shall I take these one at a time?

Mr. Wintermeyer: It is immaterial. There are four questions and they are all related to the same subject, Mr. Speaker, and I can read all four. The one that I read, of course, is the first question.

The second question: will the commissioner of the Royal commission on crime be empowered to appoint a staff of investigators to assist him in gathering information on the subject of organized crime?

Three: do the terms of reference of the Royal commission on crime permit the commissioner to hold hearings in camera at his discretion?

Four: will the government assume the accounts of Opposition counsel to the Royal commission?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The answer to the first question is that counsel will be appointed in consultation with the commissioner.

The answer to the second question is such staff as the commissioner considers necessary to carry out the terms of his commission will be provided.

The third question: the terms of reference to the Royal commission do not impose any limitation upon the right of a commissioner to conduct the investigations in any way he sees fit.

Question four: The government will assume the accounts of personnel whom the commissioner deems essential to be appointed, to assist him in his inquiry.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if a supplementary question could be added to that: will an opportunity be given to persons to make representations well in advance of the commencement of the hearings along the lines indicated in the four questions?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the conduct of the Royal commission lies entirely within the hands of Mr. Justice Roach, who is a man of great experience in these matters. I am quite sure that he will arrange things in proper fashion to see that the inquiry is conducted in order that we may get to the truth of the matters which the commission was set up to investigate. I am not going to say he will or will not do anything. He is the man conducting the investigation. The terms of reference are broad and these matters will be in his discretion.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 39, An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words with respect to this bill. In the first place I intend to give notice now that when we are in the committee of the whole House I intend to move an amendment to the bill and instead of calling it "The Ontario Safety Council" as was suggested in the bill, it is now proposed to be called "The Labour Safety Council of Ontario."

The reason for giving this notice is because I had representations made to me by the Ontario Safety League, which for many years has been conducting safety programmes in those fields outside of industrial safety. This Ontario Safety League was formed in 1913 and obtained a provincial charter in 1923. Since that time it has been carrying on in this safety field and doing a very fine job. It was therefore brought to my attention that if we call the new safety council the "Ontario Safety Council" there might be some confusion in the mind of the public as to which is which, especially since the Ontario Safety League has been carrying on for so long in its field. That is why I propose the change and give notice now. Suggestions for the amendment will be made in the committee of the whole House.

I think everyone understands the bill, which I think is self-explanatory. This morning I had the opportunity to meet with Mr. David Archer and Mr. Douglas Hamilton of the Ontario Federation of Labour. We went over the principles of the bill, I even suggested to them what was proposed by way of changing the name. They have given me permission to say that they are in accord with the principle, have given me permission also to use their names, and to say that they are willing to co-operate fully with the department in implementing this particular suggestion that is now before the House in the form of an amendment to The Department of Labour Act.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the place where I would raise the question of tabling this report in the Legislature.

I have read carefully the report of the commission on industrial safety and I note that included in the recommendations of that commission is that this should be tabled in the Legislature. I would point out to the hon. Minister that unless this report is tabled in the Legislature, hon. members will be in no position to know whether or not the recommendations are being followed.

I note that as a result of the McAndrew report, several of the suggestions which were made in that report are the same suggestions which were made in the tabling of the Roach report some years ago. Many of those matters have not yet been carried out. I feel that there is considerable advantage to be gained in having this report tabled in the Legislature so that all of the hon. members will be aware of the recommendations. I feel that safety is a matter which is everybody's business. I think that the hon. members of this Legislature are entitled to some assurances that these reports, these recommendations, or whatever may be coming from this council which is being set up by the hon. Minister, will be available to the Legislature so that the hon. members of this Legislature will be in a position to determine whether or not these affairs are being carried out as they should be. I very much regret that the hon. Minister has not availed himself of all the recommendations and has left out this very important part of the recommendations in this bill.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on this bill now that the principle of it is before us. I would like to comment on it in relation to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Industrial Safety.

The reason I think it is important that we should study it in relation to those recommendations is that the hon. Minister in his statement on first reading of the bill indicated that in his opinion this bill—I am not now quoting, but I think I am summarizing fairly accurately—this bill carried out what the hon. Minister considered to be the most important recommendation of the commission.

I would like to suggest to this House, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not really carry out the recommendation of the commission on this point at all. I think it is appropriate that the name "Ontario Safety Council" should be changed to another name, not particularly for the reason that the hon. Minister has given, but because it is desirable that no one should confuse the body which it is proposed should be set up in this bill with the body which the Royal commission recommended. I would like to read some extracts from the commission's report in regards to what it described as the proposed Ontario Safety Council. On page 27 of the report it states:

Upon establishment the Ontario Safety Council may conduct a continuing—and I emphasize the word "continuing":

—a continuing study of all legislation and regulations pertaining to accidents and prevention, industrial health and hygiene, safety standards, inspection and enforcement and make recommendations for legislative amendments.

The advantages of implementing this recommendation are many. In a rapidly growing industrial technology such as ours, one of the functions of the council would be to determine that safety legislation is being continually reviewed and modernized.

As the present inquiry has determined, administrative branches of government are often reluctant to disturb the status quo—

I would like to repeat that:

—administrative branches of government are often reluctant to disturb the status quo, as the result of which the Acts and regulations for the protection of workers become archaic and outmoded. The very existence of a safety council would do much to overcome the complacency towards the adequacy of existing legislation and its enforcement.

Then a little further on it says:

The commission proposes that recommendations by the safety council be (a) made directly to the appropriate Minister and (b) that the annual report of the safety council be tabled in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, when we compare the extracts I have read from the report with the relevant portions of the bill, we find a very significant difference in the bill.

The proposed subsection 5 of the proposed new section 9 (a) reads as follows:

It is the function of the Ontario Safety Council upon the request of the Minister—

Notice the limitation on the functions of the Council.

It is the function of the Ontario Safety Council upon the request of the hon. Minister to inquire into and advise him upon any matter respecting the safety of workers—

And so on, and then to inquire into various specific things.

Now this limits the council, whatever its name may now be, to acting only if the Minister requests it to act. The commission emphasized the point that the council should carry on continuing studies of safety legislation and its adequacy in this province, which is a very different thing. Furthermore, the commission clearly suggests that the council would in a sense act as a sort of a watch dog upon the department.

Admittedly it would have no legislative powers, its powers would be purely advisory, but it would check upon what the department was doing, and the commission stressed many times, including at this very point in its report, the tendency of the administrative branches of government to be reluctant to disturb the status quo—which is the language they use here.

It is quite clear that the commission considered it necessary that somebody, some outside, independent body, should keep prodding them along: they have become somewhat set in their ways, as I suppose is the tendency of all human beings. They have not kept up-to-date, they have allowed the legislation to become archaic and outmoded.

How can they perform that function, Mr. Speaker, if they are only allowed to operate if the administrative head asks them to operate? He is not going to ask them! At least there is no assurance that he will ask them to keep watch on the department as the commission recommended. He presumably would refer only specific problems to them. The council, instead of being a body continually operating, continually checking on the adequacy of standards and their enforcement, continually making recommendations for improvement, carrying on a general function, a month-in-month-out function, trying to improve safety legislation in this province and its administration and to improve safety education, is to be restricted to operate only when the Minister of Labour asks it to operate.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a change in the whole spirit of the Royal commission's recommendation. This recommendation is not being carried out at all. There is the further point, which my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) pointed out, that the Royal commission specifically recommended that in addition to making recommendations to the Minister, the report of the safety council should be tabled in this Legislature, so that if the council discovers what it considers to be inadequacies in the administration of the legislation or in the nature of the legislation, more people than just those within the department will know about it.

How are we ever going to take any action to correct faults that the council may discover if they are retained merely within the narrow circle in the department? I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the previous history of this department indicates that a certain amount of publicity on its activities, or lack of activity, is very necessary. There is no doubt from what the Royal commission itself said that this department has gone to sleep, that it is very complacent, it is out of touch with the realities of modern day technological conditions. That is quite obvious from the observation of many people and from the observation of this Royal commission.

Certainly there should be a way whereby this Legislature can discover what the council may recommend to the department. It should not have to rely merely on the department itself to reveal that information.

So on both those counts, Mr. Speaker, the bill really has nothing to do with the report of the Royal commission. It does not carry out the recommendation of the Royal commission in its spirit at all. It is, in my opinion, a typical half-way government measure designed to create the impression that something is being done when in fact practically nothing is being done.

The council which is being set up is being used as an excuse for stalling action on the other urgent matters, which I have referred to previously and will not deal with again, but which, as far as the Royal commission was concerned, were not in any way associated with the problem of setting up a safety council. It has been used as a stalling device and, finally, when we have the substance of the matter put before us, we find that the stalling device is not even the kind of agency with the broad dynamic powers, responsibilities and duties that were envisaged for it.

This council should carry on a continuing job to keep everybody alive to the problem of safety. As it stands now its responsibilities have been so completely emasculated that it could not possibly carry out the function that the commission envisaged. Indeed it is quite possible, depending on how the hon. Minister may act in the situation, that it may not be called upon to do anything at all. It will be simply another dead issue along with the many dead issues which have been buried by this government in the past.

I think it is regrettable that the government has not caught the spirit and vision of the Royal commission in the proposal that the commission has made and that it has come in with the half-baked proposal contained in this bill. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that between now and the committee stage of the bill he might consider some other amendments. Certainly he should consider the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Wentworth, that an annual report of the council should be tabled in this Legislature so that we will know if it has had an opportunity to do the job envisaged for it and so we will know just how the department has reacted to its recommendations. That much surely should be done.

I would suggest further that the terms of reference set forth in subsection five should not be limited to activity only on the request of the Minister. The council should meet regularly as is suggested by the Royal commission. It should certainly deal with matters referred to it by the Minister, but it should deal also with matters which appear to be of public importance referred to it by other parties. Only in that way will we get the benefit of the kind of body which was proposed by the Royal commission.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he seriously consider revising this bill before it comes to committee.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about this bill.

Preparing for this, I have had a chance to re-examine the remarks of the hon. Minister made on December 7. Reading his remarks and his glowing references to the task done by His Honour Judge McAndrew and the other commissioners, this bill seems a very small answer.

There are over 100 various recommendations that the commission brought forward and I think each one of them is deserving of very intelligent review and attention. Our hon. colleague from Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) has documented these and I understand he will be dealing with them at a later date.

But again, Mr. Speaker, as you refer to the hon. Minister's remarks on December 7, he comes down about half-way through his remarks when he is introducing the bill and says:

We have responded, we have responded to the challenge put forward by the commission with the introduction of this bill.

I cannot help but agree with the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) that the government in introducing this bill, and tying the bill in with the hon. Minister's remarks, is emasculating the report and parking it on the shelf where it is never again going to see the light of day.

Mr. Speaker, if the government is serious about doing anything about industrial safety it would have brought in a package series of amendments to legislation, new statutes if they were necessary, and certainly more amendments to this Act.

Here are just a few of the recommendations in this report, and the government has not even looked at them, has not even nibbled at the real challenge put forward by the report. Safety council on page 3:

That an accident prevention association be established under The Workmen's Compensation Act to operate under the jurisdiction of the Workmen's Compensation Board—that the commission recommends the establishment of management-labour safety committees at plant levels—licensing of contractors at provincial levels. The report recommends that all Acts, such as The Trench Excavators Act and the regulations, and The Building Trades Protection Act, be amended to provide expressly that the department shall have the duty and power to provide enforcement by local authorities within the scope of their authority.

These are only five, as I say, of almost a hundred different recommendations that have been made, and the hon. Minister says: "We have responded with this bill." So he sets up another advisory committee that is going to whisper in his ear. What they are going to whisper we will never know, and he says, "We have responded to this challenging report."

Mr. Speaker, I say that this government, if this is the only way it can approach a challenging report of this type, should be thoroughly ashamed of itself. The actions of this government speak louder than the speeches of the hon. Minister. He has not accepted the challenge; he refuses to do anything about safety in Ontario, and the people of Ontario should know about this.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): If I may, I would just like to add a few remarks to those of my hon. colleague in regard to this bill.

I had occasion of recent date to see in some detail just how little The Department of Labour has done in the last 18 years in regard to safety of workers. I think in my own riding three people were killed in about as many days and two of them died as a result of going down into a sewer.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister without Portfolio): As the hon. member knows from the statistics, Ontario is the safest place to work, in spite of all the tremendous activity.

Mr. Trotter: With all due respect, the McAndrew report is a shocking indictment of the poor administration that this government has been giving in regard to labour safety, to say nothing of a good many other things.

It was certainly brought home to me, Mr. Speaker, when I went to a coroner's inquest and followed through just what had happened in the death of one of the men who went down in the sewer on the Fred Gardiner Expressway. I found that here in the province The Department of Labour does nothing, the city of Toronto has no regulations, the harbour commissioners have no protection, for the men.

I would say that on the overall picture it is the duty, it is the urgent duty, of this department to see to it that these men who are doing dangerous work should have at least some protection, that their lives are not sacrificed. No matter how thorough the coroner's inquest seems to be they almost always come out with the view that it was an accident; it was nobody's fault.

But certainly in the case of this man Amero who lost his life just about two or three months ago in a sewer construction on the Gardiner Expressway—incidentally, a man who did land surveying was sent into the sewer—no precautions were taken whatsoever, and as a result not only Amero but one other man lost his life. If this government were on the job they would at least have some regulation on this matter.

This bill before us is good as far as it goes, but I feel that it is just another opportunity for the government to throw up a screen, to give the impression that it is doing something, that it is taking an interest, but in effect it is doing absolutely nothing. This advisory council does not have to be called unless the hon. Minister asks, and at the rate the hon. Minister asks or tries to move to have anything done in this province, I suggest that this safety council will be of little use.

I hope I am wrong, but it still depends upon the energy of the government, and the government is completely lacking in energy, especially in this field.

I find that when one goes into the homes where men have died, where one meets the widow and the children—in this particular case I mentioned, the widow gets $75 a month for the rest of her life and she will be allowed $25 for each child. This sum is mighty small and certainly this accident could have been avoided had this government been on the job, if it had not been such a decayed, decrepit, old age government, 18 years in power.

The former hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) smiles, but the McAndrew report shows that literally hundreds of men have died needlessly simply because we did not have proper regulations, and this government is making no attempt to bring in proper regulations. I suggest that even though in principle I go along with this bill, it is a smoke screen to cover up the sins and the omissions of the government over the last number of years.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, today's papers carry the news that yesterday still another workman was killed in an accident in Picton. There have been something like 24 or 25 in the Metro area; all across the province, it would be interesting to know what the full statistics are.

Now, there is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that if one wants to be kind the best one can say is that this is a feeble step forward. It is a step that is hampered by the key fact that the committee can operate only when the hon. Minister asks it, when the record of this department is that the hon. Minister will act rarely. In fact this department is smug and complacent with regard to its whole approach.

This attitude permeates the whole of the department. If the present hon. Minister is going to change, we will see this and we will believe it only when we have seen it, because this attitude permeates the whole of the department.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a hopelessly inadequate response to the McAndrew report. Therefore I move, seconded by Mr. Bryden, that the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that" and substituting:

This House regrets the inadequacy of the government's programme of industrial safety.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words in reply to the rather feeble charges that have been levelled against my department. Never before have I seen safety played with so politically as I have seen today. It is quite obvious that they do not want to give us a chance to get on with the job, they would rather make a little political hay out of it.

In reply to some of the charges made, may I say there is nothing in the bill to suggest that the activities of this council are to be terminated at any time. It is my hope it will carry on for many years and do a good job. It would be presumptuous, I think, on my part to have brought in amendments at this session anticipating what the council might or might not do, having in mind the type of person we hope to have on this safety council.

As for continuing studies: certainly the council will be expected to carry on continuing studies and this bill is drawn in the widest possible terms in spite of the way the Opposition has twisted it out of all recognition. It is the function of the Labour Safety Council of Ontario, as it will be known, upon the request of the Minister to inquire into and advise him upon any matter which threatens the safety of workers, and then it goes on to say without respecting the generality of the foregoing it will do so and so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. members of the House want to take my word for it or not, it is my intention to request this council, when it is set up, and I expect it will be set up forthwith, to inquire into all of these safety measures just as soon as they can possibly get geared up and get at them.

Facilities will be made available to the council to sit down in the Labour Department building; adequate staff will be provided, whether secretarial, investigating or otherwise, because it is my clear desire to get into this problem immediately and to have the council come up with some of the advice that we think is necessary to provide good, reasonable safety legislation in this House.

Now, the suggestion that this is being set up as a smoke screen I find rather nauseating, although I am getting rather used to it after some of the diatribes I have heard from the other side. I want to assure the hon. members, those reasonable people who are willing to listen and take my assurances that we do mean business in this field, that the council is going to be set up. The personnel will be announced next week, and when they see the calibre of the person who is willing to act on this council, and without remuneration, I am convinced that they will know this is not just a smoke screen in order to cover up some recommendations made in the McAndrew report. I am convinced when they see the type of person who has allowed his name to stand for this particular council, that they will be delighted.

I have already discussed, not the names of the persons who will sit on the council, but I have indicated to both labour and management, and to accident-prevention association representatives the types of persons who are going to make up the complement here. They are delighted with the suggestions and also with the fact that we are getting on to what they consider the very nub of the McAndrew report. I think it would be presumptuous for me, Mr. Speaker, I would say, to have brought in a series of amendments at this session only to have said to the council: "Now here are these amendments, you deal not only with the McAndrew report, but deal with these amendments"; and have them say to me: "If you had just waited, perhaps until we had reviewed the whole industrial safety picture, we would have brought in something else"; which would have been embarrassing, not only to them, but to ourselves.

There is going to be no delay, I want to assure the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, we are going to get on with the job.

Mr. MacDonald: Next year?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: It will be next year, yes. It will be next year, because this is almost the middle of December, it is bound to be next year. But I would say within a few months, I will put it that way, because after all this is a very large all-encompassing job. We should have some recommendations from this council which will help us decide what legislation is going to be brought before the House.

If the hon. members will just be patient, if they will not be too critical of the department, I think even they, unreasonable as they are at times, will agree that we are trying to do a job in this field.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it may well be that the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) has every good intention of doing a proper job—and I am not going to question that—but I think it must be remembered that we are a Legislature and we are expected to judge and evaluate the significance of many pieces of legislation, not by the explanation given by the Minister but by the phraseology that is used in the legislation before us.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that those who have preceded me in this debate are absolutely right. I do not think they are attacking the hon. Minister personally. I think what they are saying is that the legislation as drafted leaves the initiative in this matter of safety to the hon. Minister and his personal direction. The McAndrew report, as I understand it, intended that the initiative be given by this Legislature directly to the safety council.

Now I think this Legislature has every right to say to the hon. Minister that he has had an opportunity to examine the McAndrew report, that he has had an opportunity to evaluate the situation and bring forth what legislation he feels will do the job. But in the legislation that he has proposed, I suggest that he has left the whole initiative in this matter to his personal discretion. Now this, I suggest, is a fatal flaw, and I think those who preceded me likewise are correct when they say that the report of the council will not be made to this Legislature but to The Department of Labour.

If this Legislature is to function as a supreme body, then surely the report must come back to the Legislature. I think for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and without being vindictive—I do not think that is necessary—we of the Opposition have every right to say that this legislation falls short of the principles that have been enunciated and requested. We have every right, and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we of our party will support the resolution that has been proposed, because in principle I think the legislation as enunciated before us today falls short of the expectation and the intention of the McAndrew report.

Now if the hon. Minister wishes to correct these errors, and I think he is a reasonable man, he should admit that from our point of view we have no idea who the personnel will be, none in the world. They may be the most outstanding people, but we have no idea what his recommendations to the council are going to be.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I have said what they are going to be.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, this is fine, but we are dealing objectively with a piece of legislation. Now I think it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister to so draft it that we can judge it objectively and on its merits and not merely on what he suggests he will do.

After all, it would be just as wise I think to come in and say: "I do not need any legislation, I am the Minister of Labour and I am going to do such and such." But the hon. Minister has taken the opportunity to present a bill and the bill itself, I must suggest, objectively falls short of the principle that was enunciated in the McAndrew report in two respects.

First, it leaves the whole initiative of safety to the Minister, and I speak of him in his official capacity; and it fails to report back to this Legislature, which I think has an inherent right to know of the progress which is being made.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, unless the hon. Minister is prepared now to amend the legislation, I want him to know that we will support the motion.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. leader of this party (Mr. MacDonald). I believe that the statement that the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) gave a couple of minutes ago is a full justification of the amendment that has been placed before the House.

It is an amendment, I may say, that we hesitated to put forward because we like to see any steps forward, no matter how hesitant they may be, in this very important matter. But the smug, complacent attitude of the hon. Minister, which is the very sort of attitude that the McAndrew commission complained about time after time in its report, indicates that the government really has no serious intention, as far as I can see, to proceed—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The hon. member cannot see very far, that is obvious.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I can see far enough to know that the government has done nothing about this problem in two years. Let us just review the history of it, Mr. Speaker.

I will say two years, but it is certainly a lot longer than that, because we have had problems of construction safety for a long, long time. The more our province grows and construction work develops, the problem becomes more and more serious.

It is almost two years now, Mr. Speaker, since the Hogg's Hollow disaster, and that was only the culmination of a long series of disastrous occurrences involving men's lives. At that time the government refused to act; it set up a Royal commission because it said it wanted to know more about the matter.

The hon. Minister blandly tells us that he is not going to go off half-cocked and be presumptuous, to anticipate the safety council now. At that time it was the Royal commission.

Well, I would like to see him be presumptuous enough to try to protect men's lives. I do not think that is a presumption that we would blame him for. It was two years ago almost that they sloughed the whole problem off, took no remedial action at all, said that they were going to have a Royal commission to advise them and they would act after the Royal commission reported.

The Royal commission reported nearly two months ago and now they are going to have another body report to them on what the Royal commission reported to them on. I do not know how long this can go on, but in the meantime we still have the problem of men in danger every day of the week and particularly on construction jobs.

I would like to read another extract from the report. I have read it to this House before, but apparently it has not sunk in on the hon. Minister, so I will read it again:

Finally, the commission wishes to reiterate that a modern, well-enforced safety construction Act is vital to the safety of the hundreds of thousands of construction employees in Ontario and a need for such legislation is so urgent that we recommend such an Act be proclaimed at the earliest possible date.

Now there certainly was no suggestion there that we had to delay action, on construction safety at least, until after the safety council had been set up. Certainly the clear implication of that particular recommendation is that a construction safety Act should be proceeded with immediately. But the hon. Minister says: "No, we will wait until we can set up the council and let the council consider the matter and then after they have considered the matter and reported to me I will consider what I will do".

Judging from the way he put that, it would appear that he will not likely make up his mind until after the 1961-62 session of the Legislature has adjourned so we will have no construction safety Act for another year.

How long can this go on, Mr. Speaker? Certainly I am quite in favour of a council, I would like to see the council in the terms envisaged by the commission that would be much preferable to the truncated version of the hon. Minister, but this council should not be used as an excuse for delaying action on everything else. I think the hon. Minister's statement makes it abundantly clear that the government's whole approach to safety legislation is totally inadequate. For that reason I believe that the amendments should carry and that the government should come back with proper proposals.

I realize—and I know this is a very grave matter and that is what caused our hesitation—that our amendment, if carried, will defeat the bill. But I will say, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group, and I have no doubt on behalf of all members of this House, that we are ready to sit here until the government can come back with something proper.

Let us defeat this bill and then get proper legislation in. As far as I am concerned, and I am sure most other members are concerned, we will sit here until that legislation can be put into force. That is the proper course for the government. The time for stalling is long past. It is time we got action and something was brought in approaching a proper safety programme with particular reference—I would state again—to this most urgent problem of construction safety.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak against the amendment if I may.

I have made it abundantly clear, I think, that it is my intention to request this council immediately to look into all matters respecting the safety of workers. One could not be much broader than that in his request.

In addition, sir, I can tell hon. members that one of the first requests I shall make to this council is to consider proposals for a new construction Act to take the place of The Building Trades Protection Act, which I hope will be repealed at that time. That is one constructive move that can and will be made.

It has been said a great deal of time has elapsed. It is two months since the report came in—

An hon. member: Eighteen years.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: One can say 18 years—throw these words around in order to colour the picture and work up a little bit of political hay. I appreciate there are some by-elections in the offing, but I resent very much using this forum for a political attack in the field of safety when we are earnestly and sincerely endeavouring to get on with the job.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is the only person who is playing politics.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: They can murmur all they like as far as I am concerned, the Act is going to stay just as it is, Mr. Speaker, and with that framework we will do a good job in the interests of the safety of the workers in the province.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I am interested when an hon. Minister of the Crown in this parliament stands up and suggests that there is something very heinous about being political in these chambers. I do not know how we are supposed to approach the problems of government in a democracy if you do not use the party system and if you are non-political—

An hon. member: The hon. members would just agree with the hon. Minister all the time.

Mr. Thompson: I think that the hon. Minister would want either to silence or to suppress our party.

We have all been aware that there have been gaps in safety legislation when there have been these disasters taking place and men's lives lost. I could go dramatically into that but I do not want to. I just want to say that we know that the McAndrew report shows there has been a serious deficiency on the part of this government with respect to the protection of men's lives. I find it very hard to understand, when the government says it will set up a Royal commission in order to get the facts, and when the hon. Minister commends the Royal commission on what it has done, that he is now setting up a safety council or another committee to look at these facts. As the hon. member on my left (Mr. Bryden) asked, how many committees do you have? Will you have another committee to look at what this safety council has reported, and so on? I cannot help feeling that both the previous Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) and the present hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) must be fully aware of the very real emergency caused by the lack of safety regulations today and because of their lack of application.

I know that many other hon. members of the Liberal party have felt this way. May I recall my own feeling of grave necessity to do something for the people in my area because of the lack of safety? From my first speech in this House I have constantly been asking the hon. Minister of Labour to do certain things which are now being recommended by the McAndrew report. It would be very simple to do some of these things and would mean so much to the safety of the workers in this province. When the present hon. Minister of Labour was being asked about some of the recommendations of the McAndrew report—a report which he had commended—I asked him in this House about one of the recommendations and I was told that this would be given due consideration. It seems that the consideration is going to go on into the next year; a safety council is going to be set up to analyze the report of the commission which the hon. Minister has already praised. I would suggest, sir, that we all feel the necessity for the implementation of these recommendations. Many of us, who are close in our ridings to people who have to go to work under tough conditions, read in the papers of men who have been seriously hurt or killed because of lack of legislation. That need is underlined in the McAndrew report. We need these regulations.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: So is the council in the report.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, but surely there is an urgency here, Mr. Speaker. The Royal commission has exposed a serious lack of coverage for the people of this province—for the working people. If that is the case it is the duty of the people in this Legislature, this parliament, not to hold back the necessary legislation by making more and more committees. Rather, if necessary, we should stay here night after night in order to get the necessary regulations out. We on our side of the House feel the dire need for regulations. We appreciate the hon. Minister saying he is going to consider new regulations, but we feel that this should be done now—that he should have brought in this legislation after he had read the indictment of the McAndrew report. Therefore I would very strongly go along with what the other Opposition speakers have said and suggest that this shows a hesitancy—almost a reluctance—on the part of the government to move when it has been shown the real necessity to legislate for the safety of working people.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to this amendment. I tried to keep my earlier comments brief because it was my understanding at that time that this was one phase in the adoption of the McAndrew report and criticized the manner in which this council was to be set up. Since that time, Mr. Speaker, as this debate has gone further I have been—to put it mildly—amazed at the most recent remarks of the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) when he stood up to defend this. In particular he said we could say what we like; the Act will remain as it is until this commission reports.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. Minister that he is entirely wrong. He is saying in effect: "I have no confidence in the McAndrew report, I am going to set up another committee to report on the McAndrew report."

I went through this report and made notes of the various recommendations which were made, Mr. Speaker. Some of them are very definite and very positive. I should like, if I might, to amplify this. I should like to read some of them. On page 76 of the McAndrew report it says very clearly:

That the commission recommends that the problem of enforcement of this Act should clearly state that the ultimate responsibility for its administration, enforcement, review and amendment lies with The Department of Labour.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Now the hon. Minister is proposing to set up somebody else to review this situation when the report sets out—not only in one instance but in several instances—that the responsibility lies with The Department of Labour.

I have some sympathy for the hon. Minister because I realize he is a new Minister in this department. Nevertheless I think as an hon. Minister of the government he must take responsibility for the administration of this department through the years. I suggest to him that by starting up this new council, and in light of his remarks this afternoon, he has clearly indicated that he is not going to carry out these several recommendations of the McAndrew report until he has another report from another committee. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in taking this course of action, the hon. Minister is ignoring the McAndrew report and, as has been clearly set out this afternoon, we are going to be set back one, two or three years—I do not know how long—until a further commission reports.

Let me read some of these recommendations, Mr. Speaker. I submit to you, sir, that they should be carried out now, and that all the advisory councils in the world will not change the substance of some of them. It is the responsibility of the hon. Minister to carry them out and to show some action now. As I said earlier, when I originally criticized this Act it was my understanding that further legislation would be forthcoming in the present session. I am now enlightened by the hon. Minister's views that, no matter what is said here, no matter what is said he is not going to make any changes in this Act until the new committee reports. Let me read some of these recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: From what the hon. member said a little while ago, nothing would convince him.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I have already said, Mr. Speaker, that the McAndrew report states on page 27, that this committee—speaking of the committee which the hon. Minister has set up today—is to make recommendations to the appropriate Minister in its annual report which will be tabled in the Legislature. In the very carrying out of this one recommendation, he is not even following the suggestion completely, but is setting up another camouflage. It will be impossible for members of this Legislature to know what is being done.

Let me go on:

The commission also feels that the Minister of Labour should have the power to suspend or cancel a certificate of competency by an inspector, including insurance inspectors, whose work is unsatisfactory.

No legislation is forthcoming to change that situation. We have had recommendations on it. What is the sense in setting up another committee to report on these definite recommendations? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Labour either to accept or reject these recommendations, but to do something with them.

Mr. Singer: He cannot do that because he cannot read them.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I thank the hon. member. That was a very wise remark; just as puerile as some of his others.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: There are several recommendations, Mr. Speaker, upon which all the committees in the world cannot decide. There are several recommendations in the report that must be adopted or tossed out by the government and the hon. Minister of Labour. On page 31 there is a recommendation which suggests that the minimum penalty under the Act should be increased from $25 to $1,000. These are not recommendations that a committee can rule on. The decision must be made by the responsible Minister of the Crown and the government opposite.

It is unfair, Mr. Speaker, to say that all of these matters are going to be turned over to a committee which is not responsible to the people of this province. There is too much of a tendency opposite, I suggest, to turn these things over to boards and commissions, and to avoid the responsibility which rightly belongs to the elected representatives of the people.

The McAndrew commission feels that The Department of Labour must take responsibility for the enforcement of The Building Trades Protection Act as well as The Trench Excavators Act. These, again, are definite recommendations. Now the hon. Minister proposes he is going to set up a committee to tell him whether or not he should do it.

The commission recommends that municipalities be made responsible for the carrying out of the conditions of these two Acts. This is something that must be done from the government benches; it is not something that should come in a recommendation from the committee. Again, on page 35, there is another suggestion as to the changes in the penalty.

Mr. Speaker, I think if any of us were to go through this report, there is recommendation upon recommendation which calls for action on the part of the government. It does not call for the setting up of more straw men that we can knock down. I suggest that if the government is going to set up Royal commissions—and then set up committees to investigate the recommendations of the Royal commissions—they are wasting the taxpayers' funds in setting up these commissions in the first place.

I think it is the responsibility of the government to give us some action. I am trying to be critical in a constructive way. I do not like to condemn the hon. Minister personally for the past, but I think I must condemn him, sir, for his lack of action in picking some sort of positive course as a result of the McAndrew commission which was set up in good faith. There is the report which all of us have read, and the report is very critical of the department. It is critical of the attitude of the enforcement officers in The Department of Labour, and now the government tells this Legislature that amendments are going to be put off for another year while they investigate the investigation.

I suggest, sir, that the thing is wrong. Originally I was prepared to go along with the recommendation but, in view of the remarks of the hon. Minister today, I do not see how any honest Opposition can do otherwise than criticize it very strongly and vote against it until something more positive is forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Warrender moves the second reading of Bill No. 39.

Mr. MacDonald moves the amendment that the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that" and substituting, "This House regrets the inadequacy of the government's programme of industrial safety."

Will those hon. members in favour of the amendment say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

THE VITAL STATISTICS ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 40, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add anything to the explanation I gave on the introduction of the bill. It is the reduction of a period from 28 weeks to 20 weeks in respect to the definition of stillbirths. There is a general feeling throughout Canada and throughout the world—through the World Health Organization—that statistics on stillbirths would provide more medical information if the period were standardized at 20 weeks.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 41, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, on this bill I am sure we, on this side of the House, are in favour of the principle embodied, but I think it provides an opportunity to suggest to the hon. Provincial Secretary that the information in his particular department is away behind the times. The system, it seems to me, must surely be antiquated in that department because of the delay involved in getting these returns in, and knowing where these charters are, and what the situation is.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I think the hon. member is addressing himself to the next bill, The Corporations Information Act.

Mr. Oliver: I am sorry if we are not on the right bill.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS INFORMATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Corporations Information Act.

Mr. Oliver: Continuing, Mr. Speaker, from where I was on the other bill, I think perhaps all hon. members of the House have had a similar experience. A couple of weeks ago I had a letter from the department, I think,

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

asking me if I were still the director of a certain company. That company has been out of existence for 10 or 14 years. If that is the sort of records that are kept in that department, it is no wonder difficulties evolve every once in a while. It seems to me that the hon. Minister should surely be able to give an undertaking that this information will be more up-to-date in the future than it has been in the past. Surely the product of automation or machines of some character could be put to work in this department to bring the statistics up to date. The records are not much use if they are eight or 10 years behind as they have been in many, many cases in the hon. Minister's department.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the intent of two of the sections are to provide the public with more up-to-date changes in respect of corporations. We have presently—and I can give the exact number at a later date, perhaps when the estimates of the department come up—roughly 65,000 corporations in the province of Ontario, and we incorporate annually—I believe the figure is around 7,000 a year, in addition to the number of extraprovincial corporations licensed to do business in the province of Ontario, and in addition to those who do not have to be so licensed, that are incorporated in other jurisdictions but carry on business in the province of Ontario.

Through the years there has always been a certain requirement under The Corporations Information Act, which was reviewed at the same time that The Companies Act of Ontario was reviewed, when the select committee was sitting; certain changes were made in respect of the forms at that time. Companies are required to make these statements annually. That is required of all corporations. This involves a great many types of corporations. There are corporations which are very large and have legal staffs at their disposal—with respect to which there is no difficulty in the filing of annual returns. There are other very small corporations; there are the non-share capital corporations or associations—of which there are some 3,000 in the province of Ontario; they are not perhaps as well equipped to complete this information as they should be. However, I will say this to this House that for a number of years the department has been going back through the records and culling out all the companies which have not filed their returns as necessary. My predecessors, I believe, and I have continuous, monthly, signed orders, in which there are several foolscap pages of names of companies whose corporate powers have been cancelled because of failure to comply.

We have been trying to be fair with people. We do give them the opportunity—perhaps we have leaned too far in that direction—and reminded them continuously that they should file annual returns. I think 90 per cent of the job has been completed until now; the other 10 per cent will be completed this coming year, and the whole of the backlog will have been cleared out. Then we will require these annual returns in respect of all corporations right on the dotted line, perhaps.

Those hon. members who are lawyers, and who have had dealings with the filing of annual returns, are, I think, familiar with what some of these—especially the little corporations, the vast number of them—are up against in the filing of these returns.

These provisions we have now made are to give the public up-to-date information. This is apart from what the hon. member brings up in respect to the requirement of an annual return. We are now going one step further, with two vital requirements in respect of corporations: changes in directorship, and changes which affect the capital structure of the corporation, must be filed so that they will be brought to the attention of the public much more quickly. In the case of change in directors the notice has to be filed within 15 days. Changes in authorized capital must be filed within 30 days.

I personally believe that those are exceedingly good changes, and we will be in a position to have up-to-date information, both within the department and for the public at large.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): I was wondering if the hon. Provincial Secretary would permit a question. Suppose the company failed to file the change of directors in 15 days; what is the penalty involved?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The penalty will be the general penalty under The Corporations Act. I have not got it before me.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

On vote 801:

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Chairman, in connection with The Department of Insurance, first let me say that there has been a change in the head of the department. Mr. Roy Whitehead, after a long period of government service, reached the age of retirement in August of this year and retired as superintendent. The deputy, Mr. Cecil Richards, who is a chartered accountant and has had some 23 years service in the service of the province—the last four or five of which have been as deputy superintendent of insurance—has been appointed superintendent. He sits here in front of me for the first time in that capacity and I think it is appropriate that I should pay tribute to both these gentlemen. They have done excellent service and I think their service is appreciated.

Now, I might say that The Department of Insurance has the administration of some eight Acts, The Insurance Act, The Loan and Trust Act, The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Investment Contracts Act, The Collection Agencies Act, The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act, and The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act.

There are some figures that would perhaps be of interest to the hon. members. They are comparable with last year in most cases, but the number of life insurance licensed agents is some 8,000—other than life, 9,500; and insurance adjusters, 750. Real estate brokers: number of registered brokers, 2,600; and salesmen 6,000. These are round figures.

The advisory board in connection with real estate brokers held some ten hearings during the year.

There are some 33 inspectors in the department. The total staff of the department is 69. This is a small department in many respects but is actually self-sustaining. As a result of some changes in the fees a few years ago, the anticipated income for the fiscal year, with which we are now dealing in the estimates, is some $624,000, and the anticipated expenditures some $466,000.

I think the House might be interested in a few comments in connection with The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act. I asked the superintendent to give me a short report on it and I am now giving some parts of this report for the benefit of the House, since this is a relatively new Act. It came into force on July 1, 1960 and the second year of its operation began on July 1, 1961. The actual registration at the present time is 1,173 mortgage brokers, of which 149 are lawyers and 588 are real estate and insurance brokers. Last year at the same time the registrations were 958, so that there have been something over 200 additional registrations in this second year over the previous year. Two registrations in the current period since July 1, 1961, have been cancelled. One was in connection with a resident from another province who failed to maintain an office in this province, and the other was in connection with the issuing of cheques that were not met when they reached the bank, and caused some difficulty.

The Act has had a salutary effect on the mortgage business. It appears to have had some effect in reducing interest rates charged and in reducing the incidence of bonus mortgages.

This Act, hon. members will recall, came into effect at the same time as some amendments to The Unconscionable Transactions Act and, to the knowledge of The Department of Insurance, there has been at least one case, under The Unconscionable Transactions Act—which went through to the Court of Appeal—where an effective interest rate of 27.5 per cent was declared unconscionable and the decision, as I say, was sustained by the Court of Appeal. It is the view of the department officials that that decision has gone quite a long way in causing a good deal more attention to be paid to the fairness of this sort of transaction. There have been, to the knowledge of The Department of Insurance, a number of settlements and rebates to mortgagors.

There has also been a number of applications—for which I do not have the figures—under The Unconscionable Transactions Act, which would be known in more detail to the Inspector of Legal Offices; but in many cases I understand that proceedings, even a threat of proceedings, under that quick procedure method has been beneficial.

There has also been—through the instrumentality on the part of the department—adjustments for mortgagors by way of reduction in commission charged or a rebate on bonus levied. In certain abortive deals in which the department has intervened, this has resulted in mortgage registrations being removed from title after futile efforts over a number of months by the mortgagors' solicitors.

While the department is now receiving many inquiries from the public, complaints have diminished considerably. Most of the present inquiries are to endeavour to get a legal opinion as to whether or not the terms are unconscionable, and of course that is not for the department to determine and therefore these people are advised to consult their solicitors.

Inspection of mortgage brokers' records has been carried out on a routine basis and also where certain complaints have been received. Since July 1, 1961—that is, the current fiscal year for this particular Act—33 such inspections have been made. Brokers have been warned about certain deficiencies in their records and procedures. Up to now it has not been necessary in the view of the department to institute any prosecutions.

One of the most evident benefits of the application of the Act is, in the words of the registrar of mortgage brokers, that gimmick and bait advertising, especially in the Toronto area, which is the centre of mortgage activity, has been pretty well eliminated.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I am interested in exploring for a moment or so, the limits of The Department of Insurance supervisory and regulatory powers in the field of mortgage and insurance companies. I want to give the House an example. It has been drawn to my attention by a constituent of mine, who is an insurance agent and who conducts his insurance business in the town of Weston.

Let me start, Mr. Chairman, by reading a few paragraphs from a column of Pierre Berton's some time ago in which he outlines as succinctly as can be done, the basic facts of this case. I hope I can beseech the attention of the hon. Attorney-General to follow the details of this because I have a question or so I would like to put to him at the end.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I wonder my hon. friend has not seen fit to send it to the office at all.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know why I should send it to the office.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I was just asking, that was all.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I have not seen fit to send it to the office. I think when it is in public print, and is therefore readily available to the hon. Attorney-General—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: One does not read all the papers.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps the hon. Attorney-General does not read the Toronto Daily Star; he concentrates on the Telegram.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It might be a wise thing for the hon. member for York South to do. He might learn more.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting now from Mr. Berton's article:

When Stan Matias opened an insurance office in Weston, he figured he would have a free hand in selling such things as fire insurance to his clients. He figured that way; he figured that was what was called "individual enterprise"; how wrong he was. Mr. Matias went through the list of general insurance companies and he discovered that the rates were just about the same for most of them. These are the so-called board companies that belong to the Canadian Underwriters' Association.

Insurance company executives are among the loudest decriers of big unionism but, to Mr. Matias' inexpert eye, the Canadian Underwriters' Association looked awfully like one big union.

Then Mr. Matias discovered there was one company that had broken away from the big union; this was the Home Insurance Company. Oddly its rates on broad coverage were about six cents lower (per $100 of insurance) than that of the "board" companies.

So Mr. Matias decided to use the Home Insurance Company exclusively and pass on the savings to his clients.

But then Mr. Matias ran into trouble. He sold an insurance policy with Home Insurance to a man in Etobicoke. This house had been purchased with an N.H.A. mortgage and this mortgage was held by the Guaranty Trust Company.

When Mr. Matias sent an endorsement of the policy to the Guaranty Trust, however, he got a brief letter back saying that the Guaranty Trust could not accept. Why? Because Home Insurance was not on the trust company's list of "approved fire insurance companies."

Now, how does an insurance company get on the approved list? Easy. It submits a financial statement and then agrees to purchase between $25,000 and $50,000 of Guaranty Trust Investment certificates. In short, Guaranty Trust has said: "Lend us $25,000 and we will play ball with you—otherwise, no soap."

Mr. Matias phoned the president of the Guaranty Trust, Mr. J. Wilson Berry, to explain that he was not an agent for any of the approved companies. Mr. Berry told Mr. Matias that it was "just too bad." Then he suggested Mr. Matias use another company—one that was approved. He suggested Canadian General Insurance, and very quickly, a man from this company phoned Mr. Matias. It turns out that Mr. Berry, who is the president of the Guaranty Trust Company, is also a director of the Canadian General Insurance.

As a result, Mr. Matias had to cancel the policy with Home and sign up with Canadian General Insurance.

After some bickering, the new company met Home's lower price but made it very clear that this was an exception. It would, it said, accept no other business from Mr. Matias at that rate.

Mr. Matias has complained about this to The Department of Insurance at Ottawa (since the government is involved through N.H.A.) but he has been told that nothing can be done about it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am informed by Mr. Matias that he first took the matter up with The Department of Insurance here. He was told it was not any of their business, and so he contacted Ottawa, and he is told by Ottawa that it is none of their business. I think it is interesting to look into the official explanations that are given.

In this instance, by the federal department: In a reply by Mr. K. R. MacGregor, federal superintendent of insurance, to Mr. Matias in August of this year, Mr. MacGregor said this—and there are some delightfully coy statements on the situation here:

As we understand it, the trust company is in fact laying down a condition that it will make the mortgage loan only if it received, among other things, an insurance policy on the property issued by one of the companies on the list.

Incidentally, I might add, that was only half the story; they will do business with this insurance company only if it, in turn, is willing to invest in the trust company—presumably in the mortgage division of the trust company. In short, the insurance companies are compelled to supply the trust company with some of its mortgage monies.

Continuing with Mr. MacGregor's letter:

The making of the mortgage loan is therefore within the discretion of the trust company and there is no legal prohibition against the trust company setting up a list of preferred fire insurance companies.

If I may digress again for a moment. Is it within the powers of the trust company to draw up an approved list on the basis of a compulsory investment of the insurance companies' funds in the trust company? A point which Mr. MacGregor wholly neglects. Continuing in his letter:

So far as this department is concerned, we consider that any company that continues to be registered for the transaction of new insurance in Canada, is in a financial condition to meet its liabilities, otherwise we would recommend termination or modification of its certificate of registry. However, it may well be that individuals or corporations prefer some company or companies to others and the reasons for their preference might be of wide variety.

Again, if I may digress, the question surely is: Is this a legal reason for the "wide variety of preference"—namely the compulsory investment of funds and the regulation that they thereby have over insurance agents? He concludes his letter:

We do not think the department can or should attempt to influence any individual or corporation in the choice of an insurer. which is surely off the base a bit.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Would you say that was a closed shop?

Mr. MacDonald: Very much a closed shop.

Mr. Whicher: Are you in favour of this?

Mr. MacDonald: Let me proceed, Mr. Chairman. I would like to quote briefly again from a letter of Mr. Matias in which he explained why he chose the Home Insurance Company. He says this; writing to Mr. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa:

We use exclusively the Home Insurance Company, the reason being we are able to sell fire insurance at the rate of 37 cents per $100. In doing this we are saving the taxpayers six cents on each $100 house insurance. The Home Insurance Company is a large, reliable, well-established company and we have written up a number of these policies which have been well accepted by both the home owner and the mortgagees.

He concludes his letter with, I would submit, a very apt comment:

I fail to see why a small agent and also the home owner should be squeezed between the vise of two financial giants. This would appear to be an infringement of civil liberties and private enterprise, especially so when the government of Canada guarantees loans to trust companies under the N.H.A. structure and also licences insurance companies to operate.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to quote another comment from one of Mr. Matias' letters, which I think, puts this rather boldly in terms of an insurance agent who finds himself the helpless victim of the dictates of a trust company, operating in the fashion which I have just outlined.

The writer spent seven years in the Services and has worked up to 16 hours a day to earn an honest living for himself, his wife and three children. This is not the first instance when a trust company with its own allied insurance companies has tried to dictate where business should be directed. You will understand that I, as an agent—and I think this is a very pertinent point, Mr. Chairman,

—you will understand that I, as an agent, do not represent an interest in the insurance companies but rather an interest in my clients from whom I receive my commissions. Therefore, if I can save them money and at the same time give them insurance protection with a reliable company, it is my duty and my responsibility to do so.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, that is a very able and eloquent statement of what should be the responsibility of an insurance agent.

An hon. member: What is the date?

Mr. MacDonald: The date? The date of that letter is August 25, 1961.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I do not think it is well said. I happen to be one.

Mr. MacDonald: I know the hon. member is, and I have heard his views on insurance companies before. It is obvious his views are identified with those of the insurance companies—and therefore, I conclude, not with the clients.

Mr. Cowling: Well, there is the smart man who knows all the answers about insurance or anything else that comes up. How wise the hon. member is!

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to get into an argument with the hon. member, Mr. Chairman. I am talking at the moment about Mr. Matias' observation that his job is to protect the interests of his clients, not the insurance companies. I am not surprised; in fact, I think it is rather significant that the interjection of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) in effect suggests that it is the responsibility, as he interprets it, to protect the interests of the insurance companies and not the clients. I hope his clients will take note of this.

Mr. Cowling: The hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: I know what I am talking about.

Mr. Cowling: As usual.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the net result of all this is that there is an intensification of a monopoly condition in the money market. This trust company, through its mortgage division—which comes under the jurisdiction of this department whose estimates are before us—dictates what company insurance agents can deal with it. It does so, not on the basis of the soundness of the company, but simply on the basis of whether or not this company is going to respond to the dictates of the trust company—that it must invest some of its funds in the trust company before the trust company, in turn, will permit its clients to buy insurance from it.

How this, by any stretch of the imagination Mr. Chairman, can be called free enterprise, is just one point that rather puzzles me, since it comes from people who are the incorrigible champions of free enterprise. Be that as it may, the question I want to ask of the hon. Minister, is: Does the regulatory and supervisory powers of The Department of Insurance, as they are now spelled out, not make it possible for this department to come to grips with this kind of pressuring—very close to blackmailing or compulsory investment? If they do not permit of supervision and regulation, will the hon. Minister give some consideration to broadening those powers so that something can be done about this kind of activity?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would say that there is no compulsory power in the statute. There would have to be such power to enable action such as the hon. member suggests. Persuasion sometimes helps. As a matter of fact, this is an old story and it is like some other stories, gradually becoming less and less typical because these trust companies are going over to the practice that the hon. member has been advocating. I am told that there are only two now—maybe only one, the one mentioned, which is still adhering rigidly to the particular selected or approved insurance company list.

Therefore I would think that protests such as this, publicly aired from time to time, in the past and at this moment, are probably assisting in getting this thing into a line that would be more in accordance with what the hon. member thinks is right. I think in this particular case there is a good deal to be said about that point of view. So I do not think we would want to get into the field of actually compelling that type of action.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am very encouraged to learn that this has been restricted to the one company, the Guaranty Trust Company. But the question I want to focus on for a moment is this: Is it a legitimate proposition for a company that is operating under the supervision of the hon. Minister, that it, in effect, should dictate that an insurance company must invest in its business?

We have heard an awful lot about compulsion in various forms. In effect, the trust company dictates that this company must invest in its investment certificates. A lot of innocent insurance agents, going about their business, suddenly find that the policies they have taken out just will not be accepted because this company blacklisted itself by refusing to bow to this dictate.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think it is in the field of their own selection; that would be the argument they take. They like certain companies and they apparently do not like other companies. Actually, this is gradually disappearing and I think perhaps the only other company that was involved in it has already joined with another one of the large companies which had the practice which the hon. member advocated.

Mr. MacDonald: I make this final comment, Mr. Chairman, and then I will leave it because, apparently, only public pressure is going to rectify the situation. I am constantly amazed at the number of words that are uttered, and the number of editorials that are written, about alleged violation of the civil rights of individuals because of certain actions in a trade union. Yet here we have this kind of compulsion and blackmailing in the instance of the operation of an insurance company, and the hon. Attorney-General says we cannot do anything about it, it would be unwise for us to take unto ourselves this kind of—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This is competitive enterprise. If a company is doing something that is not really sound and proper they will lose business, and the other people will get it; and it will adjust itself.

Mr. Cowling: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to straighten the hon. member out on a couple of points. It is always amazing how much he knows about everything. I have spent 25 years in the insurance business, but I still bow to him and I can learn something from what he has to say.

I belong to the Ontario Insurance Agents Association, which represents about 2,500 agents in the province and this matter has come up from time to time at our convention and we have done something about it. I think the mere fact that the hon. Attorney-General has said there is now only one or two companies that have that rule, is an indication that we have made a lot of progress.

This has not come up at our conventions in the last several years. Believe me, if the insurance agents of the province were interested in it or had a problem, it would certainly be discussed and we would be right on the doorstep of either the superintendent of insurance or the hon. Attorney-General. He knows that as well as I do.

I do not know the agent whom the hon. member mentioned there in Weston, but as a licensed agent in the province of Ontario, he acts on behalf of the company, not on behalf of the client. His commissions are paid to him by the company, not by the clients.

Mr. MacDonald: From the money that the client pays.

Mr. Cowling: Yes, but the client pays an insurance premium and his agent gets a portion for commission, which is perfectly all right. The hon. member is just not seeing the picture right. He is talking through his hat, on this particular problem. I am trying to give him a little bit of advice.

If the hon. member wants to buy a fire insurance policy, he goes to the company or to the agent of his choice—does he not—where he thinks he will get the best deal for the least amount of premium? Anybody does. Well, the same thing applies with the trust company. If we write an insurance policy covering a mortgage and the business is not acceptable to the company that has the mortgage, then we will take it some place else. If we do not like the way they do business, we will do business with another company. If the hon. member does not like the way his agent operates, he does business with another agent. He does not go crying to the government.

Discussing agency problems with the superintendent of insurance in Ottawa is a waste of time, because he has no jurisdiction over agency matters, agents, and so on; they are licensed and controlled by the superintendent of insurance in our province. One does not have to go to Ottawa to get the answers.

As a matter of fact, I think it would be a good idea—if this fellow does not already belong to the Metropolitan Agents Association—if he joined and found out a few of these answers right here in town.

If I do not want to do business with this trust company, I will change it. If I do not like the way my bank operates, I will change it, and that is one of the great things of free enterprise. We can move around as we please. We are absolutely free to change any time, any day. And it is something that the hon. members enjoy the same as we do.

I just wanted to mention the point that the agent works for the company, and the company pays his commissions. Many times I have heard the hon. member say since he has been here, Mr. Chairman, that I am the spokesman for the insurance companies, which is strictly bunk. I have no connection with the insurance companies other than that we write business for them. If we do not like the way they do business, then we simply change our company. And if they do not like the way we do business, they change us, and that is the way it should be.

Believe me, I am not speaking for the companies. I am trying to straighten the hon. member out on an agency matter, which is something I think I know a little bit about. Now if the hon. member has any other questions I will be glad to answer them for him.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to get into the argument as to who the agent works for, it is just a difference in interpretation of one's responsibilities.

However, the point I do want to make is this; the hon. member told me that I am free to go and do business where I can get the cheapest rate for coverage. Fine. But he has missed the key of this whole business.

This man got the home owner in Etobicoke insurance at six cents per hundred coverage cheaper, from a reliable company. Then he found himself the victim of dictation by the trust company on that blacklisting basis that it has chosen, which says: You must go out and buy insurance at a higher rate. In other words, free enterprise said to this man: Though you can get your coverage from a reliable company for 37 cents, we dictate you must go and buy it from another company for 43 cents. You are buying it from that company because we in turn had dictated earlier that this company will invest in our investment securities. Now, is that free enterprise?

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, if I lend out some money on a mortgage, or for any other reason, or you lend it out—your hard-earned money—it is up to you to say how it is going to be insured or how it is going to be handled in any way.

Mr. MacDonald: In a reliable company.

Mr. Cowling: I say that is precisely the situation in which the trust company finds itself. It is their money, and they will call for the insurer of their choice.

Mr. MacDonald: We have to have a certain amount of freedom here, Mr. Chairman—but I submit it is not the right of the trust company to dictate where you buy your insurance.

Mr. Cowling: They are not dictating. They are just specifying where they put their mortgage money and how they want it covered by insurance.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if this company is still licensed by the federal department of insurance, it is a legal company to give insurance in this province, not only in this province but in—

Mr. Cowling: We are not concerned about it being licensed federally, we are concerned about it being licensed by the province, that is the important thing.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I have some questions for the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). It is unfortunate the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) gets off on a tangent like this. There might be other things besides investments. Surely he is not suggesting that it is necessary to do business with a company, whether you like them or not. Surely he is not suggesting that.

I do not like the way several insurance companies do their adjusting. The hon. member is suggesting that if I had some money, I could not say which company I should do business with. He certainly does not know the facts, and I suggest to him that the agent he speaks of does not know much about the insurance business. I might not agree with all the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) says, but the hon. member for York South apparently shows an apparent lack of knowledge of the subject.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question with respect to the licensing of real estate brokers and mortgage brokers. I quite agree with the principle of licensing and controlling them. It has come to my attention that certain real estate brokers were licensed and controlled under the Act. Because of the nature of their business, which involved the placing of mortgages in various ways, they have registered under The Mortgage Brokers Act. I do not quarrel with this, except for the fact that I would tell the hon. Attorney-General he is charging them two fees. He is charging them $25 to be licensed under one Act, and $25 to be licensed under another Act. It seems to me that this problem could be controlled much more easily and much more cheaply.

Contrary to what some people might think, there are some brokers to whom this is a hardship. I am wondering why the system could not be changed so that the conditions of one Act would make the members subject to another and would avoid the necessity of those real estate brokers—who are already registered and already reporting to the hon. Attorney-General—paying a double fee.

It seems to me that we are creating an unnecessary expense to these operators and I wonder if any thought has been given to that or whether the hon. Attorney-General has given any thought to making these people responsible under the Act which governs their operations in the first place. I speak of the Real Estate Brokers and Business Brokers Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would say to the hon. member that I recall very well his interest in this problem when it was very acute here a year or so ago. As a matter of fact, he was president of the Hamilton and district real estate brokers association. He invited me to come over there and I think we had a very pleasant evening when the whole matter was discussed in front of a very representative and large audience including a lot of the local lawyers from that area. I know that the hon. member is speaking with real interest in the subject and I suggest that he have a talk with the superintendent. If there is any reasonable adjustment which ought to be made along those lines, we will certainly look into it.

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Chairman, the point that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) brought up a few moments ago—about the agent who was having the problem—did exist at one time; but as the hon. Attorney-General said, it hardly exists today. I think it grew out of the fact that some of these companies had a preferred list based on the sale of their securities. It was not a blacklist so much as a preferred list. It caused agents some trouble in the past. They would find, as he pointed out, they would write a policy with a company that was unacceptable. It is no longer a real problem.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct some questions to the hon. Attorney-General with regard to the administration of The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act which he dealt with to some extent in his introductory remarks. Unfortunately I missed the first part of his statement and I hope I am not asking questions that he has already answered.

The first question I would like to ask is, how big is the staff responsible for the administration of this Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Three.

Mr. Bryden: That, I take it, consists of the registrar, his assistant and an office secretary. Is that a correct assumption?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is right.

Mr. Bryden: And what other responsibilities do these three people have in addition to the administration of this Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think I mentioned in my remarks—which the hon. member may not have heard—that some checking has been going on—inspections of mortgage brokers' records on a routine basis plus those prompted by complaints.

Mr. Bryden: No. My question was, what responsibilities other than the administration of this Act do these people have?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am adding to the answer. I take it the hon. member wanted to get some idea of the personnel and the scope of the work, so I mention that there have been 33 inspections carried out since July 1, 1961. I cannot very well outline the actual detailed work of these three people—unless the hon. member has some particular point.

Mr. Bryden: The point I am getting at, Mr. Chairman, is this: As I understand it, these people certainly used to have administrative responsibilities quite unrelated to the administration of this Act. The purpose of my inquiry is to find out if they still have such responsibilities. For example, as I understand it, these three people were also responsible in the past for the administration of The Collection Agencies Act, covering about 130 collection agencies, and for the examination and inspection of the books of 38 prepaid non-profit hospital and medical plans. Now, do they still have responsibilities of that nature as well as their responsibilities under The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The superintendent informs me that the amount of work required of these people in relation to the business that is in front of them, is not such that they are not able to do it completely. They have these other Acts to deal with. There are four people, actually, he tells me, and not three in connection with this work. He gives me no reason to believe, however, that that volume of work is such that the staff is inadequate; but, if there was any such situation, certainly some application would be made to increase the staff.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would like to suggest to the hon. Attorney-General—and through him to the department—that there appears to be very good reason to believe that the staff is inadequate. A staff of three people, one of them an office secretary, to—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There are four people, I added one more.

Mr. Bryden: Four people. What is the nature of the work of that extra employee, is it a stenographer or is it another inspector?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: A clerk.

Mr. Bryden: It is a clerk in the office. So there are two people in the office plus the registrar or director—or whatever his title is—plus a more senior person who assists the registrar on his administrative responsibilities. Apparently they have made some improvements as far as the office filing system is concerned, which is no doubt advantageous; but it would seem to me that the real inadequacy exists in the more senior responsibilities involved in the administration of this Act. I did not quite absorb the hon. Attorney-

General's figure as to the number of registrants, but I think it was pretty close to 1,200 now registered under the Act. I think he used the word "routine" when he said it; he said there was a total of 33 routine inspections. If the total of routine and special inspections was 33 out of close to 1,200 offices that had been registered, it would seem to me—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This is again a case of an hon. member bouncing in half-way through, not hearing what I said earlier, and taking things out of context. If he had listened—or been in here—he would have heard my remarks which indicated that steps had been taken to produce a much more normal situation. The whole general situation is greatly improved in the field of unconscionable transactions—as in the field of adding gimmicks and advertising of that sort, which ends up, or used to end up, in highly unfair types of transaction. That is the objective, surely, of all of us.

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. Attorney-General would hold his temper; I heard all that portion of his remarks, and I do not think it was satisfactory at all. I would suggest to him on the face of it that there certainly is no routine inspection to speak of if the total—including special inspections, inspections on complaint—is only 33 out of close to 1,200 brokers, there is certainly little routine inspection.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Let me say this. This government has no intention of harassing people in the expectation that they would be doing something wrong. We assume that people are doing things right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Unfortunately, this is an industry in which there are a substantial number of people operating who are harassing some unfortunate and rather innocent victims. The hon. Attorney-General says he has no basis for believing that anything is wrong, but there certainly is ample evidence which should indicate to him that there is a great deal wrong in this industry. That some sort of routine inspection would not be out of order at all; it would be very useful.

I am going to suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that there is not even adequate investigation of the applications that are made for registration—that they are dealt with purely on a routine basis. It is merely a matter of paper work. All you need to do to get a licence in this business is to have enough money to rent some two-by-four office, a telephone and a desk—and enough for the licence fee. The department investigates no further as to the competence and adequacy of the people who have applied for licences.

If I am wrong in that statement, I would appreciate having the hon. Attorney-General correct me. Certainly, as far as I can make out, the registration procedure is a complete farce; it does not mean a thing; it does not provide for any regulation at all. The industry is certainly greatly overcrowded for the amount of business that has to be done, and there are people in it who are simply preying on the misfortunes of other people.

The hon. Attorney-General referred to the Scott case, I believe, where a mortgage was upset under The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act. In this particular case—when one allows for the bonus—the excessive interest rates the people were paying was 27 per cent. When this went to appeal—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: 27½ per cent.

Mr. Bryden: 27½ per cent. It is certainly bad enough. Mr. Justice Laidlaw observed, according to the Toronto Globe and Mail, “I rebel against the very terms of the obligation imposed.” And Mr. Justice Schroeder stated, “My brother expresses my view but I marvel at his moderation.” I think we would all probably agree with what these eminent gentlemen said, but I think one of the most significant things is that their statements demonstrate the sheltered nature of the world in which they live. They were apparently appalled, and quite properly. But this kind of deal is commonplace in the industry right now.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Does the hon. member think the world where the judges live is of a sheltered nature?

Mr. Bryden: I would submit, if they were appalled by this, as they no doubt had a right to be—or they were surprised by it, let me put it that way—they are living in a sheltered world because this sort of thing is going on all the time.

I would agree with the hon. Attorney-General that a judgment of this kind no doubt has a salutary effect, to a certain degree; but let us bear in mind that most of the people who get caught in the net of some of these second-mortgage dealers are people with quite limited education, and quite limited understanding of their rights. They are very hard pressed for funds. They get caught in the net and they are not even necessarily aware that there is any possible way out of it, even if they could afford the procedure of going to court with the possibility of having to go right to the court of appeal.

The second-mortgage dealer fattens on the fellow whose income is not adequate for him to maintain his family. He gets into debt, he gets desperate, and is attracted by an advertisement to the effect that he can get a second mortgage on his house. He goes further into debt and he has to pay a large bonus to get a second mortgage. Of course, since he could not finance to begin with, he now cannot finance in the more onerous situation in which he finds himself so he just gets further and further into the hole.

There are many cases on record where people have made payments over a period of time and ended up owing more money than they got in the first place. Then they have to get another second mortgage with another bonus and they end up still further in the hole. There is no way out of the trap—until ultimately they lose their home.

This is a problem that, in my opinion, requires much more serious consideration than the hon. Attorney-General is prepared to give it. The Act as it now stands is little more than a revenue-raising device, and a picayune revenue-raising device at that, for the government. The brokers have to pay a fee and they get registered and that is about all there is to it. Some of the rotten—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Has the hon. member any particular cases he wants to bring to my attention?

Mr. Bryden: I will be glad to bring a case to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General but surely he is as well aware as I am of some of these cases. The hon. Attorney-General said that the situation on bonuses has improved. Well, it may have, as far as some companies are concerned, but here is today's newspaper and here is an advertisement by Hargo Investments Limited.

“Safe Seconds” is the head: $1,950 buys $2,250, 7 per cent, 3 years; $1,800 buys $2,300, 7 per cent, 4½ years; $1,900 buys $2,400, 7 per cent, 3½ years.” Now this is Hargo Investments advertising for a lender.

The figures shown here are not the figures that apply to the person who has borrowed the money; Hargo Investments are getting their cut out of what that man gets. But this is the offer that Hargo Investments are making to a person who has money to lend. Of course these fellows never lend their own money, they just set up an office and advertise for a borrower by some nice attractive advertisement. Then, when they find a borrower, they get him to sign a contract which does not commit them, though it commits the borrower. Then they advertise in this way for somebody to lend the money.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is complaining about the advertising, is he?

Mr. Bryden: I am complaining about that particular advertisement, or rather, I am not complaining so much about the advertisement, as I am complaining about the situation it discloses, which shows that there is still a real racket on bonuses in these second mortgages.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is calling this company a racketeer?

Mr. Bryden: I am not calling them a racketeer, I am suggesting that extortionate bonuses which must be charged—if they can make offers of this kind to prospective lenders—are a form of racket.

If the hon. Attorney-General wants to interpret that as meaning that I am accusing this company of racketeering, he can make his own interpretation. I am suggesting that the situation is not nearly as favourable as he has made out, that the administration is quite inadequate, and that there should be a larger staff at least to check on applications for registration. None or very few of them have been checked to date. The first job may be to check on all the applications that have been received until now and where registrations have been granted.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: When these registrations first took place, there was a very thorough check in connection with all applications.

Mr. Bryden: On the renewals?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On the renewals, of course, there is not the need, normally, for anything like the same kind of a check.

Mr. Bryden: I asked the hon. Attorney-General who made the check on the original application.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The people in the department—

Mr. Bryden: It is manifestly impossible for one registrar and an assistant, and at that time one girl in the office, who had other not unsubstantial duties to perform, to have checked the 900 applications, or whatever it was, that came in the first year. That is manifestly impossible.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My hon. friend is yielding his position, I will agree that he is being co-operative that way. It took about a six-months period for that registration. Credit reports and various other checks were made on all these applicants. Now, having got that basis, and having started with an assumption that we were dealing with reasonably honest people, as far as I am concerned I would not suggest that every time they renew their licences it go through the same procedures for them. I would accept them in that position until we had some reason to believe otherwise.

Mr. Bryden: I would assume that the hon. Attorney-General would start with the assumption that to some degree he was dealing with an industry that needed some cleaning up. Now to what degree has he cleaned it up? He may have given this figure, but how many applications has his department refused? I think he said they cancelled two registrations, which is not very many considering the sort of things that go on in this industry. How many has the hon. Minister refused?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There were a number refused last year at the beginning, not a large number, but a number. There were some appeals taken right through to the superintendent. They were sifted through the department and through to the superintendent.

I say again I do not like these sort of blanket attacks on people in this sort of business as though they were suspects, or should be suspected until something happens. That is not our approach at all over here. I would not for a minute want to have an approach of that sort. I believe that the vast number of people in this province carrying on business and living here are honest people and I am not going to ever be convinced otherwise.

Mr. Bryden: There was absolutely nothing in any statement I made that suggested anything else. I suggested to the hon. Attorney-General that there were some operators in this industry whose operations needed looking into and I will rely, at least in partial support of my statement, on the fact that the Court of Appeal of Ontario apparently decided that there was one case at least where that was true. I am suggesting to the hon. Attorney-General that there are a good deal more than one, whose transactions were unconscionable.

However, I will turn to another question I would like to direct to the hon. Attorney-General with regard to his statement about gimmick advertising, as I think he described it.

Is he aware that there is currently a listing in the Toronto telephone directory as follows: "Money Unlimited Corporation Limited."

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Richardson will look at that one, but I have no doubt it has been granted—

Mr. Bryden: I cannot hear the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member was talking about a corporation by that name, I take it.

Mr. Bryden: I am by no means certain that there is such a corporation, but there is such a listing in the telephone directory and I wondered if the hon. Attorney-General was aware of it?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Quite frankly I do not spend my time going through the telephone directory.

Mr. Bryden: Perhaps not.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member has brought it to our attention—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is responsible for the administration of an Act and one of—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am not an investigator.

Mr. Bryden: Perhaps he has departmental officials who could advise him on the matter.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister will have to spend more time looking at the telephone book.

Mr. Bryden: I suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that this is not exactly a laughing matter. Obviously someone, whoever put that listing in the telephone directory, had in mind the fact that some person who is perhaps not burdened with too many brains but is overburdened with debts, might start thumbing through the directory, under the heading "money", and come across this listing and think he had discovered a pipe line to the mint.

I would suggest that this particular listing should be looked into.

I might mention, although I have no idea as to who is responsible for putting the listing there, that the address and telephone number shown for this corporation, is the same address and telephone number as is shown for Forest Hill Investment Corporation Limited, which, I believe, is a company registered under this Act. Is that not correct?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: What about it? It sounds like a good name. It is in a respectable area of the province.

Mr. Bryden: Many people take respectable names without necessarily having the respectability that the name implies. I would think it would be worth checking to see if this company which has the same address and telephone number was responsible for putting that particular listing in the telephone directory.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member thinks this is the best way, to bring people's names to the public in the Legislature for the first time without having made any inquiries ahead of time or taken any steps to find out whether they are honest decent people or not, that is the way he thinks and we will have to listen to him.

Mr. Bryden: As far as the hon. Attorney-General is concerned—this is typical, of course, of his reaction. It does not matter how anybody tries to bring anything to his attention, that is usually the reaction they get.

I am bringing it to his attention now, and I think it is perfectly proper to bring to his attention the fact that there are these listings in the directory. If he and his officials do not think they are worth investigating, that is his business. I think they are.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I should like to address another question to the hon. Attorney-General and I assure you, sir, I am not trying to put him on the spot, I am trying to get information.

I mentioned earlier these two Acts and the hon. Minister suggested I might take this to the superintendent of insurance. I may be incorrect, sir, but it seems to me that I recall having correspondence on my desk where this suggestion has already been made to the superintendent of insurance. It may be that I am incorrect.

The question I would like to direct to the hon. Minister is this: One, has there been any representation? Two, if there has been, is there any possibility of the suggestion being carried out that I made with respect to—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Representation as to what?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: As to the removal of real estate brokers from The Mortgage Brokers Act and making the one Act subject to the other so that one licence fee would do? Has there been any representation?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not think it has gotten beyond a very general discussion; but again I say to the hon. member, if he—I regard him as an expert in this field—I would be very glad if he would come and have a talk with either myself or the superintendent or with both of us if he would like to. We would be glad to talk to him about it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The other question I wanted to put to the hon. Attorney-General was with respect to the matter of licensing general insurance agents. Is there any investigation carried on before these gentlemen, or ladies, as the case may be, are licensed? I know that he does conduct a very intensive investigation and I think is doing a very good job with respect to licensing of real estate people. I now turn to insurance agents. Is there any investigation as to the background of these people, or do we depend entirely upon the insurance company investigation?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: As the hon. member knows, these people are all sponsored by reputable insurance companies and our experience, the experience of the department, is that is a pretty safe representation. They do make certain inquiries, but they do not—they start from a feeling of confidence on those recommendations.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I just throw this out for what it is worth. I suggest that there might be some merit in an investigation.

The reason I suggest this is that I understand there have been instances where a person has been licensed by one company and had the licence withdrawn and then sponsored by another company. This business is very competitive and I suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that when a person is licensed under the Statutes of Ontario that the public, I think, come to accept the fact that he is licensed by the province as some evidence that this person is a fit and proper person to sell insurance to the public. I have heard of cases where these people have gone bad.

I think it is not quite enough to depend on the insurance companies, because I feel that the business is very competitive. I understand there are some 300 companies operating in the province, and because of the competition there is not sufficient screening there. I think it might be desirable to take another look at this situation.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is a suggestion.

Actually, I am told that there have only been one or two people who have gone sour, so to speak, and they happened to be people who have been in the business a very long time.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, there is one other question that has come to my attention. I understand that it is necessary for anybody transacting insurance in Ontario to be licensed and it is not possible to sell insurance unless one is licensed as an insurance agent. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is correct.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: What about the situation where insurance is sold by an agent outside of the province? There is no protection at all.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Does the hon. member mean by mail?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am thinking of cases where perhaps an agent in, let us say, Michigan, handling insurance for a firm in Ontario. Is this permissible? I mean is it necessary that these people be licensed in Ontario to handle an Ontario insurance policy?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am informed that would be legal and not breaking our law as long as the contract is not made in Ontario.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question. The expenditures of this department compared with 1959 and 1960 have increased by approximately $83,000. Now, this is a small department, and I was wondering if he could give me any reason why there should be such a large jump. It jumps $40,000 from 1959 to 1960; it jumps in 1960 to 1961 $40,000; and now these new estimates are another $40,000 increase. Could he give me any reason for that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member takes them by the votes I think it might be clearer.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, I see. I had the total numbers here, but is there any increase in activities? When I saw the increase I thought it would be because of the registration under The Mortgage Brokers Act. If he only has a staff of four dealing with that, then he certainly could not trace $80,000 to that work. I was wondering about the overall picture. I realize everything is increased, but why?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think it would be simpler if—we have already called vote number one—if we deal with salaries. We can deal with each of these items and see where the differences are, but actually in the salary item of $347,000, that is $17,000 higher than in the previous fiscal year. Most of that is made up of normal increments, plus an increase of some three people, filling a vacancy for three people in the credit union examination field. That accounts for $17,000 in the salaries.

Mr. Trotter: I was going to ask the hon. Attorney-General, what does the government do to try to encourage the increase of credit unions, if they do anything?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The government does quite a lot. The government has some 11 inspectors in the field assisting the credit unions, and particularly those which belong to the Ontario Credit Unions Association which operates in very close harmony with the department. Actually, we are really absorbing a cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100,000 in that type of work.

But we make it very clear to the unions that what we do must not be regarded as an auditing of the accounts. They must look after their own auditing, with their own auditors as well, but it is a checking system. Over a period of three years, with that staff, we can clear all the unions in the province.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise the question of the recent increase in automobile insurance rates which was announced in the press on December 9. The day after it was announced I asked the hon. Attorney-General before the orders of the day if the government was prepared to take action before the Christmas recess of the Legislature to prevent rates from being increased over their present level, until there has been an opportunity to consider the recommendation made by the select committee on automobile insurance, in its interim report, that machinery for regulating rates be established.

The hon. Attorney-General did not answer my question directly, but I take it from the answer that he did give that the government had no intention of taking any such action. The substance of his reply was that the board companies had come in with revised figures on their claim experience, and that the superintendent of insurance was satisfied on the basis of that experience that an increase in rates was justified.

I have not read the whole answer but I think that is a fair summary of it.

At the time, of course, I did not have the complete figures on the experience of automobile insurance companies over the period of 1956 to 1960, which incidentally was the period mentioned by the hon. Attorney-General as the period for which the figures had been supplied by the underwriters association to the superintendent of insurance. I now have these figures, not admittedly in the detail which he probably had them, but I have them in the form in which they are made available to the public. The experience over the period 1956 to 1960 indicates that net losses incurred as a percentage of net premiums—that is the money that the insurance companies have to pay out in claims out of the money they collect in premiums—has been decreasing over the period to which the hon. Attorney-General referred.

In 1956 the insurance companies paid out 66.5 cents out of every dollar they collected in premiums. In 1957 this amount went up to 68.7. Then in 1958 it went down to 60.7. In 1959, to 57.2, and in 1960 to 58 cents out of every dollar. So that while there was a slight increase between 1959 and 1960, but very slight, the trend over the period was downward.

In view of these published figures, I find it a little difficult to understand why the superintendent of insurance was so easily satisfied, or apparently so easily satisfied, that increases in rates were necessary.

I would point out that these increases were quite substantial increases. They varied according to categories of insured, but according to the press reports the average increase as between 1961 and 1962 will be eight per cent. I do not know if the hon. Attorney-General can give any further explanation of this matter, but it is hard to understand, on the face of it, why it was felt that a sudden increase in rates was necessary at this particular time, just when it became known that the committee of the Legislature was recommending to the government that rate control machinery be set up.

Could the hon. Attorney-General elaborate at all on the answer that he gave me in the Legislature on December 11?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, I do not think I can elaborate at the moment on that. The hon. member has quoted some figures. Would he reveal the source?

Mr. Bryden: Yes! These are the same sort of figures that appear in the annual report of the department, I believe. The annual reports of the department always show the net premiums and the net losses incurred and the percentage of losses to premiums. For convenience I did not look up the report, I just phoned the department without them knowing, of course, how I wanted to use the information, and they readily supplied the figures to me. They are public information in any case.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Certainly they will give the hon. member the information. As a matter of fact, I was under the impression that there were certain periods in that five-year period when there were quite heavy losses incurred, in relation to the receipts as against the outgoing for claims by the company. Now, it is not a matter that it would do much good discussing again here, when I do not know the details. I do not think my hon. friend does either. But I will be glad to ask the superintendent to look into that further.

Actually, I see from paragraph four of the report of the select committee on automobile insurance which has been formally put before the House as the second interim report, that there is a recommendation there. Whether or not that would be acceptable I do not know, but I mentioned in my answer the other day that there are three or four sections of The Insurance Act which have been on the books since—I am not sure whether it was Mr. Hepburn's day or even Mr. Henry's day, but it was a long period back—whatever period it was, it has been in that state ever since and all that would be required to give effect to this section four would be to proclaim those sections. But that would be a matter of policy, of course.

Mr. Bryden: I am not going to suggest that the hon. Attorney-General attempt to reveal government policy on this matter at this time, but I would suggest to him that the procedure now followed in the Act with which he expressed satisfaction in his answer, is probably not a very satisfactory procedure.

I think we are witnessing right now some of the difficulties arising from it. This is purely a private, and perhaps informal, proceeding and it is sometimes quite easy to satisfy a person of the validity of a course of action when he hears only one side of the case. This is the sort of thing I gather that goes on under the present rather informal procedure.

The companies simply come in and present a case for a rate increase. There is no argument heard on the other side of the case, but I would submit to the hon. Attorney-General that on the face of it the figures certainly do not justify the increase that is envisaged. In fact they do not justify any increase at all.

I would suggest to him again, as I tried to in my question, that the government should give consideration to freezing the rates, or at any rate preventing them from being increased—I have no objection to any decrease the companies might want to make—until there has been an opportunity to consider the recommendation of the select committee and to have rate-regulating machinery set up. If the government decides to go ahead with that, I would consider it most advisable and desirable. In the meantime, surely it is not going to let the companies get a big whopping increase in before the control gets operating.

I suggest that the whole situation should be frozen for the moment, and then let us consider the committee's recommendation. If it is adopted, and if machinery is actually set up whereby rates can be considered at public hearings and regulated, then let the insurance companies take their case to the body that is set up for that purpose. But do not let them get away with an increase just at this juncture.

It may be pure coincidence, Mr. Chairman, but it is nevertheless a fact that this announcement of an increase in rates came very shortly after the information leaked out to the press that the select committee on automobile insurance was going to recommend establishment of rate-controlling machinery. Now that may be sheer coincidence, but nevertheless it did happen in that sequence—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member will again let me finish, those announcements come out practically every year at about the same time on the question of rates. It is as a result of discussions, review of records and so forth, with the superintendent and the superintendent informs me, as I indicated in my reply the other day, that after going over all the figures that were presented to him he was satisfied that these increases are proper for the moment at least.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would submit to the hon. Attorney-General, with all due respect to the superintendent of insurance, who no doubt is a very well qualified man, that that is not a good enough answer. I do not think the people of Ontario who are vitally affected by this type of decision should have to depend entirely on the say-so of one individual who does not give his reasons. He merely says he has looked into it and he is quite satisfied.

Now maybe other people would not be as easily satisfied. I do not know. Certainly the lack of publicity on the nature of the inquiry that was undertaken or as to the facts that were unearthed makes the procedure most unsatisfactory. I will point out to the hon. Attorney-General again that the information that is available to the public seems to indicate very strongly that an increase is not justified, and certainly not a substantial increase such as we now have.

I would also point out to the hon. Attorney-General that, although there is no compulsory automobile insurance in this province, there is nevertheless a very high degree of legal pressure on people to buy automobile insurance. I would say any person in his right mind would definitely buy automobile insurance in view of the laws as they now are in this province. There certainly is strong pressure on him to buy and if he is being pressured in this indirect way to buy insurance from private companies, I think he has a right to some public review of the rates so that he can be satisfied that they are fair.

On the basis of the situation as it now stands on information that has now been given to us, I would suggest that the rate increase is quite unjustified and unnecessary, and that it ought to be held up by government action before the recess so that the matter can be subsequently reviewed by a proper regulatory body.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would just mention—without prolonging this—that as I said in my answer earlier this session, rates are competitive and these particular rates only apply to companies, board companies I think they are called, doing less than half the general insurance business. There is a good deal of cushion and a good deal of protection in the fact that rates are highly competitive. We have heard what the hon. member has said and—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, at this point I must side with the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). When the investigations of the committee on insurance took place, among other people who came before the committee were Mr. Whitehead, the predecessor of the present superintendent. Mr. Whitehead admitted quite frankly to the committee that at no time during his occupancy of that position had he ever questioned the rates that were submitted. He had reviewed them, he had them explained to him, but at no time did he ever disagree with the submissions made by the companies that the rates were fair and proper.

I think he admitted as well, that really he did not have the facilities within his own office to conduct that sort of an investigation. I will not go as far as the hon. member for Woodbine in saying that on the basis of the evidence that has been made available in the papers, that the increases are unjustified. But I suggest that the time has now come that if the province—as the report recommends—if the province is going to say anything about these rates that there should be made available to the superintendent a proper staff to investigate these rates and to advise the public as to whether or not such increases are reasonable or unreasonable.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General whether or not the small loans branch comes within the supervision of the superintendent of insurance?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer is no.

Vote 801 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves that the committee of supply do now rise and report that it has come to a certain resolution and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. A. C. Auld (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, once again may I congratulate you on the patient and understanding way in which you are carrying out your important, though at times trying, job.

May I also very briefly add my congratulations to those of my colleagues, to those hon. members who have added to their responsibilities by appointment to the Cabinet; my friend, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton); and my friend and neighbour from eastern Ontario, the hon. member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett). The appointment of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) to the Ontario Water Resources Commission, an agency of ever-increasing importance, will I know strengthen that body. I add my congratulations to the many he has already received.

I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) for his appointment to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, very briefly I would at this time like to convey my thanks to the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) for his many kindnesses and assistance in the past to me, both as a private member and as vice-chairman of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission which reported to him.

I also want to thank the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Daley) for his help and kindness. May I say how pleased I was to see that he was going to continue as chairman of the Ontario Parks Integration Board, to which increasingly important post he will be able to devote full time.

Mr. Speaker, some months ago I reported to this House on the activities of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, with special emphasis on the opening of Upper Canada Village and Crysler Farm Battlefield Park on June 24, this year. At that time I described the historic and recreational attractions of the commission's parks system and cordially invited the hon. members of this House to attend the opening ceremony or later on during the season. As I said at that time, "Upper Canada Village must be seen to be believed." It must be viewed first hand to appreciate fully how well it has been done. Also stressed in this report were the economic benefits which were bound to accrue for eastern Ontario and the St. Lawrence River valley.

Mr. Speaker, the commission, as events have turned out, has understated both the popularity and the economic importance of the operations that have been carried out thus far. May I remind you these activities include parks and campsites from Glengarry on the Quebec border to Adolphustown on the Bay of Quinte; Old Fort Henry, and the Crysler Farm Battlefield Memorial, in addition to Upper Canada Village.

It has been said, "A wise nation preserves its record . . . gathers up its muniments . . . decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead . . . fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past." Hon. members opposite may be surprised at my use of the words of Joseph Howe, but the wisdom he attributes to a nation which preserves its historic past must be credited to the government of Ontario, which has so successfully re-created the beginnings of Ontario in Upper Canada Village and sparked renewed and active interest in the preservation of our priceless historical assets. In the beginning, before opening day, the communications industry of Ontario and all Canada hailed this venture in their magazines and newspapers, on radio and television broadcasts. It is impossible to mention here this afternoon all the publishers and broadcasters who devoted editorial space or broadcast time to Upper Canada Village. I believe you will agree that special mention has been merited by several communications media. Canadian Homes devoted its entire June issue to the village, and as a result won the Canadian Wine Institute Award this year for "the greatest contribution to stimulate public interest in the development and preservation of Canada's historical and cultural assets during the year." The Toronto Globe and Mail published a special colour section on Upper Canada Village and, for this issue, was placed second in the Wine Institute contest. The Star Weekly and Weekend magazines also gave excellent coverage. The Canadian Geographic Magazine devoted its June issue to two articles on the commission's operations. The first was written by Mrs. Beryl Way on Upper Canada Village, and the second was a definitive exposition of the Battle of Crysler's Farm by Ronald Way. Many major Ontario daily newspapers, including several in the seaway valley, devoted major editorial space to Upper Canada Village and the commission's parks system.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation broadcast two network radio programmes, "Assignment" and "Ventures," as well as a full hour of network television on Camera Canada entitled "The Enchanted Village." The commission, Mr. Speaker, is grateful to all of those who helped tell the people of Ontario and all Canada and our closely adjoining neighbours in the States, about our parks and historic sites.

Most important of all, the people came. They came literally in the hundreds of thousands. They came from more than 300 Ontario cities, towns and villages, they came from every province in Canada, from 40 American states, and from 25 other countries. Two hundred and thirteen thousand people visited Upper Canada Village between June 24 and October 10, the record for a single day being 4,800 people. Interestingly enough, 65,000 of these were school-aged children, either with their parents or in school groups. School bus loads of children came primarily from eastern Ontario, but also from more distant points in Ontario, and one group came from as far as Montebello, Quebec. There were 50 school groups, often requiring as many as four buses to carry the party. I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that Fort Henry reported a record attendance of 168,000, plus about 14,000 who attended the annual sunset ceremonial. Nine hundred and eighty thousand used the commission's outdoor recreational parks and campsites, an increase of 45 per cent over the previous year when many parks were already open.

In total, 1,400,000 persons visited one or more of the recreational or historic attractions of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission. Many of these visitors came from only a few miles away to swim or picnic or spend a day at the village. Consequently, they spent relatively little. Many others, however, came from long distances and spent several days at a cost of between $12 and $15 per day. Therefore, it is difficult to estimate the new dollars that were spent in the area. One estimate is based on these visitors spending only a day and $10 in the area. If this is reasonable, then this summer there was an injection of 14 million new dollars into the economy of eastern Ontario. Economists tell me these new dollars probably have the effect of three times as many dollars or $42 million because of the multiplier principle—a tourist pays his dollar to a motel operator who gives it to his staff in wages, who buy food at the local grocery store and so on. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that campers increased from something slightly over 8,000 camping groups a year ago, to over 30,000 camping groups this past season. At a more practical level, anyone who has tried to get lodgings for the night between Kingston and Cornwall, or Ottawa and Morrisburg during the summer of 1961 knows well the economic importance of the commission's operations to the communities in the area.

I have read that concern has been expressed by certain motel, cabin or tourist home operators about the great increase in the number of campers in Ontario. Certainly there has been an increase in campsite usage. Camping is an increasingly popular way for Canadians and Americans to spend their summer vacations. I am sure that all hon. members know that many of these campers are family groups, perhaps vacationing away from home for the first time. Their vacation trips ought to be encouraged and many of them will turn to other forms of vacation travel in future years. All forms of vacation travel are increasing and it is our observation that after several days at a camp site, many campers welcome the opportunity to use a shower and to sleep between clean sheets. In fact, in talking to motel and tourist cabin operators in my own area, I have found nothing but praise for the camping programme of the province. Those operators have told me that the people who are coming to use our camp sites are the people who, perhaps, otherwise would not have had an opportunity to get out in the country. These people are coming for part of their holidays as customers of the motel and cabin operators.

The fact of the matter is there is not enough accommodation. There are not enough good restaurants. As a result, thousands who visited the parks or historic attractions on the Ontario side of the St. Lawrence valley crossed the river to New York State when night fell. Mr. Speaker, the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission is very grateful to many departments of this government for their helpful co-operation during 1961. Our thanks go particularly to The Departments of Travel and Publicity, Lands and Forests, Highways, and, of course, the Parks Integration Board and to hon. members on both sides of this House.

The commission's first year of full operation has been a marked success; many organizations and individuals have contributed to this success, as I have mentioned on previous occasions. It is a great pleasure to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that on Tuesday, December 5, three awards of merit of the American Association for State and Local History were presented to Ontario organizations. The awards went to Imperial Oil, for making available to Canadian schools reproductions of the paintings of C. W. Jeffereys; to Rev. Father E. J. Lajeunesse, C.S.B., for his book, "The Windsor Border Region" in the Champlain Society series; and to your commission for Upper Canada Village, Crysler Farm Battlefield Park and battlefield memorial. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I think this was a particularly unique award in the fact that a well-known American organization was presenting an award to a Canadian operation which memorializes one of the few military defeats which the United States has sustained. It is significant that two of these awards may be credited almost entirely to the inspiration and instigation of one man—the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost).

Quoting very briefly from an editorial in the Montreal Star of Monday, December 11:

It comes as no surprise that this dual project has won an award of merit from the American Association for State and Local History. This association has given a great boost to historical preservation throughout the United States and the village and park were well worth its attention. There are all too few historical sites in Canada that have been developed with anything like the imagination used on the village and park. The habitation at Port Royal, Fort Henry at Kingston, Lower Fort Garry at Winnipeg—there are not nearly enough of these. The remarkable success of the village and park should convince many more people that well preserved history is living history.

Ernest Bartlett, travel editor of the Toronto Telegram, reflects the pride of all men and women in Ontario when he writes:

I am grateful for the stature of our statesman who realized that in this, our Canada, our history is worth preserving and presenting, whether it be national monuments like Old Fort Henry, or national reconstructions, like Upper Canada Village. . . .

I feel that it is right, meet and proper that on the record should go the fact that the imagination which produced these reconstructions was backed by such people as former Premier, the hon. Leslie M. Frost. I feel, to quote Kipling, "they have built better than they knoweth."

Mr. Speaker, I heartily concur.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, firstly in rising to take a place in this debate may I, like the many other hon. members of the House, congratulate you on the excellent job that you have done ever since you were appointed Speaker of this House.

May I say to you in absolute sincerity that we on the Opposition side, particularly during this session, are very happy with the fairness that you have given to us. I will say that possibly on other occasions the Speakers have a tendency to look at the hon. Prime Minister and see if he winks at them and perhaps their actions may be judged by the way that wink is placed.

But with you, sir, we on this side of the House are very happy, and I might say too that since you have been the Speaker of this House there are other occasions when we have been happy.

We have enjoyed your Speaker's dinners, as we did your predecessor's; we enjoy the times that you take us up into your apartment during the sessions and allow us to have a lunch there. As a matter of fact I was rather disappointed this year, Mr. Speaker, that you had not invited us before the Christmas festivities, and I only wish that I had been called to speak last week because then I am sure that I could have impressed upon you our sincere desire to have another invitation this year.

Before getting into the main part of what I intend to say I also want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister of this House (Mr. Robarts) on succeeding the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost). I think perhaps there is a tendency among some people to feel that we on the other side do not appreciate the actions and the successes of men in government.

May I say, speaking personally, Mr. Speaker, that I absolutely sincerely congratulate the hon. Prime Minister on the excellent run that he made for the leadership. He had some rather tough competition but he has been successful. And while I do not wish him too well politically, on the other hand we wish him the best of health and we hope, Mr. Speaker, that his decisions will not lead Ontario astray.

I also want to congratulate the hon. Cabinet Ministers. Particularly would I like to congratulate those hon. Cabinet Ministers who had the foresightedness to support the hon. Prime Minister at the last convention. Now, as an example, I always thought, as did many hon. members of this House, that the former hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) was a very excellent Minister, and he conducted his office in a businesslike way. And really it was somewhat shocking for us to read in the newspapers that he had been given—demoted, I would say—to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I am just wondering if the fact that the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow), now sitting in the seat of the hon. Minister of Highways, was one of the men who nominated the hon. Prime Minister had any bearing on his appointment.

I think that any change for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) from where he was before, considering the attacks that he had not only from the Opposition but from the people of this province, was bound to be a promotion; and I am wondering if the fact that he supported the hon. Prime Minister had any bearing on his appointment.

An hon. member: No.

Another hon. member: It was just a turn of the card. That is why he is in the front row.

Mr. Whicher: That is probably the reason. I have often wondered why the hon. Minister of Welfare (Mr. Cecile) is in the front row.

An hon. member: The hon. member ought to move down.

Mr. Whicher: That is right, I am going to get moved down and touch the seat. I want to say to the hon. Prime Minister that we are going to move him somewhere else too, very shortly.

I want to congratulate all the hon. members who ran for the leadership. The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), I think did an excellent job. I want to congratulate them all, Mr. Speaker, for being such wealthy men, I had absolutely no idea that the hon. Minister of Health was in a financial position to be able to spend the thousands of dollars that we hear were spent in this leadership campaign.

I say to them—to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) for example, to my good friend the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan)—that, if they did not do anything else, they put a great deal of money into circulation. And from what I understand, the Liquor Control Board got a lot of it back in the form of taxes.

Surely the hon. gentlemen sitting in the government benches, and particularly those who ran for the leadership, are what could be called the upper crust of the Tory party. A fellow from Wiarton, my own home town, gave me the definition of the upper crust of the Tory party. He said, "Ross, this is what it is. The upper crust of the Tory party is a bunch of crumbs held together by their dough."

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that is self-evident. I would not say that they are old crumbs at all, but if they are crust they are certainly held together by their dough and they should be congratulated for the financial success that they have had.

I have a special word for the hon. Attorney-General because, in the leadership campaign, he came to my little town of Wiarton and said something with which I do not agree at all. He suggested in a speech there that Bruce would return to the Tory fold in the next election. It may very well be, that Bruce could turn to the Tory fold in the next general election of the province of Ontario; but I want to say this to the hon. Attorney-General—and I say it in a kindly, friendly way: If I were he I would look after St. Patrick. In fact, I am told by the odd Tory member of this House that there are a number who would be very happy if he did have a little trouble getting back into this House.

After congratulating everyone around you, Mr. Speaker—the upper crust of the Tory party—I want to tell you that I am speaking from a prepared text which is taken from the second and third verses of the Wintermeyer amendment to the Speech from the Throne, which reads as follows:

That the government's bad management of the province's finances resulted in the imposition of a sales tax, and that this tax, ill conceived and badly timed, did produce a maximum of inconvenience to the taxpayer and a maximum of irritation for the retailer, when a plan calling for an exemption of $25 would have been far more effective.

2. That as a result of a wasteful extravagance, unplanned spending and inefficiency of this government, notwithstanding the imposition of a sales tax, the public debt of this province has reached unparalleled heights and has thereby placed an onerous mortgage on the future of the citizens of this province.

Mr. Speaker, before I talk about the sales tax, and the Liberal plan calling for an exemption of $25, I want for a few moments to look at the abridged financial report of this government for the year ending March 31, 1961. I am using these figures instead of this year's estimates because they are factual, and we know them to be absolutely correct and not just an estimated guess.

I want to remind hon. members of this House of the terrific burden of taxation that we the citizens of Ontario are now enduring, even before we had a sales tax.

Let us look at some of the main sources of revenue that this government takes from the people. First—and this is something that the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) talked about last night, when he suggested that a great deal more money should come from the corporations of the province of Ontario—let us see how much money already comes from them. Last year, the province of Ontario—the hon. Provincial Treasurer—received $185,667,000. I would say that that was a considerable amount of money from the corporations of this province.

But let us go a little farther, Mr. Speaker, because, besides the taxes that the Ontario corporations paid to this government, they also paid $675 million to the federal government. I would say, Mr. Speaker, before we increase corporation taxes in this province, we had better think about it very, very hard. At the present time, corporations are paying 52 per cent in taxes and, in every single dollar that they make, 52 cents is either going to the provincial government or to the government in Ottawa. This does not include their municipal taxes at all. Fifty-two cents of their profit goes to these two governments.

When we talk about companies like International Nickel—as the hon. member did last night—we know that they are a giant corporation, we know full well that they make millions of dollars. Let us, as a supposition, suppose that they made $100 million last year. I remind the hon. members of this House that of that $100 million, $52 million is going to support the revenues of Ontario, and of our federal friends in Ottawa.

Surely this is something that we must remember. Surely, before we tax these people—giants though they may be, and as the hon. member says, perhaps they can well afford to pay it—surely before we go any farther we must remember that industry—certainly not International Nickel, because they take these things out of the ground—but industry as a whole, who are not engaged in mining and in the natural resources, that industry would certainly move out of the province of Ontario.

And as a matter of fact, I am going to tell hon. members later of some industry that has unfortunately already moved from this province and gone to other provinces because of the fact that we, this government, is pricing them out of the market by certain legislation that they have put through.

Therefore I say to the hon. members, to you, Mr. Speaker, and particularly to the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), even though I enjoyed his speech very much: how much corporation tax can they impose on these fellows? At the present time we have the highest rate of taxation of any state or province on the North American continent. How much higher? We have as high as any other place. Fifty-two per cent. How much higher are they going to put it?

Supposing we made it, say, 60 per cent? I suggest that the way this government is conducting the financial affairs of this province, that if they made it 60 per cent, first, they would lose a lot of revenue because industry would move out of the province. In the second place if they did make it 60 per cent, they would not have nearly enough money anyway, because in spite of the sales tax they are going in debt this year to the tune of $180 million.

I would say that they would have to double the corporation tax in this province in order to have a balanced budget. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want everyone to know that I am strictly against any increase in the corporation tax in this province, even though I fully realize that there are giants of industry in this province who have a great deal of money. But these corporations with that money have an obligation to their shareholders. I suggest to the hon. members of this House that if they look at the financial pages of the Toronto newspapers, or any newspaper, they will see that many of the shareholders today are not getting as much in common stocks of those companies as they can in government bonds.

These companies owe an obligation to the shareholders who have invested money in them and they must be paid a just and legitimate interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, $185 million is the amount the hon. Provincial Treasurer got from the corporation tax. From the gasoline tax last year—and we are not up to the other provinces as far as taxes are concerned, 13 cents per gallon is the tax—the hon. Provincial Treasurer collected $157,655,000. In our hospital tax, $4 million; land transfer tax, $3.5 million; logging tax, $1.8 million; mines profits tax, $17 million; motor vehicle fuel tax, diesel oil, $6.8 million; race tracks, $507,000; succession duties, $37.6 million; et cetera, et cetera.

Now, besides this, one of the main sources of revenue that the hon. Provincial Treasurer has taken from the people of this province—remembering that with these huge sources of revenue we are still going in the hole, this happened long before a sales tax came in—one of the main sources of revenue is the income tax that the people of this province pay. Last year this government collected from the people of this province $113,791,000.

Hon. members may say when they look at the six million figure—the number of people there are in this province—that perhaps that is not much. But when I remind the hon. members that Ontario residents, besides that amount of money, paid $800 million in income taxes to our federal friends in Ottawa, then I say that surely there is a point where instead of taxes continually going up, that the governments, not only of this province but governments all over the democratic world and particularly in Canada, must put a little economy and efficiency into their operations and bring these taxes down a bit instead of letting them go sky high.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): What services would the hon. member like to throw out?

Mr. Whicher: One thing I would do would be to cut out a few hon. Ministers over there.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Name them quickly.

Mr. Whicher: I could not do it all in one breath.

One of the places where a great deal of revenue comes into this province is through the liquor control board. Last year $80.6 million. Now, I just want to remind the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, of this fact. I had the honour to come into this House in 1956, and at that time, as I remember, the liquor revenue to the treasury of this province was in the neighbourhood of $39 million—$39 million to $40 million.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): What was the population?

Mr. Whicher: Never mind what the population was. I am simply telling the hon. members this, that the receipts this government is taking from the province of Ontario are mounting and mounting and mounting, and where the end will be I honestly do not know. Eighty million dollars last year. In licences and permits, $68,270,000.

Now, is any hon. member of the government going to suggest that we are going to increase the licences on the automobiles or the permits for people who drive cars? Because $61,838,000 of the licences and permits came from motor vehicle licences.

There are other places, small ones, departments where the government takes money from the people of this province. But I have just given these figures, Mr. Speaker, to show that we were really being taxed, and taxed plenty, even before the sales tax came into operation.

Besides these taxes let us remember this: the people of the province of Ontario paid $750 million in sales tax to our federal friends in Ottawa. Besides the sales tax that the hon. Provincial Treasurer is now going to take, amounting to $150 million, our Ottawa friends last year took $750 million in sales tax from the people of this province.

Let me remind the hon. members of this: the gross national product in 1960 for the Dominion of Canada was $33,807,000,000. Of that figure—the gross national product which is the money used for all the goods and services, every dollar across Canada—30 cents out of every dollar went in the form of taxes.

Just imagine! Of every dollar that was taken in for the price of goods and services, 30 cents goes for the government in Ontario, the government in Ottawa and the governments in municipalities. I think that this is an amazing thing, Mr. Speaker, and if the people of the province knew it they would be sadly disturbed.

Under these circumstances, inasmuch, as I say, that the corporation tax has reached a height, it certainly is as high as any other jurisdiction in Canada, inasmuch, as I feel, that income taxes are reasonably high—I suppose this government could implement a provincial income tax, I know perfectly well they are going to have to do it, but I think the taxes are certainly high enough in this line—my question then to you, Mr. Speaker, is this:

I imagine myself in the hon. Provincial Treasurer's seat and I say: "Where on earth am I going to get the money?" It was under these conditions—because he had taxed the people as high as he could in corporation and income tax fields, and in the licensing and permits, and in the liquor board—they had to go to sales tax. He either had to go to a sales tax, along with his borrowing which he did, namely, $180 million for this year, or he had to bring a little economy and efficiency into the government of the province of Ontario. I suggest that instead of bringing economy and efficiency, and telling our people that we have only so much money to spend and you are allowed so much out of the pot, instead of bringing that economy, instead of raising these other taxes, instead of borrowing more than $180 million, he instituted a sales tax.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that by the lackadaisical effort in cutting costs this government has encouraged a lack of real work in all government departments. I say, Mr. Speaker, that governments—and they are going to have to do it sooner or later—that democratic governments sooner or later are going to have to run as a business is run. They are going to have to balance their budget, they are going to have to cut out the waste and extravagance that is in every department of this government in the province of Ontario. They are going to have to balance their budget.

Economy must come, Mr. Speaker, from the hon. members who are sitting over there; they are the government.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): The hon. members of the Opposition always want us to spend.

Mr. Whicher: Just a moment, I am not just talking about spending money, I am talking about spending it in a sensible way. Does the hon. Minister want me to tell him one instance where there is a lack of economy in the province of Ontario? I will tell him right now. I think this is an astonishing revelation.

In the O.A.C. at Guelph there are as many employees as there are students. There are as many employees in the Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph as there are students. Now, I suggest to the House that is an astonishing fact. I suggest to hon. members that an efficiency expert should go through places like this, and all departments of government, with a fine tooth comb. These things are costing too much money. The government is not leading the way in efficiency and economy by doing things such as that.

It is as a result of lack of leadership in this government and the government in Ottawa, that we as a province and we as a country financially are in—I should not say a tottering state, but certainly not a good financial state.

Let me read to you, Mr. Speaker, an editorial that was in the Toronto Daily Star only two or three days ago entitled:

LOSING OUR LIFE BLOOD

Canada has started to lose the most important part of all its resources. People. Grown men and women with skills and education which Canada needs. That is the price we are paying for our mass unemployment, for our economic stagnation. Immigrants and native born see better chances of employment in other countries. They see more prosperity, greater confidence, a faster tempo of growth in other countries, so they are leaving and their places are not being filled by new arrivals.

The Toronto Daily Star's Ottawa bureau chief, Val Sears, told the story in yesterday's Star:

Bank of Canada figures show that in the first half of 1961 about 14,000 more people left this country than entered it. Many of those who left were native-born Canadians going to the United States and Britain; many were postwar immigrants returning to Britain and western Europe.

The outflow was especially pronounced in January, February and March, when unemployment reached 719,000—11 per cent of the Canadian labour force. But it was not only unemployment that caused these people to leave, opportunity was another factor. There are more opportunities in expanding economies like those of the United States, Britain and West Germany than there are in an economy like Canada's which is not only stagnant but actually shrinking.

Here again figures tell the story:

Look at the gross national product. The total of all goods and services produced by all Canadians expressed in constant 1957 dollars, it is running below last year's level. In the first half of 1960, the gross national product ran at the rate of $33.28 billion—$33 billion, $28 million annually. In all of 1960, it ran at the rate of $33 billion 807 million; in the first half of 1961, it ran at the rate of $33 billion $620 million annually, less than it was last year.

This decline in the gross national product means fewer opportunities, lower living standards and this, in turn, leads our people to leave. This is a great tragedy because Canada needs people. What makes the exodus more tragic is that it is totally unnecessary. There is no need for mass unemployment to drive German immigrants back to Germany; there is no need for economic stagnation that drives native-born Canadians to the United States. Canada could prosper if only the Diefenbaker government——would do what leading Canadian businessmen and economists are suggesting. If only it would engage in economic planning designed to restore full employment and healthy national growth, Canada would then keep its people and attract many more.

And I might add in here—the Robarts government too:

But the government dillies and dallies, it mumbles and grumbles, it equivocates and procrastinates so the economy drifts and dwindles, so the unemployed multiply, so we lose our life blood and—the editorial ends:

—this is leadership.

Mr. Cowling: It is a sad, sad story.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you when we use the word leadership, as far as this government is concerned and also the one in Ottawa, we have to use it along with another two words instead of leadership, we must say lack of leadership!

Of all the countries in the world, Mr. Speaker, look at Germany. They are advertising for an extra 500,000 workers because they have so much work in Germany that they have not got enough people to do the job. In England today everyone, speaking generally, is at work. As a matter of fact, they have less unemployment there than they have had in years. In France, I understand that the percentage of unemployed is at a strict minimum.

Yet here, in Canada, in a province of which hon. gentlemen opposite are the leaders, we have an economic stagnation that goes right from the top to the bottom.

Mr. Speaker, to get around to the sales tax proposition: because this government has over a period of years got into a great deal of debt—$1.092 billion, according to the hon. Treasurer's last statement—and because he knew that he was going to be going further into debt by $180 million this year, he and his government decided that there must be a sales tax. May I say, and I do not want to take too long with this point, Mr. Speaker, that it is a terrific nuisance to the small businessmen in the province of Ontario.

I cannot for the life of me understand why a fresh government, under fresh leadership, would not take a fresh look and do away with some of these nuisances that are fantastic to the small fellow in some of the small towns and cities in this province of Ontario.

For example, here we have—it was quoted I think by my hon. leader and by other people—here we have the fact that when a man goes in to buy six bottles of pop there is a one cent tax on it. Then he may go up the street and buy a Ford or Chevrolet car and pay $3,000 and $90 of that sales tax on the $3,000 goes into the Treasury fund. But the fellow who sells soft drinks in the province of Ontario, of which there are many thousands, he must sell 90,000—what is it?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Nine thousand!

Mr. Whicher: Nine thousand cartons of pop with 9,000 different entries in order to get the same amount of money for this government that the automotive dealer can give them in one transaction.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Speaker, on a point of information I want to draw to your attention that the New Party is not now represented in the House—they are not very interested in what the hon. member has to say.

Mr. Whicher: I am very pleased that the hon. member has brought that to my attention, because I was going to bring that fact to the attention of the House. I must say that I regard it something of a compliment, but I do not know why the whole five of them would have to leave at once.

An hon. member: The party of the whole!

Mr. Whicher: I can only say that after the next election there probably will not be anybody there anyway. Will hon. members not give me a clap for that?

I want to get back to the soft drinks situation in the province of Ontario; I do not want to get back to that hard stuff over there.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): I will buy the hon. member soft drinks for Christmas.

Mr. Whicher: I think that the tax law in this province, where a man has to have 9,000 entries in order to get the same amount of money that can be secured on one entry, shows something wrong with that way of doing business.

I say to hon. members, for example, when a man goes in and buys a package of cigarettes that we sell in our own business, on the 45 cent package of cigarettes there is a one cent tax. If he buys two packages of cigarettes there is a three cent tax. Now I say, what kind of justice—I know it is only a matter of a penny—but how can one give excuses to the people of Ontario when they are buying just two packages of cigarettes it is three cents; and when they buy two separate ones, it is only two cents? Surely these are things that even this government could sit down behind the scenes and arrange to eradicate.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is one thing that we are certainly going to do when we take over very shortly.

Let me say this to hon. members. When a man goes in to buy a chocolate bar, a ten cent chocolate bar, no tax whatsoever; he buys two chocolate bars, why we have a tax. The small businessmen of Ontario are so tied up with the way this thing runs that they just do not know what to do.

One place where I did agree with the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) last night was when he mentioned the fact that he felt this government had approached the nth degree of nerve when they made the Canadian Legions in the province of Ontario pay a sales tax on their poppies which are: first, a poppy to honour the dead of the two World Wars; and second, to go into the poppy funds which are used to help the veterans in the province of Ontario.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I think that is going a way too far, and I might say that the members—at any rate the members who were interested—the members of the Canadian Legion in the province of Ontario certainly did not appreciate it, and I was one of those members. I do not know how many in the House are members; how they can sit there and allow their government to do things such as that is absolutely beyond me.

An hon. member: Shame!

Mr. Whicher: I want to show you, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Allan: How much tax was paid?

Mr. Whicher: That is not the point. The point is the principle of the thing, and the lack of principle that the government had in making them pay it.

Let me show you another one, Mr. Speaker. I want to quote from an editorial of one of our local weekly papers in Bruce county. It reads as follows:

Representatives of the provincial sales tax department have been visiting fall fairs in the area to collect taxes on sales made through midway concessions and refreshment booths. In many cases the latter are operated by the fair board or some local organization.

Sales in most instances are for food and drink and are the minimum of $1.50 and 17 cents respectively.

The Paisley Advocate reports—and this is absolutely true—that a sales tax official drove from Owen Sound to Paisley to collect the tax. For driving some 70 miles and spending the afternoon, he collected 52 cents for the government. Business was not so good in the case of the Port Elgin fair where the tax collected was 42 cents. It would be interesting to have the sales tax office indicate how much profit accrued to it from these operations.

Besides this, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that the small businessman—particularly the small one—is very perturbed about this tax and the way the government is operating it. For example, there are many of us who cannot afford to spend $2,500 or $3,000 for special cash registers, to look after it the way hon. Provincial Treasurer wants it done. We have to keep scribblers, and every night at six o'clock or whenever the store closes, we have to go in to the back room and—for the benefit of these people in the province who are spending a billion dollars a year—we have to keep a record so that the government can have a few paltry cents at the end of each month. We have to make up forms. In the case of a small business which, perhaps, does not have a secretary, it is a great deal of work. Mr. Speaker, we have to pay for our own stamps. Let me give you an instance in my own case. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) last night quoted an instance where a man only made a dollar or something like that for a number of hours' work in making out his form. The only thing that we are taxed for in our business in Warrington and Southampton is for soft drinks and cigarettes. For the last two months I have had to make up forms—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Would the hon. member like to have it on the other things?

Mr. Whicher: I have had to make up forms. I made 44 cents and I had $50 worth of nuisance in making up this form.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. member did not have to have this nuisance.

Mr. Whicher: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to come to a most important part, because all is not lost to the people of the province of Ontario. What they can do, Mr. Speaker, is say: "Let's get rid of all this nonsense and kick you fellows out and put in a government that will do something about it." Mr. Speaker, before we could say to them "kick these fellows out," we had to bring forth a plan and that plan—

Hon. Mr. Allan: What is the plan?

Mr. Whicher: I am going to give it right now, and I hope that the hon. Provincial Treasurer digests it because it will be some of the best reasoning that he has had for a long time.

This plan has a special name. This is the Wintermeyer plan. It is the Wintermeyer plan for the exemption of sales tax on all items costing less than $25. Before I finish, I am going to explain to you that the government is talking nonsense when it says it is going to be able to collect only a few million dollars because of our exemptions. It is nonsense. I am going to prove that to you in black and white figures, and I suggest to the hon. Provincial Treasurer that, if his officials do not agree with my figures, he had better send them back to school and teach them how to add, because my figures are correct.

This is the Wintermeyer plan. John Wintermeyer announced today that a Liberal government will exempt from sales tax all items costing less than $25. No tax on toothpaste, no tax on Kleenex, or all the things that we have in grocery stores today. Almost everything the housewife buys on a week-to-week basis will be exempt. About 75 per cent of Ontario's retailers—and this is the important part—those selling food, groceries, hats, shirts, shoes, children's clothing, drugs, hardware, books and sundries will be free of the burden of collecting taxes. The exemption would practically eliminate the nuisance and irritation of the present tax system for taxpayers and retailers. I have this underlined here and I want hon. members to underline it in their minds. The present tax has been ill-conceived, ill-timed and ill-treated. It has not been imposed to provide additional services, it has not been imposed to improve education, health or social services. It has been imposed by the government to pay old debts and to pay the cost of Conservative bad management of Ontario's affairs. I should say "partly pay old debts".

Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative government in Toronto was unable to collect on Mr. Diefenbaker's promise of a better tax deal, they rushed into imposing a retail sales tax that was not properly thought out and which was not introduced in a businesslike way. Had the government proceeded in a businesslike way, with some care and concern for taxpayers and retail merchants, they could have done a much better job with a lot less irritation.

The Liberal party makes its proposal for a $25 exemption after detailed and expert study of the problem, and with the desire to produce the least possible inconvenience for all. The present tax is expected to yield $150 million per year. The tax with the Liberal party's $25 exemption—and I will prove this later, Mr. Speaker—would raise about $115 million and do away with many nuisances.

The advantages of the Liberal exemption are many. It would virtually remove the tax from necessities and provide almost total exemption for the pensioners. It would remove the burden of collecting tax from approximately 75 per cent of Ontario's retail merchants and free them from the problems of extra bookkeeping, training staff, filling in government reports and submitting to government audits. The Liberal exemption would remove the great mass of interpretive problems and the present regulations concerning children's clothing, drugs, confections, office supplies, books, repair parts for farm machinery and supplies.

Nearly $100 million, and this is what I want to emphasize to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, nearly $100 million in sales tax revenue will be raised from construction materials, machinery and equipment, new and used cars, liquor, furniture and appliances. These are big dollar items and would not be exempt under the Liberal party's $25 exemption.

There will be no change in the tax on restaurant meals over $1.50, telephone charges, cigarettes. Keeping track of pennies on millions of small sales reduces by a maximum the amount of irritation to customers and merchants; and the cost of collection on a proportionately small revenue.

We as a party think this is a sound constructive way to approach sales tax in Ontario. The Liberal party intends to implement this proposal when it forms the next government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want at this time to go any further as far as breaking down the amount to show and prove that under our plan we can collect $115 million. I will do that. My hope is this, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Provincial Treasurer will be in his seat tomorrow when I tell him, and through him all the people of this province, how we can collect this money, do away with all these nuisances and make the people a little bit happier.

Mr. Whicher moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the orders as they appear on the order paper. There are a few bills to be taken through in committee stage, and we can resume this debate. I had intended to call—strangely enough before the last speaker's contribution to the Throne debate—but I intended to call order No. 21, the second reading of Bill No. 47, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-61.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1961

The House met at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

ONTARIO CODE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights and provide for its administration.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to consolidate our human rights legislation and to simplify its administration.

With us in Ontario it has always been a basic principle that everyone should have an equal opportunity to direct his life toward what he thinks will be the most rewarding objectives. The legislation now before us is, I believe, a major step forward in assuring everyone in this province an equal opportunity toward this end.

This bill incorporates into the Ontario Code of Human Rights various Acts which the Legislature has approved in the past to emphasize our public policy in this province that every person is free and equal in dignity and rights without regard to race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

We do not believe that it is right for anybody to be refused employment, housing accommodation or public services and facilities merely because of his particular race, colour or creed. Nor do we believe that women who are doing the same work as men in the same establishment should be paid less because they are women.

These principles have been established publicly since 1944 when the Legislature approved The Racial Discrimination Act. Seven years later, in 1951, we approved The Fair Employment Practices Act and The Female Employees' Fair Remuneration Act. In 1954 we adopted The Fair Accommodation Practices Act and in 1958 we established the Ontario Anti-Discrimination Commission. Last spring, this body was renamed the Ontario Human Rights Commission. Under the Act now before the Legislature the commission will carry on.

By placing before the Legislature today this Act to establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights, the government is demonstrating that it is aware of continually changing conditions and changing attitudes and is quick to take every step possible to see that discrimination is eliminated from the province of Ontario.

In all modesty, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that Ontario has a human rights code which is equal to the best of any similar legislation on this continent.

Indeed, Ontario has been the trail-blazer in Canada of this type of legislation. As time goes on, and as new needs become apparent, our Ontario Human Rights Code will continue to keep pace with the requirements of the people of our province.

I do not need to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the mere existence of legislation is far from being the total answer to the problem. This is particularly true with discrimination.

Prejudice, the attitude of mind which gives rise to acts of discrimination, is rooted very deeply in human personality. It is based on lack of sensitivity, or misunderstanding or ignorance, or stubbornness. At worst, it is the failure to recognize a fellow human being as a human being.

Prejudice cannot be dug out and eliminated by the passage of a statute, but its outward manifestations can be curbed. Artificial barriers denying equality of opportunity to our fellow human beings can be breached and torn down.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I leave this thought with you: we all agree that respect for the dignity and the rights of every human being is the foundation stone of peace and justice in this country and this world. The promotion of the kind of society where men and women of all races and creeds can come together in co-operation and goodwill is the basic objective of Ontario's Code of Human Rights.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, are there any new principles in this bill in addition to the principles contained in the various statutes which I understand are being consolidated by the bill?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I would say there are no new principles at this time, Mr. Speaker. It is a consolidation of the statutes now on our books.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Has there been anything taken away from the principles already in the other bill?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Nothing that I know of.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the indulgence of the House for a moment at this time in the reading of a short letter. In the way I understand the English language, this letter would be called non-political.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER:

With reference to the typing of the second line on page 111 of the mimeographed copy of the report of the Attorney-General's committee on the enforcement of the law relating to gambling of November 6, 1961, signed by Professor D. Morton and Mr. Rolf Eng, the words appear "a political" when, in fact, I am informed it was the intention of the authors that it be "apolitical."

"Apolitical," according to Webster's Third New International Dictionary, means:

"Having an aversion for or no interest or involvement in political affairs—without political significance."

It will be apparent from a reading of the whole preceding paragraph on the bottom of page 110 along with the paragraph on page 111 that the meaning is "apolitical" and not "a political."

Yours very sincerely,

And it is signed by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts).

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to inform hon. members of certain changes which are being made in the administration and organization of The Department of Agriculture. These changes are effective immediately.

I am sure that I am expressing the feelings of all farmers in this province, and of the members of this House, when I say that it was with a great deal of regret we learned that because of ill health it was necessary on December 1 for Dr. C. D. Graham to retire as deputy Minister of Agriculture. I am sure as well that the hon. members would agree with me that it is most fitting at this time, as Minister of Agriculture, I publicly express these regrets so that they may become a permanent record of this province.

Dr. Graham, or Cliff, as he has been so well known by his multitude of friends across this province, has made a contribution to agriculture over the years which cannot in any way be adequately recognized by mere words. Cliff Graham throughout his life of service to agriculture in this province, from the beginning as an assistant agricultural representative in my own home county of Middlesex, to the time he accepted the major responsibility as senior administrator, has led an unselfish and dedicated life to the welfare of the farmers of Ontario.

This dedicated service, stretching over a period of 33 years, has been one of complete unselfishness, a record of unbiased administration and a lifetime of responsibility acceptance which at all times resulted in a ready willingness of personal self-sacrifice and far too often a neglect of personal pleasures and relaxation. While, as I have stated, it is impossible to express the gratitude of the farmers of this province to Dr. Graham in mere words, the mark which he has left in this province through his work with junior farmers, farm organizations and government administration will live on as a lasting edifice to his unselfish dedication of purpose. While Dr. Graham has retired, I am still hopeful that we will still have the advantage of his wisdom and experience in agricultural matters from time to time.

I am therefore sure that the hon. members assembled here today will join with me in unanimously expressing a sincere and heartfelt thank-you to an outstanding civil servant and citizen of this province who at all times throughout his life, has made contributions far beyond what might be normally expected in his day to day responsibilities and duties.

Every department of government in order to be truly effective must have an administrative staff and organization which is sound and which is adequately equipped in every way to support the Minister and to carry out the policies as laid down. As a practising farmer, I feel that at this time as well I can be excused if I momentarily step out of my role as the Minister of Agriculture and express a personal opinion, which I believe is shared by the vast majority of farmers in this province with reference to the personnel of The Ontario Department of Agriculture. Since my younger days as a junior farmer, when I first came in contact with The Ontario Department of Agriculture through the agricultural representative service and subsequently with other branches of the departmental administration, I have never ceased to be impressed by the very high calibre of men who have come forward and willingly served this important industry of our province.

In one way, therefore, sir, when the Minister of Agriculture must consider new appointments, it is relatively easy to find men who have the capabilities for accepting senior administrative responsibilities. On the other hand, because of the high calibre of so many of our departmental personnel, it is also most difficult to make a choice.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I think at this time it would also be quite proper for me to pay a tribute to my predecessor now hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow), not only for the realistic leadership which he displayed while he was Minister of Agriculture of the province, but as well for the changes inaugurated within the departmental administration almost two years ago which today form the foundation for a further streamlining of the departmental administration to meet the changing conditions and the new complexities of our agricultural economy.

On January 7, 1960, the then Minister (Mr. Goodfellow) stated that the functions of The Department of Agriculture were being separated into a division of marketing and a division of production which would provide for a more efficient co-ordinated programme. He also stated, and I quote:

With our greatly increased population and thereby more consumers, and with fewer farmers on the land, it is increasingly important that every possible step be taken to safeguard our basic industry. The reorganization has been planned to meet the demands of the farm population who are faced with many difficulties, both in the field of marketing and production.

Fantastic strides have been made by our Ontario farmers in improving production techniques. While the efforts on the production side must be pushed on with no relaxation, this government over the past few years has realized that the farmer is operating in an organized society.

It has recognized, as well, that the average farmer is very involved and busy in the business of producing various commodities and quite often finds himself in a very weak bargaining position as an individual in the marketing and selling of his crops. Far reaching marketing machinery has, therefore, been provided under our Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act and our Ontario Milk Industry Act, whereby farmers if they so wished could bargain and market collectively.

There is no doubt that collective marketing has been accepted by the vast majority of the farmers of this province. This is borne out by the fact that there are presently 32 different agricultural commodities being marketed collectively under the two statutes already mentioned. There are at least three other commodities for which a marketing plan is being developed at the moment—two of which will likely be submitted to a vote of the producers in the near future.

The necessity of collective action by farmers and strong farm marketing organization is, therefore, placing a changing complexion on the responsibilities of The Ontario Department of Agriculture. We have, therefore, moved with the times in the acceptance of our departmental responsibilities, and while maintaining the strongest possible efforts in basic production and allied matters through research and our extension service, at the same time marketing machinery has been provided and has been accepted and utilized by the farmers of this province. While we recognize that as a province there are certain limiting factors exerted on the real effectiveness of our marketing machinery because of slightly different organization or lack of organization in producer marketing in other provinces; by the same token, it is our determination and a most necessary aim to push on provincially with the hope that eventually we will see truly effective producer marketing co-ordinated on an inter-provincial basis. Real steps have already been taken by this government on these matters.

Discussions have been held with other provinces and I would like to personally commend the initiative of the former hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) a little over a year ago for initiating discussions with that very important sister agricultural province, Quebec. It is to his credit and to the credit of The Quebec Department of Agriculture that a very close liaison and working relationship has been created.

A few months ago, the former hon. Minister recognized as well, that an additional step towards the strengthening of agricultural marketing in this province was necessary, and he formed the markets development branch. It is the aim and purpose of this branch to co-operate with farmers, with marketing boards and the agricultural industry generally, to do everything possible to increase the sales of Ontario farm products both at home and overseas.

We have gone a long way in mastering the techniques of production. While, as mentioned before, improvements must continue in this phase of agricultural activity, we must now continue to press on and in our policies and activities and in the over-all organization of the department give increasing emphasis to ways and means of strengthening the farmers' bargaining position in the market place.

The farmer today is being faced with ever-increasing buyer strength. This can only be met by an increased selling strength and collective action on the part of the farmer. It is my dedicated purpose and that of The Ontario Department of Agriculture to do everything possible to provide the machinery and any other help we can, to give the farmers of this province a stronger voice when they meet with buyers, and through such strength receive the increased financial returns which every farmer is entitled to.

The re-organization of The Ontario Department of Agriculture which is effective today and which I referred to at the beginning of my remarks, has been brought about to place the greatest possible emphasis on marketing, to maintain, improve and carry on our efforts in the fields of production and extension and, at the same time, provide for a balanced internal administration of the department which will result in the most efficient use of time, money and personnel.

I have instructed the new Deputy Minister of Agriculture, who has been appointed today, that he must maintain the utmost responsibility for the administration of marketing policies and the improvement of marketing machinery and techniques for the farmers. With this idea in mind, the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board and the Milk Industry Board have been placed at the top of the administrative chain, with the respective chairmen maintaining direct liaison with the deputy minister.

At this time, I should pay a special tribute to Mr. George McCague, chairman of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board. Mr. McCague has been a successful farmer and a leader in farm organizations. He has given unselfish and untiring leadership in the administration of his responsibilities as chairman, and without a doubt is appreciated and respected by the farmers across this province not only because of his abilities as a leader and as an administrator, but because of his proven ability as a practical farmer as well.

Under the deputy minister, the department, effective today, is organized into four main divisions; the production and extension division, the marketing division, the Agricultural Research Institute, and a division of administration. The production and extension division and the marketing division were organized by the former hon. Minister in January, 1960.

This House will be asked to approve a bill providing for an Agricultural Research Institute. It will be the responsibility of the Agricultural Research Institute to co-ordinate the expenditures of research monies provided by this government and to ensure that the research programmes which are carried on meet the requirements of the various sections of agriculture and that personnel and facilities are used to the best advantage.

The administration division has been organized to relieve the deputy minister of the many sundry but extremely important details of administration and at the same time streamline and co-ordinate certain of the administrative procedures and practices, to obtain the utmost efficiency.

I am very pleased to announce to this House that today, Mr. Everett M. Biggs, former assistant deputy minister in charge of marketing, has been appointed as Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Mr. Biggs is well known to the agricultural industry of this province. He was a former assistant agricultural representative in Middlesex county and later agricultural representative in the county of Peel. He served as dairy commissioner from 1951 until January 7, 1960, when he was appointed as assistant deputy minister in charge of marketing.

He is a young man. He was born on a mixed farm in Renfrew county and is a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College. In addition to this, he took post-graduate work in the University of London, England, in agricultural marketing which was followed by a comprehensive study of agricultural production and marketing in continental Europe. He is well acquainted with the broad aspects of agriculture in Ontario and in Canada, and because of his activities in the dairy and marketing field has gained broad contacts and knowledge over the year of international production and marketing picture.

Mr. T. R. Hilliard, formerly assistant deputy minister in charge of production, will continue as assistant deputy minister with the responsibilities of the supervision and co-ordination of the administration division. Mr. Hilliard has been with the service of The Ontario Department of Agriculture since 1940. He has a broad knowledge of Ontario agriculture through his early work with the extension service. He made an outstanding contribution as director of extension for this province, and his ability as an administrator has moved him up rapidly in the ranks of the service. Under the capable guidance of Mr. Hilliard we feel sure that the details of administration will be handled in the best possible manner.

Mr. W. P. Watson, former livestock commissioner, has been appointed as chief of the production and extension division. Mr. Watson has long been associated with the livestock industry of this province. He has been concerned with all of the basic livestock policies which have brought the livestock industry of this province to the forefront of the world. Not only is he recognized and highly respected by the livestock men of Ontario but across Canada as well. Bill Watson's reputation has passed beyond the Canadian boundary and he has received many honours and is currently an active member and giving leadership in several livestock activities in the United States. This is not only a tribute to him personally, and to his ability, but is an honour to the livestock industry of this province.

A decision has not as yet been reached regarding the appointment of chief of the marketing division. This is a most important appointment which entails great responsibility, and every care is being taken in his selection.

As has been previously announced, Dr. D. N. Huntley, formerly head of the field husbandry department, Ontario Agricultural College, has been appointed director of the Agricultural Research Institute. Dr. Huntley has had many years as a successful teacher, research worker and administrator. While being an academic person on one hand, by the same token he is a most practical person and has a very thorough knowledge of the research requirements of the agricultural industry in Ontario and there is no doubt that he will be in a position to provide the necessary co-ordination and leadership, in the development and carrying out of research projects and policies.

Mr. R. H. Graham, formerly associate livestock commissioner, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Watson as commissioner. Mr. Graham has had long years of service with the livestock industry in this province. He is well known. He has the knowledge and understanding which will allow him to continue along the very realistic and successful course which has been so ably laid down by the former livestock commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members, I felt that such a major adjustment in the administration of The Department of Agriculture should be announced on the floor of this House rather than through the medium of a formal press release.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you, sir, that there has been a gross abuse of the rules of this House in the foregoing statement by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). And I want to say that as I understand the rules—in this case Lewis is silent in the written rules and there is nothing in Lewis' book about this—but in Sir Erskine May, as I understand the rule, it is that a Minister may rise in his place before the orders of the day and may, with the indulgence of the House, make a brief statement on government policy.

Now may I recall to you, sir, as the defender of the rights of the Opposition for which we always protest, the other day when the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) stopped to explain his motion, when he moved to adjourn the House, you refused him that right. I suggested to you at that time that, with the indulgence of the House, he might make a few brief explanatory remarks and by means of the majority on that side and by your refusal, sir, he was refused that permission. And now, today, an hon. Minister of the Crown, in anticipation of the speech of the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), who is going to speak on agriculture, usurped the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member (Mr. Sopha) has usurped the time of the House and I presume that this is his point of order. It has always been understood in this House that hon. Ministers are expected to make statements concerning their departments before the orders of the day. If they did not make these statements, they would probably be asked questions along those lines in any event.

Mr. Sopha: Will you hear my point of order, sir? My point of order, sir, is that he was in breach of the rules of the House, that he inflicted himself upon us and made a gross political speech.

Mr. Speaker: I have presumed to have heard now the point of order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, now that this matter is before us, I want to rise and support the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). We have submitted questions before the orders of the day and you have seen fit to edit everything out of them except the simple question, and various other procedures along this line. I submit to you that what happened this afternoon was that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) rose and did not just announce changes in his department—which is his right—but he usurped this position before the orders of the day to deliver a political speech on the eve of by-election campaigns as we come to the end of the session. Now, Mr. Speaker, I know your position is a difficult one—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Could the hon. member think of a better time to give it?

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) has, in effect, just endorsed what I have said, namely, that this was a political speech. So now I feel even more emboldened to make my point.

Mr. Speaker, I know your position is a very difficult one, but if the hon. Ministers are going to get up and make political speeches and you see fit not to interrupt, I am going to find it even more difficult the next time when I want to explain questions before the orders of the day, to submit to your editing.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the House that the Speaker is willing to take his chances with what comes before the House with the hon. Ministers along the lines suggested by the hon. members who have just spoken.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I now rise on a question of privilege in a different mood and tone altogether.

When I came in the House this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I found myself the subject of acclaim. Hon. members all understand that this startled me because it happens very rarely.

I turned and walked to my seat and I was even more surprised when I saw this wreath and black ribbon. My first reaction was to say, along with Mark Twain, that "the announcement of my death is premature." Then

I realized that undoubtedly one of my colleagues in the House here was seeking to remind me of a by-election in Weyburn.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that the by-election in Weyburn was a profoundly significant event in Canadian history. What happened, Mr. Speaker, in Weyburn is that there was a coalition of Liberals and Conservatives and Social Credit and, it is true, I concede it, I acknowledge it, the New Democratic Party was 500 votes behind—500 or 600 votes behind.

Mr. Speaker, we acknowledge this margin and we are going to work to close the gap. But this wreath here, Mr. Speaker, is a wreath for the death of the Tory party in Saskatchewan. It was not in the fight at all. I hope the editorial writers in the Toronto Globe and Mail who have brownbeaten us, Liberals and CCF, for not running in by-elections in this province, will now browbeat the Tories out in Saskatchewan.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is not a strange event. A few years ago the Liberals "died" and supported the Tories to defeat that beloved Bill Grummett, one of the pioneers of the north, up in Timmins. In other words, Mr. Speaker, what has happened is a fulfillment of the prediction of the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) of this province, that there is emerging in this country a coalition of Liberals and Conservatives against the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker: I am not presuming to cut the hon. member off in his remarks, but I am just taking a point at this time in presuming that the hon. member still has the indulgence of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am finished. Just this very final comment: the announcement of our political death is premature, but there is another one that is not so premature. I would ask the page boy to deliver this to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). The hon. Attorney-General has acted with his usual dignity on the floor of the House.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Real temper, real temper!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have two questions that I would like to ask. The first one is of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts): Is it the intention of the government to proceed with redistribution in the current session, and if so, will the hon. Prime Minister indicate whether redistribution will this time be removed from politics and placed with an independent body?

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. Prime Minister answers that, may I draw to the attention of the House that I gave a notice of motion placing this matter on the order paper yesterday?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I do not know what the difficulty is across the House but I am quite prepared to answer the two questions. The answer to the first question is "Yes" and the answer to the second question is that the methods to be followed to effect redistribution are presently under consideration and will be announced later in the session.

Mr. Bryden: Did the hon. Prime Minister consult John about it?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question is addressed to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow). A news story in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail quotes Murray Jones, Metro director of planning, as stating that the decision of the Metro Council regarding the Spadina Expressway may be nullified by the province. Will the hon. Minister inform the House whether this is true or likely?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for York South, I hope that my remarks cannot possibly be interpreted as political. But I have read that in the press, that the Metropolitan Council apparently has decided to build or to recommend the building of a portion of the Spadina Expressway from Highway 401 to, I think, Lawrence Avenue.

It is questionable whether The Department of Highways would be justified in making provision for access to 401 at this point. But I am assured by the chief planning engineer of The Department of Highways that should Metropolitan Council, with their usual good judgment, decide to extend the Spadina Expressway at some future date, provision will be made on 401 for an intersection to be created at that time.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to say just a few words about the wreath that was placed on the desk of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). I might say that wreaths are given in a very kindly, sympathetic way, and that was the reason that this was presented to him. But I must say that generally they are given when people are dead, and certainly he is not dead. On the other hand it was given because his party died yesterday in Saskatchewan.

I just want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it was not the death of the New Democratic Party across Canada. The main thing was that it was the death of a C.C.F. seat that was held by Tommy Douglas. I did want to say one thing more, Mr. Speaker, that now we know why Mr. Douglas tried to go to Ottawa, because he knew he could not win again in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDonald: The Liberal Party could not have won without the Tories.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question to direct to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass). I had already submitted questions 48 hours ago to the chief commissioner of The Liquor Control Board. He must be getting the answers by semaphore.

This is the question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs: Many months ago the city of North Bay submitted to The Department of Municipal Affairs for approval, a pension plan for its civic employees. Would the hon. Minister inform this House when they and other municipalities similarly concerned may expect a decision?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that, I could say "in due course." I would like to amplify that for the information, not only of the hon. member, but of certain other hon. members who have municipalities in somewhat similar circumstances.

First of all the regulations under which pension plans for municipal employees are presently authorized apparently do not fit the desires of most of the municipalities in which pension plans are desired. So when these plans come in, they must be very carefully vetted by the officials in the department and a great deal of discussion must take place between the officials of my department and the officials of the municipalities concerned. In this instance this has been so, although I believe in the last two months or so there has been no communication between my officials and those of the city. I am rectifying that forthwith.

This whole situation is one which is under constant study by the officials of the department. Many of these plans, as they come in, require a very considerable amendment to make them conform to the present regulations, and there is some doubt in some minds that those regulations are as good as they might be. So I may assure the hon. member that this particular plan has not been forgotten. It is being carefully checked over, and also I may assure that hon. member and others with similar plans in their ridings that the whole subject is under very active review.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question after that answer? Is it true that a comprehensive plan is already before the Cabinet and "in due course" may mean a couple of weeks after this House has finished its sittings?

Hon. Mr. Cass: I have no knowledge of any such situation, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Before the orders of the day. On December 5, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) drew to my attention the case of Carlo Bellisario, a mechanic with an Italian background. The hon. member suggested to this Legislature that this man had been unable to get his auto mechanic's papers because of difficulties with the English language. The hon. member also left the impression that this man was a most competent mechanic and further left the impression that here was a man to whom a great deal of injustice had been done.

At that time I assured the hon. member that regulations of my department do not prevent men trying for auto mechanic's papers because they do not speak English. The regulations are there to determine whether a man has the necessary experience and ability and competence in order to carry on as a mechanic. I also assured the hon. member that the case would be followed up and every opportunity would be given immediately to the man in question to try the examination. This has been done and I want now to present the full facts to demonstrate that my department has done its utmost to help this man obtain his certificate—a man who is supposed to be a very competent mechanic.

Mr. Bellisario first applied for a certificate of qualification on October 13 of this year. He was accompanied by an English-speaking York township fireman. Mr. Bellisario produced written proof that he had worked under the supervision of a certified mechanic for approximately 48 months. The name of the mechanic was not given. He also produced evidence that he had been employed by another firm for 23 months.

In both cases, it was simply stated that he was in the mechanical repair business but there was no detail given as to the type of work done by Mr. Bellisario. He then completed an application for a certificate of qualification and, as is the usual practice in the apprenticeship branch, a member of the staff suggested Mr. Bellisario write the qualifying examination to see if some credit for experience in years could be arrived at. If the amount of credit had come to a total of five years, he would then have been allowed to write the examination for certificate of qualification.

Mr. Bellisario then, with the assistance of his interpreter, wrote the qualifying examination, which is purely objective, with Yes and No answers. He was given a three years credit; it was a very generous credit.

After taking into consideration the fact that because he was unfamiliar with the English language he might have had difficulty in even doing a good job with the qualifying examination, every effort, I can assure hon. members was made to give him the maximum amount of credit which could be given.

A letter of authority was then issued to Mr. Bellisario's employer, authorizing him to employ Mr. Bellisario until September, 1963 without a certificate of qualification. This was done so that Mr. Bellisario would not be violating the regulations but would still have an opportunity to become more familiar with the technical terminology.

We suggested to Mr. Bellisario that he attend night classes at the Provincial Institute of Trades on Nassau Street here in Toronto. Our staff felt that if he did this he would be able to qualify for a certificate of qualification at a later date.

So far as we can determine he has never registered at the school.

We arranged to have Mr. Bellisario rewrite his examination with an interpreter on December 8. That was 3 days after the question was raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). He failed to appear but reported he had been unable to find an interpreter. Arrangements were made for him to try again on December 11. On this occasion he brought as an interpreter a used-car salesman, who did not have even a fair knowledge of auto mechanics.

Mr. Bellisario appeared again on December 12 with Father Joseph Carraro, a Roman Catholic priest who is well known and highly respected by the apprenticeship branch. Father Carraro has done a great deal of work with the ethnic groups and works very closely with our apprenticeship branch.

After a short while at the examination,

Father Carraro advised my staff that Mr. Bellisario did not know the technical terms which were required to pass the examination. He further suggested that Mr. Bellisario was not very clear with his answers regardless of the language problem.

At Father Carraro's suggestion he will tutor Mr. Bellisario, and an opportunity for Mr. Bellisario to write again will be provided just as soon as Father Carraro feels he is ready.

Here are the results of the examination Mr. Bellisario tried on December 12—this man who was represented by the hon. member for York South as being a most competent mechanic. There are 250 questions on the examination. Through his interpreter Mr. Bellisario tried to answer a total of 36 questions. He failed to answer five at all, and out of the others he was given a credit for 12 correct answers.

On a percentage basis of the final examination, Mr. Bellisario had a total of 4.8 per cent.

The fee of $5, required before an examination is tried, is being held to the credit of Mr. Bellisario for his next examination.

Mr. MacDonald: I just want to make this one brief explanation. If I have misled the House and misled the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) it was on the basis of information that was given to me by his employer who is a very responsible citizen and very active in the community in York township. He said to me that Mr. Bellisario could take a car apart and put it together with his eyes closed. If this is the case I am not disputing it, but I was passing on information from a responsible citizen who is the employer of this man.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Just another example of misleading information given in the House.

Mr. Troy: I observe that the Chief Commissioner of the Liquor Control Board (Mr. Grossman) is now in his seat. I wonder if he now has the answers to my questions?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Well, Mr. Speaker, I explained to the hon. member yesterday that I had not received a copy of his questions and I found out late yesterday afternoon that it had gone to the Speaker's office and had been handed over to the Cabinet office because they thought I was in there. It then went down to the Liquor Control Board head office, and this is the first day I have been down there for a week because I have been busy here.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is very difficult to get it done as quickly as they desire, but I am doing my best, with whatever ability the Lord endowed me. I have been down there for about 30 minutes today. I found it on my desk and I have asked for the information. Just as soon as I have it, the House will get it.

Mr. Troy: It is as close as his telephone—Mattawa.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a couple of questions.

The first is directed to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett). The grand jury report, for the present sittings of the general sessions of the peace for the county of York dated December 11, 1961, states that the grand jury was not allowed to see departmental reports on the operations of the Don Jail and the Ontario Reformatory, Mimico.

Will the hon. Minister table in the House the departmental reports for the last two years on the operations of the Don Jail and the Ontario Reformatory, Mimico?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) courteously provided me with a copy of this question.

He inquires: will the Minister table in this House the departmental reports for the last two years on the operations of the Don Jail and the Ontario Reformatory at Mimico?

This is a matter, Mr. Speaker, I think I should like to take under consideration.

Mr. Trotter: Well, how long will it take the hon. Minister to consider this, because with the Christmas holiday we will not be back here for some time? Will he have an answer tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: If I might answer that, Mr. Speaker, it would be in those words which are well known in this House—

Several hon. members: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Trotter: From experience, Mr. Speaker, I say the fullness of time is a long time.

My second question is directed to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). According to an article appearing in the December 13 issue of the Toronto Daily Star, under the byline of Leonard Bertin, there is a great inconsistency between the assurance of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that people suspected of being mentally ill need not be taken to jail and the pronouncements of unnamed legal advisers in the government.

Would the hon. Attorney-General answer the following:

1. Are the unnamed government legal advisers correct when, for all practical purposes, they say the hon. Minister of Health's ministerial directive is meaningless?

2. What is the hon. Attorney-General's interpretation of the relevant statute where it says a person who is charged only with being mentally sick shall be sent to a "safe and comfortable place"?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Well, Mr. Speaker, I could answer these two questions very tersely—with the answer "No" to the first part and with the answer, "includes a mental hospital" to the second. But knowing the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and believing he is seeking some information and not merely trying to be embarrassing on this question, I will elaborate a little on this.

There was some suggestion in the article referred to that the words "safe and comfortable place" might be replaced by the words "a mental hospital". Back in 1959, there was an amendment to The Mental Hospitals Act and at that time discussions did take place between my department and the department of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and it was felt that the words "safe and comfortable place" should remain. One of the reasons for that was that if you supplanted them by "a mental hospital" there could be cases where there would be no availability in a mental hospital or that the mental hospital itself would not be available anywhere within hundreds of miles of the particular unfortunate patient who might have been apprehended under The Mental Hospitals Act as being mentally ill. Therefore, the retention of those words was recommended and was followed; but the advice, very definitely, of my legal department, with which I concur, is that a "safe and comfortable place" mentioned in The Mental Hospitals Act includes a mental hospital.

I might also say that because it was necessary in some instances to place persons, charged with being mentally ill, in jails after the examination and prior to the hearing under The Mental Hospitals Act, the 24-hour rule was passed. A person had to be brought before a magistrate within 24 hours before the hearing was ordered. The magistrate then must immediately order a mental examination, after which the magistrate must deal with the charge at the next sitting of the court.

Mr. Trotter: I take it then, Mr. Speaker, from what the hon. Attorney-General said in the last part, that people who are mentally sick will still be taken to jail until they appear before a magistrate?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No. I am referring to that procedure that is, in some instances, still the situation. That is why those safeguards were placed there.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) notice of which has been provided him. Would the hon. Minister of Health inform this House when it may expect the tabling of the report of the committee on physical fitness which was set in motion approximately 20 months ago?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is that the report will be tabled at this session of the House following the Christmas recess.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary question to that: Was not this report completed and in the hands of the department well over eight months ago?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is correct, sir.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question? As the hon. Minister knows, the federal government has announced a $5 million grant for physical fitness and amateur athletics. Is there a co-ordination between his department and the federal department of health with regard to that particular fund?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Although I have no notice of that question, and I may be a little vague in my answer, Mr. Speaker, to the best of my ability I would answer it in this way. There have been fairly lengthy discussions between the two departments, but since we have not got a specific branch or department or section in The Department of Health for Ontario concerned with this matter we could not enter into any definite agreement; nor could we have legislation which we believe to be necessary to enter into an agreement. It is nonetheless our very sincere hope that we will be availing ourselves of all possible assistance.

Mr. Troy: Does the hon. Minister have liaison and co-ordination with the physical fitness department of The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there is no need for liaison between us because we have in The Department of Health no division of physical fitness. It was the direction of the government that my department should supervise and set in motion this study group, but that did not give us the authority to set up a physical fitness division in the department.

SCHOOL GRANTS 1962-63

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister and Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a short statement of policy that I would like to make. After hearing the debate that went on, and the discussion about statements of policy, I feel I could say almost anything, for as long as I liked. I will attempt to call them.

As Minister of Education, I have always sought to provide information about school grants as early in the session as possible, in order to assist school boards in planning their activities and budgeting for their expenditures. In keeping with that objective, I wish to make an announcement today regarding the amount and the application of the grants payable in 1962-63 under the federal-provincial technical and vocational school training agreement, the residential and farm school tax assistance grant programme, and the general legislative grant programme.

Regulations governing the distribution and payment of these grants will be issued as early as possible in order to permit the school boards and municipalities to do their budgeting early in the new year. As these regulations may be distributed before the assembly reconvenes, I would like to inform hon. members of the changes we anticipate.

The first section is the federal-provincial technical and vocational school training agreement.

Under this programme we are paying 100 per cent of the cost of approved technical and vocational school building programmes. This undertaking represents one of the biggest and most significant developments in education that has ever occurred in the province. The implications are naturally tremendous, not only for the future of the young people to be educated in these new schools, but for the general economic growth and prosperity of our province.

This programme has building projects either approved or pending approval that involve a total expenditure of approximately $200 million by the end of the next fiscal year, March 31, 1963.

The full cost is, of course, to be borne by the federal and provincial governments in accordance with the 75 per cent-25 per cent formula announced earlier. The provincial government must initially bear full responsibility for the total amount under this formula, but the federal government will reimburse the provincial government for its share in due course. It should be borne in mind, however, that the provincial government must, in any event, provide 25 per cent of the amount, or at least $50 million. Under the existing agreement, expenditures to be eligible for refund on this basis must be paid by the end of next fiscal year, ending in March, 1963. The fact that municipal taxpayers contribute nothing to these capital costs of course has tremendous implications.

Now the residential and farm school tax assistance grant. This completely new type of school grant was announced last year, and the Act and regulations made thereunder provided for a payment of $5 per pupil of average daily attendance in every public, separate, and secondary school of the province. The purpose of the school tax assistance grant, which is basically a tax-sharing form of grant, is to provide direct relief to home-owners and farmers through their school taxes, which have constituted an ever-increasing burden despite the continued and very substantial general relief provided through the increases in school grants during the past 15 years.

The original announcement indicated tentative plans to provide for this purpose a grant of $5 per pupil of average daily attendance in 1961-62, of $12 per pupil in 1962-63, and in 1963-64 varying amounts of $20 per pupil in elementary schools, $20 per pupil in continuation schools, $30 per pupil in academic secondary schools, and $40 per pupil in vocational secondary schools.

For the next fiscal year, however, we propose to simplify the formula in the light of experience gained this year, and by increasing greatly the total amount voted last year, to change the distribution formula for 1962-63.

Since very substantial aid has been provided for the coming year to secondary school boards in the form of the technical school building programme mentioned earlier in this note, and since the expansion pressures have been particularly difficult for elementary school boards to finance, resulting generally in substantial increases in local taxes for the support of public and of separate schools, we propose, for the coming year, to maintain the assistance to secondary schools at the present level, i.e. $5 per pupil of average daily attendance, and, at the same time, to increase the tax assistance grant to elementary schools by 25 per cent more than originally promised, i.e. to $15 per pupil of average daily attendance.

It will be noted that the very substantial increases in tax assistance for secondary schools will be provided in 1963-64, when maintenance costs for the new vocational schools will have to be met for the first time by the local school boards. The total cost of the school tax assistance programme for the fiscal year 1962-63 is estimated to be at a minimum $16 million.

The new formula for elementary schools—because the present formula will remain unchanged for another year as far as secondary schools are concerned—is extremely simple: the school board in receipt of the school tax assistance grant, or the municipal council on its behalf, must reduce the tax rate on homeowners and farmers by a full 10 per cent below that applicable to commercial properties. Not only is the new formula equitable and easy to understand, but it will be easy for school boards or municipal councils to calculate and apply. It is also considerably less restrictive than the formula originally proposed earlier this year.

Now in regard to general legislative grants, in addition to the very generous assistance contemplated under the two preceding sections, it is proposed to continue our programme of improvements in the general legislative grant formulae and schedules. The natural increase in enrolment, which continues at a very high level, requires, even at the present rates of grant, that an additional $10 million be provided for the coming fiscal year.

In addition to providing for this increase, we are proposing certain necessary changes in the formula in order to remove inequities which have become evident during the past year, to facilitate a smoother operation of the grant plan. These are technical matters which would require a lengthy discussion of their background and implications, and I think hon. members will be just as happy that I do not go into them in detail at this juncture. Suffice it to say that not only will these improvements cost this government more money in grants, but hon. members will be fully informed of such changes at the first opportunity. The grant regulations themselves are in process of revision and will be issued at the earliest possible moment.

Rapid growth in school enrolment has been presenting us with one of the most formidable and challenging tasks in our history. Enrolment in elementary and secondary schools has increased from about 600,000 in 1945 to an all-time record in September, 1960, of about 1,400,000. This is an increase of more than 120 per cent in 15 years. Each year the rate of increase in school enrolment has been more than double the rate of our population increase.

Although some slowdown in the rate of our population growth was experienced last year, it will have no immediate effect on school enrolment. Indeed, it is estimated that over the next five years the net addition to our school population could very easily exceed 400,000 pupils. At that time our school population will total more than 1,800,000 students and this will be over three times the number in our schools in 1945.

The growth in enrolment since 1945 has involved the expenditure of nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars on school construction alone, to provide almost 900,000 new pupil places.

In 1960, for example, 601 new schools or additions to existing schools were completed at a cost of over $100 million. This means almost two new schools for every working day. Increased enrolment has also required the training and recruitment in the post-war period of an additional 25,000 teachers—a number equivalent to the total teacher force just a dozen years ago. In addition to the facilities and teachers required, it has meant finding the money for expansion and evolving a grants structure to provide a just basis of distribution.

Legislative school grants have increased very greatly, rising from $8.2 million to an estimated $191 million in this current year, that is in 1961-62. The increase in the legislative school grants has totalled over $93 million in the last four years alone, and it is expected, on the basis of present plans, that in the next two years the grants will increase at an even higher rate, and could very easily reach the staggering total of one-quarter of a billion dollars in 1963-64.

This immense sum is positively required if we are to meet requirements of fitting our young people for the challenges ahead. This money is also needed if we are not going to permit our farm, home and real-estate owners to be overwhelmed.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a question about his statement.

I certainly hope I was mistaken but did I understand the hon. Prime Minister to say that the per-pupil grant for secondary schools for this year was going to remain the same as it was last year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to one section of our total grants.

Mr. Whicher: For secondary schools?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. Last year we introduced a residential and farm school tax assistance grant of $5 per pupil across the board, and we are going to leave that at that figure.

Mr. Whicher: Did the hon. Prime Minister not promise that it would increase, double, for this year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to debate this with the hon. member at any time but I will just say that at the time these grants were introduced we laid them ahead for three years. Since that time we have introduced this other tax, this other school building programme I mentioned—the federal-provincial technical vocational training agreement—which has served to put about $200 million into our secondary school system at no cost to the local taxpayer. The incidence of cost increase will come when these schools are opened and, therefore, we are holding the secondary school line this year and increasing the elementary. The net result benefits the same taxpayers.

Next year we will increase the secondary in order to meet the increased maintenance costs that will evolve as these new schools are brought into play.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I will just say in passing that that is all very well where there are technical schools going to be built, but what about relief for the secondary schools where there are no technical schools?

Mr. Speaker: Order. No debate, please.

Mr. Whicher: This is just a question.

Mr. Speaker: Supplemenatry questions will be perfectly in order.

Mr. Whicher: My question is this. What about some relief for the secondary schools areas where there are no technical schools?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only point out that those schools will receive a very substantial increase, a greater increase, of course, than the elementary school system has next year. The point is that we are dealing with the spots in our educational system where the greatest pressure exists. The other point I make is that eventually, regardless of where we may divide the grant, the total amount going into the school system benefits all our taxpayers.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) this question? This is to take effect in 1962, do I understand?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What is to take effect?

Mr. Belanger: This new programme.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the grants. This statement concerns only the grants which will be paid to the local school boards for the fiscal year commencing on April 1. We get these regulations out as early as we can in order that the school boards may do their budgeting before the local councils have to set the school rate.

The reason I make this statement today is that it may very well be that these regulations will be distributed to the school board before this House reconvenes. Therefore, I have taken this opportunity of telling the House what we propose to do, because when it is actually done the hon. members will not be here, or there is a possibility that they will not.

I am referring in this statement only to the grants that will be paid to the local school boards for the fiscal year commencing April 1.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-61

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer moves second reading of Bill No. 47, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-61.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order before we proceed to this. I have no objection at all to debating this issue, indeed I think it should be debated, but may I have your ruling as to whether or not a bill introduced by a private member which would reduce the revenues of the province is in order?

Mr. Speaker: I presume there is some amount of "order" in this bill, and I am presuming that it would be more out of order if it were asking for funds to be raised rather than lowered.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I do not quite grasp that. If this bill were passed, it would reduce the revenues of the province by a significant amount, and therefore it is a financial bill. I am not arguing pro and con of the bill; I just want a ruling for future guidance. Is this an appropriate bill to be introduced by a private member, a member of the Opposition?

Mr. Speaker: On page 129, number 15, section 112 by the 54th section of the imperial Act, The British North America Act, 1867, it is provided that the House will not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost to any purpose that has not first been recommended by a message of the Lieutenant-Governor in the session in which such a vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

Mr. MacDonald: It is out of order then, Mr. Speaker, I submit. This has not been preceded by an address from the hon. Lieutenant-Governor—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): For any purpose?

Mr. Speaker: It does not appropriate any part of the public revenue or any tax or impost for that purpose; that is my ruling.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it in order then, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): May I just explain the procedure before the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) commences? I will attempt in the course of the session to call some of these bills at intervals and they can be debated for a given period of time. I have spoken to the hon. leader of the Opposition about this procedure. As the business of the House progresses, I will attempt to call those other bills on the order paper.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this bill in its presentation is a physically simple bill and it may be that for the edification of the House I should read the only pertinent section.

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to your attention that in spite of the fact the bill is very short, there is one correction that I must make immediately, a mechanical error that I think all will agree is inherent in the presentation here.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Another flaw?

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, it is not a flaw at all. The fact is that one of the law officers came to me today—and with due respect I was not going to draw this to the attention of the House, but I think that it was a printing error; it is certainly not as it was presented. The reference is to the fact that here in the bill, and particularly the amendment to section 5, paragraph 42, reads as follows—and I will correct it after I have read it, Mr. Speaker.

Tangible personal property purchased at a price of $25 or less, except prepared meals consumed on premises where sold at a price of $1.50 or less—

That, of course, should be $1.50 or more:

—liquor, bottled beer and tobacco and tobacco products.

That is the bill, Mr. Speaker. It is intended especially to substitute for the words "17 cents," that appear in the original Act, the words "$25"; and then to add to that the exception "prepared meals consumed on the premises where sold at a price of $1.50 or more, liquor, bottled beer and tobacco and tobacco products."

Mr. Speaker, for your further assistance I have arranged to prepare an estimate of the revenue to be derived from a plan such as suggested by this amendment to the Act which would excuse or exempt all purchases under $25. You will note that in the preparation I have submitted for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, and for the consideration of all hon. members here, I have outlined the classification of retail sales in Ontario. I have done this in accordance with Mr. Gathercole's presentation to this very House, the presentation of The Ontario Department of Economics for 1961, and the preparation of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which are referred to in the presentation of The Department of Economics. The classification therefore that hon. members will see before them of retail sales in Ontario, classified as it is on the left hand side of the page, follows the breakdown of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

I am not an economist and you may excuse me, Mr. Speaker, for spending just a little bit of time here. Hon. members would wonder why I have listed the 20-odd departments or divisions at the left hand side. I have done that because the Dominion Bureau of Statistics breaks down the total retail sales in exactly the same fashion. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the total Ontario retail sales including, in addition to retail sales, construction, machinery and equipment, telephone and local calls represent a total expenditure of $10.4 billion in Ontario.

In other words, if our retail sales tax in Ontario, levied at the rate of 3 per cent, was levied on all retail sales and in addition on all construction work, machinery and equipment, and local telephone calls, all of which are technically subject to the retail sales tax, the total on which the levy would be made would be $10.4 billion for a total revenue of something just over $300 million.

We know that the anticipated revenue is nowhere near that. It is in the neighbourhood of $150 million. Therefore, in the second column, and next to the 1960 sales, according to the estimates of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, I have listed the total sales that are subject to tax in Ontario. Note that those total sales are $5.04 billion. Of course, 3 per cent on that sum is just over $150 million; my estimate is $151 million.

This is the government's plan, Mr. Speaker. The government expects to collect $150 million by the imposition of a 3 per cent sales tax. It exempts about one half of the total sales that are made in Ontario, and it does this by virtue of the regulations set out in the current legislation. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is very important to know at the outset that in Ontario we are not levying a tax on all retail sales but on about 50 per cent of the total retail sales that would normally be subject to tax.

Under the Liberal plan which exempts, as I outlined, all purchases less than $25, but including construction and, likewise, liquor, telephone and meals and tobacco, our levy would be on a total of $3.8 billion, for a total revenue of $115 million.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, understandably, I do not think that it would be advisable for me, in view of the fact that this debate will continue, to spend a lot of time detailing the figures on this sheet or defending them. I will simply tell hon. members that the debate could go on endlessly if we were to become engaged in determining what portion of the total department store sales, for example, amount to less than $25, and what portion are over $25; what portion of the total jewellery store sales are less than $25, and what is more.

I am simply prepared to say, Mr. Speaker, that it has been my opportunity to have this statement prepared by pre-eminent experts in the field who are doing this type of work day in and day out, and I am confident that the figures that I have presented are conservative. We have deliberately attempted to underestimate the Liberal plan revenue and we have deliberately tried to overestimate, if you will, the probable revenue under the government plan.

Suffice to say at this particular juncture, Mr. Speaker, that on the second sheet of the estimates that I have presented for consideration I had detailed three distinct items which will be identical under both plans. In other words, the new Liberal plan is exactly as the Conservative or government plan, and the revenue to be derived from those three basic areas amounts to $94 million. In other words, if the government is right that it expects to collect $150 million, then $94 million of that $150 million will come from the three areas that I have identified, and we are making no change whatsoever in that respect. I am assured that the $94 million that I have outlined on the second page is just as justified a position as the $94 million that appears in the governmental $150 million. The area of dispute would be in the $21 million. That is over and above the $94 million and up to the $115 million that I have estimated. Hon. members will notice that the $21 million or $21.5 million is identified in the last column on the sheet, on page 1 of the two sheets that I have supplied to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, let me say that the presentation you have before you is according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics breakdown of all retail sales. They have set the schedules. We have the latest figures, the 1960 figures, for the total retail sales in Ontario in respect to those several divisions.

Hon. members will note, for example, that on grocery and combination stores under the government plan, they expect to collect $6 million. We will, under the Liberal plan, collect nothing, because we estimate that no grocery or combination store purchase will be subject to our tax.

Under the governmental plan, you will note that under variety, drug and hardware stores the government's plan can be expected to produce $10.5 million and under our plan the expected revenue would be $.6 million or $600,000. The explanation there is that we would expect to collect nothing in drugs and variety stores, but understandably in hardware retail sales we would collect a tax on those items sold in hardware stores in excess of $25.

Mr. Speaker, it would be a laborious task to go over all these figures in detail. I simply say to you that I am prepared to say that, to the best of my knowledge, the revenue of $115 million that we expect was conservatively estimated. In all probability it would be something in excess of that figure. We have had our plan tested by other competent persons and we have been told that the anticipated revenue of $115 million is, as I said, a conservative figure.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you for a moment what we have tried to do. But before I do that, I want to point out that this is, of course, a political arena and that I am going to be charged, I am sure, before the end of the day, with the sort of observation that has been made before in this House—that I am as responsible as any person for subjecting sales tax to this House over a long period of time. And that I voted against the tax a year ago. I will have something to say about that matter in just a few minutes.

What I am trying to establish at the outset is that the presentation here is indicative, I think, of what an enlightened approach to sales tax can produce. It can produce the type of revenue I am talking about simply because the government has arbitrarily exempted some items and taxed other retail sales without, I suggest, due consideration of what should be subject to tax and what should be exempt.

To detail for hon. members the myriad of inconsistencies is unnecessary. They have been drawn to your attention many times, Mr. Speaker. But I would point out that there are many classic illustrations.

For example, it is my understanding that school supplies are subject to the tax but on the other hand smutty comic books are not subject to the tax. There is a tax on soap, Mr. Speaker. One would think that cleanliness would be next to godliness, but apparently that is not so.

There are other instances, Mr. Speaker, where one finds it difficult in logic to know why there is imposition of the tax upon certain items and no levy on other items. The reason will become evident in an analysis of the programme that I have outlined for hon. members, where they will note that one half of the total eligible items subject to tax are in fact exempt. I feel that the government, instead of taking a forward-looking approach and making it easy to make a determination of what is taxable and what is not, has instead taken a backward step in respect to sales tax; that is, imposed a tax on certain things and not on others. How much easier it would have been to exempt all purchases up to a given amount.

Remember, that in this way the government would eliminate the small grocer, they would eliminate the small retailer, from, first, the collection of tax, the computation of the tax, the rebate of the tax and the physical work that he is required to perform.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important factor because I suggest that on small items the cost of collection is illogically high. The inconvenience is extraordinary. The irritation is extraordinary.

Mr. Speaker, if it is our desire to impose taxes, and take into consideration the well-being of the people, then I think it is imperative that we demonstrate that we have the ability to think through a task in such a way as to avoid a maximum of irritation to the taxpayer.

The government plan, I suggest, has done just the opposite. And I think I know why.

We are in this position because it was not but a few years ago that the government leaders opposite took the position that they required additional revenue but that that additional revenue should come from the federal government. In fact elections were fought in 1957 and in 1958 on that very point.

Then a year ago, when it became obvious that that revenue would not come from Ottawa, we became suddenly engrossed in this retail sales tax. I think that the tax at that time was determined upon hurriedly. It was ill-conceived and ill-planned. Mr. Speaker, I think it was because of that hurry that the irritant features of the current plan are in existence. I say unhesitatingly, Mr. Speaker, that I think that it was ill-timed and ill-conceived.

It was not done by giving consideration to the persons who would be required to collect the tax, that is the small retailer, the little fellow who is required to bear the burden of cost. The well-being of the taxpayer himself was not considered, because nothing is more irritable than to pay out a penny for a multitude of small purchases. This type of irritant is not only an irritant, it is not a big revenue-producer.

When a car is sold, just as much revenue is produced as when a multitude of small items are sold. Likewise in construction, likewise in big items under electrical appliances and furniture—these are the revenue producers. Herein we get our bulk of the revenue as I pointed out—$94 million of the total of $150 million.

It becomes obvious therefore that, in the smaller items, not only do we not collect the bulk of the revenue but we cause a maximum of inconvenience to the collector.

For example, I think it is quite obvious to all of us in this House that the total numbers of persons working in the Treasury department, in the collection of taxes, was required to be doubled for this very tax. We had something like 700 people working to collect all our taxes up to that time, I believe, and now we have added a substantially greater number.

Mr. Speaker, I simply say this: we have all experienced as we have moved around Ontario, the multitude of people who are required to visit each little grocer, go over his problems in detail, and try to examine the amounts that are taxable and otherwise. I think that all this type of irritant could be eliminated and not only would we collect $115 million, but we would reduce the cost of collection substantially. What that cost is, I am not prepared to estimate this afternoon, but it may be $5 million or $6 million and, Mr. Speaker, that is a substantial amount of money.

Mr. Speaker, reverting for a moment to my own position of a few years ago, I want to meet this deliberately and head on. It is true that I talked about a sales tax a number of years ago but I talked about it, Mr. Speaker, not as a source of additional revenue for the general fund of the province of Ontario. I talked about it as a long-term reform procedure to correct the inequity that exists in our municipal - provincial - fiscal relationship. I took the position, and I still feel strongly about it, as I did then, that a hundred years ago it was good to say, and it was equitable and just to say, that education and welfare and justice should be financed by a levy on real estate and land. Why? Because a hundred years ago that was a good measurement of a man's ability to pay.

But it is not so today. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I said that the Liberal Party would be prepared to correct this type of inequity and to effect some fiscal reforms and to change the responsibility vis-à-vis the provincial and municipal governments and assume the basic cost of education; and in order to do that would establish an enlightened sales tax to relieve the municipal property owner. But I never intended, Mr. Speaker, that this type of revenue or tax would be added to the general funds of the province of Ontario, as is the case now.

Mr. Speaker, we have not one iota of new service. We are using this revenue to pay old debts. There is not another province in this Dominion that has imposed this type of legislation without undertaking a new service, but here it has not been the case. Here we are using additional revenue to pay for services that were undertaken some considerable time ago and that are basically required now to meet part of our deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I have felt, therefore, every justification for saying to you a year ago, I do not believe in a new sales tax for the purpose of paying old debts; I do not believe in the imposition of a tax that provides no new service and that does nothing really to come to grips with fundamental difficulties in the municipal-provincial fiscal field. And I feel that way today.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the point that my plan, or the Liberal plan, at least, will produce only $115 million as compared with $150 million, I simply say this: nobody, in my opinion, is able to get up honestly in this House and say 150 is a magic figure. We never heard the figure 150, as I recall, until last year. Up to that time it was always $100 million. We want $100 million from the federal government.

As our deficit went up, of course, the government talked about more money and the need for more, and it was said that our deficit was more than $100 million—I think $180 million somebody said—and, of course, it becomes apparent that therefore they would hope for more. But I am as confident, as I stand here, Mr. Speaker, that $115 million will do in an enlightened way the same job that $150 million will do under the government's plan.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we have never in this province, in the time that I have been here, really come to grips with the fiscal programme. I have constantly said that it would be wise to divorce our highway programme from the general budget, and I feel so today. I am confident we lose millions and millions of dollars by paying out to municipal governments money that they expend at their level. I think that if we did as has been done in other jurisdictions—set up a highway scheme of financing that would identify and pay into a common fund all the revenue from highways and then liquidate the highway construction and maintenance work over the given 20 years that the highway department has talked about. We could do it with the revenue from highways only and, Mr. Speaker, that would reduce the Treasury in Ontario at the present time—if the last five years are any indication—would excuse it from the payment out of general funds of approximately $35 million to $45 million.

Mr. Speaker, that type of thinking and determination and identification of cost and revenue and service would give us the type of direction and assistance and intelligent leadership that I think the people of Ontario are entitled to at the present time.

The point that I am making is simply this. I am not going to foolishly stand here and say 115 is the same as 150, but what I am going to say is that I believe we are losing money in many respects in conjunction with the way we are financing highways.

I do not believe that it is a good thing, for example, to build development roads and call no tenders whatsoever. I just wonder if we are paying out that money as efficiently and as effectively as humanly and economically possible. I am just old-fashioned enough to think that the total highways construction cost at all three levels of government could be substantially streamlined and made more efficient. I, for one, am not disposed to put more highways money into the common fund of this Conservative government's general treasury before we have had an effective opportunity to look at the economy that can be practised and the identification of certain sources of revenue, such as highway sources of revenue, with specific expenditures, that is highway expenditures.

I think we could do a lot in this respect. I am not disposed to feel that we could just go on and on and add more revenue as the deficit occurs. The simple fact is that if hon. members look at the budget over the last 18 years they will find that all the departments, all 22 of them, have gone up in the same proportion. Now, surely one would expect that in a given year the government would say: "We are interested now in education. This department needs more than the other departments." Or in another given year: "The Department of the Attorney-General is going to undertake a specific thing and therefore that department needs more."

But there is no demonstration of planning. Hon. members will find that if they drew a chart, and we have done this, they will find that all the departments over a period of time have gone up at a steady and even pace. I say that this is demonstration that the type of planning and direction that is required in conjunction with the fiscal responsibility of this province has not been exercised. I am prepared to say that I am confident that if we did the type of planning that is required, then the 115 that we have here would buy and provide the same type of service that we are getting now out of the revenue that is being expended.

Sure, the hon. gentlemen to the left will laugh, but if they know the significance of real economic planning, Mr. Speaker, it is not so silly at all. I tell you that some of the greatest economists in the province of Ontario actually have worked on this plan.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Like Mr. Gordon? He was a great one, he was a great one!

Mr. Wintermeyer: Would the hon. Minister consider him to be—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I was just asking. The hon. leader of the Opposition should not be so touchy.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And many others.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He has a good name. He worked for hon. members opposite.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I do not want this whole thing reduced to gestures, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members to the left would desire. The simple fact is that this has been costed, this has been examined, and this is feasible.

I am prepared to make this a practical political argument, that 115 and 150 are two different figures; but I am not prepared to say that 150 is a magic figure. I am prepared to say that the government of the province of Ontario has got to buckle down and effect some economy in its various departments before I am prepared to support any imposition in excess of $115 million; and I am prepared to say that the programme that I have outlined here has about it, I am positive, the type of consideration that should be given for the practical implementation of a tax of this sort.

I am confident that the collector, the small retailer in particular, and the taxpayer, should be considered in the extreme. Good legislation, Mr. Speaker, requires that a taxpayer feel a genuine consciousness that the tax was well conceived and well planned, and I, from my experiences, feel that the taxpayers of the province of Ontario at the present time feel just the opposite. Many of them feel that the tax should not be imposed at all. But those who say there may be need for more revenue are certainly saying this: if there was need for more revenue certainly a plan could have been devised that would have produced less irritation and would have been demonstrative of more consideration for the taxpayer and the small collector than the government plans demonstrate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, at this juncture in the debate it ~~provides~~ me pleasure to suggest and encourage all hon. members to consider seriously this plan. It is practical for the simple reason that I think it has been studied, it has been examined, it has been prepared, not only by myself but by persons schooled in this type of work.

I think the estimate of revenue is just as accurate as the estimate that the government makes of the $150 million or $151 million that they expect to get. I personally feel that the irritations and inconveniences are basically eliminated and that a government today is under an obligation to say to the people of Ontario: "We are going to assure that economy is practised." Secondly, it should say that it is going to begin to identify sources of revenue and sources of expenditure such as highways, and is going to set out a programme and a plan in conjunction with education, for example. This plan would earmark for that great social service—a social service that I think is paramount to all, a service that will in the end mean the difference between our way of life and any foreign way, because it will assure the physical, mental and intellectual development of our young people—a source of revenue that will equitably raise money for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, two years ago I certainly hoped that if ever this type of legislation and this type of imposition came into being it would have been identified specifically and unequivocally for the type of service such as education or welfare or justice or other new service that is currently not being absorbed by the provincial government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with deference but with seriousness, I suggest to you and to all hon. members of the House that even at this late date, the government give serious thought to the significance, philosophy and thoughts back of this suggested bill, and that it realize now, even now, that there are real improvements to be made in the legislation that was introduced a year ago. I suggest that it think in terms of the people and the collectors throughout all of Ontario who are very greatly concerned about the inconvenience and irritants of the present plan.

We of the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, would of course have much to gain by crossing this province and saying: "We are not in favour of the tax at all—"

Mr. MacDonald: That is what the hon. leader of the Opposition said last year.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I voted against it last year for the reasons I have outlined.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the hon. leader of the Opposition not outline them last year?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to pay much attention to a group which only a day ago suggested $150 million would be produced by taxing the natural resources of this province and reducing employment in northern Ontario accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, it is time somebody stood up in this Legislature and said: "They just cannot get revenue out of the blue." You cannot tax these corporations in northern Ontario and bleed them to death at a time when they are producing more employment, more people are employed in natural resources in Canada than in any other industry, and they are having more trouble at the current time than they have ever had in history.

I for one, political or not, am prepared to say that I am going to be realistic enough to acknowledge that revenue is required and it must be identified in a specific way. It is for that reason that I have submitted this programme which I suggest is intelligible, is economical and has been effectively costed. I present it for your serious consideration this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there are several matters I would like to touch upon in dealing with this bill. First of all, I would like to deal with the matter of the ill-conception and the haste as alleged by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). I notice in looking over his estimate of Ontario's sales tax revenue that he includes therein an item of telephone calls, but I do not find any reference to telephone calls in the bill itself.

Mr. Wintermeyer: We just do not take them out, they are exactly the same as the legislation of the hon. Prime Minister, I am only changing one section, just the same as is being done today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Does the hon. leader of the Opposition mean to say that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am sorry, I did not go to the second page. In any event, I would like to say I have had an opportunity of having these figures analyzed and I am informed that they are so basically incorrect, in computing the amount of revenue that would be produced if this bill were to be adopted, that I do not intend to go into the detailed analysis of the figures to prove this lack of correctness.

The hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, does not object to a sales tax as such; he only objects to the sales tax in the form in which we have brought it in, although he does try to argue both ways.

It occurs to me that it might be possible to place this matter before the public accounts committee and allow it to be thoroughly examined there, and we will see what results we can obtain. I would be quite happy to discuss this with the hon. leader of the Opposition during the intermission, because that committee will not sit in any event until we resume. But I think that is a possibility.

Or we might devise some other means of checking to find out which figures are correct. In any event, we will deal with that technical aspect of the problem. In the meantime, my figures are that if the proposal of the hon. leader of the Opposition became effective, tax returns would be reduced on the full year's operation from $150 million to about $52 million.

Now these are the figures that were given to me. I made the offer to justify them and I will stand by that offer. Of course there is no point in us debating these amounts.

Now the hon. leader of the Opposition said this himself, so let us get on to some of the principles involved and we will settle the question of the amounts in due course.

I am informed by men I consider to be completely competent that if we were— Does the hon. leader of the Opposition have a question?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, I have. Mr. Speaker, you see, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has suggested—my question is this: is the hon. Prime Minister prepared to use common sense in the analysis of page 2 of my presentation, wherein, I believe, there is no change whatsoever as between his plan and my plan?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have made one mistake already in looking at these sheets and I never saw them until they came to my desk this afternoon. I will go back to my original position. The hon. leader of the Opposition is advised by his experts, I am advised by mine—

Mr. Wintermeyer: We should bring them together!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Of course we should attempt to reconcile the matter, but for the purposes of the debate this afternoon and the position that I am going to take in this matter, I take my figures as being correct, as the hon. leader of the Opposition has taken his. So as far as I am concerned, it would just mean that the province would be required to raise a further $98 million either by an increase in the sales tax on the balance of the items that would be taxable under his proposal, or by going to some other means of taxation. I make this assertion because I want the House to understand clearly the implications of what the hon. leader of the Opposition is suggesting in this bill. I am not, as I say, going to analyze the figures, but I would be quite happy to have some arrangement to have them analyzed in due course.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): If the hon. Prime Minister finds that we are correct, will he change it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would never answer such a question, because I am quite sure I will not find that my figures are incorrect.

Mr. Whicher: But if the hon. Prime Minister did find this was the case?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Therefore, to obtain the $150 million, which is necessary and to which I shall refer later, it would be necessary to increase the sales tax rate. As I estimate it, on the remaining taxable items if we were to accept these exemptions, we would have to increase the sales tax on these items to nine per cent, thereby imposing—

An hon. member: The hon. Prime Minister is right.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now, just a moment! Thereby imposing a very discriminatory tax on any article the purchase price of which is over $25. The problem of the collection of such tax, of course, is infinitely multiplied by increasing the exemptions as the hon. leader of the Opposition suggests. I can state the problem very simply in this way.

If an article can be purchased in two or more parts or quantities under $25, the purchaser would completely avoid the tax by purchasing the article piecemeal.

Mr. Whicher: How does the hon. Prime Minister deal with chocolate bars and cigarettes today? And pop?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This same condition applies with the present 17 cent exemption.

An hon. member: Does it apply to cars?

Another hon. member: Can the hon. member not take it?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: A person may purchase in two separate purchases two chocolate bars at 10 cents each and avoid the payment of any tax, but if the hon. leader of the Opposition's proposal became effective, this problem would be magnified into gigantic proportions with very intense headaches to the retailer. To avoid the tax people would seek to buy in components or quantities under $25.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now let me go on! I listened to the hon. leader of the Opposition; he may now listen to me, even if his friends will not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I point out to hon. members that this would entail a great deal of unnecessary work and it would entail a great deal of business expense. The present system of ordering would be disorganized and it would render it more expensive to business, particularly to retailers, but also manufacturers and wholesalers.

I point out to the House that in 40 American states and eight other Canadian provinces there is no such exemption. Although the exemptions in Ontario are the broadest of any jurisdiction in North America that has a sales tax, they do not create the problems to any conceivable degree that would be created by this proposition of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Let us take some examples. Under the proposal of the hon. leader of the Opposition, one could purchase a $100 kitchen suite by components parts; that is, buy the chairs separately and buy the table, and so on; or a $200 television set—buy the cabinet, speaker, chassis—never underestimate the ingenuity of the human mind when it comes to avoiding the payment of taxes.

Now each of these items—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I would point out to the hon. members when the Speaker rises to his feet there is no speaking at that point. Certain assumptions have been made on one side of the House and the House remained very dignified and very quiet. Now

I will just ask for the same procedure to be followed at this point when certain other assumptions are being made and I am sure we can all get along very well.

Mr. MacDonald: Ably stated.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will just review this television-set proposition again for you. You could separate the cabinet, speaker, chassis, and you could break it down to a great number of component parts, each of which would come to less than $25. By so doing you would avoid the payment of tax altogether. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) made some remark about me imputing dishonesty, perhaps, to someone. I would point out to him that one of the basic rules of tax laws is that any taxpayer is entitled to pay as little tax as he possibly can devise under any taxing statute.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am only pointing out to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) there is nothing dishonest in attempting to avoid paying the tax as long as you do not get outside the framework of the taxing statute.

Mr. Sopha: There are judicial pronouncements to the contrary.

An hon. member: How would the hon. Prime Minister handle a stove?

Mr. Sopha: Judges have said recently that the taxpayer who does that is dishonest.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are judicial pronouncements the other way too, in the Privy Council.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was so surprised by the hon. Prime Minister when he mentioned the member for Nipissing, sir. I did not quite get what he said. Was it something to do with dishonesty, of me imputing dishonesty?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member said, when I was explaining how someone could use this $25 deductible method for computing tax to reduce the purchase to the point where there would be no tax at all, I thought he said that I was accusing some—

Mr. Troy: Well, I could not—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, if I have—it does not matter. Just think of the cost, what the cost would be to the retailer who attempted to do business in this particular fashion.

Moreover, the net effect would be to increase the sales tax to nine per cent on the articles that could be taxed. This would not only multiply these problems, but would impose a real hardship on persons buying goods that could not be broken down into lots of less than $25. For example, the tax on a motor car instead of being three per cent would become nine per cent.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is what the hon. Prime Minister says.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, that is what I say. If we are to raise this amount of money and if we are to do it on the basis that the hon. members opposite suggest and to arrive at the same amount of revenue, we would have to increase the tax from three per cent to nine per cent on the items that they would exempt with their exemptions.

Now let us look at the revenue requirements of the province; and this is the spot where we are always told that we should reduce expenditures, but I cannot remember any concrete example ever having been given of where we should in fact reduce—we should reduce expenditures, but I never hear anything about cutting school grants, or cutting grants here or there, or limiting the services presently given by this government. I hear mainly that we should be doing more and more, and tax less and less.

Mr. Reaume: With more efficiency!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: However, let us look at the revenue requirements.

My predecessor in office on many occasions stated that the province needed at least $150 million more per year. I have had an opportunity of examining this statement and I can say to the House today that this requirement is completely inescapable. The province must raise annually a minimum of $150 million more revenue. This requirement for the additional money comes from the constantly increasing demands for services such as health and education, which are two, of course, of the very large services we provide.

As a matter of fact, we could say that education alone makes it necessary to raise this amount of money. The demands which our growth and development impose upon us for schools, universities and health have become almost insatiable. Three hundred and sixty-five days from now, as I pointed out earlier, we will have 70,000 more children in our school system than we do today because that is the annual net growth in our elementary and secondary school systems. There is nothing that can alter this except to refuse to provide for our young people the requirements that these days demand.

This afternoon I read to the House provisions which will apply commencing January 1, 1962, in connection with school grants in the province. These provisions are going to be of great assistance to our taxpayers, and particularly to our home owners and our farmers. They are designed for the coming year to help our public and separate elementary schools and also our secondary schools. Next year the real weight of assistance will be on secondary education. The whole problem of universities is an enormous one and has been discussed in this House before. It is going to require many millions of dollars and it is indeed very difficult to really estimate what our university bill will be in the years to come.

I would point out to the hon. members that our education bill alone this year will total nearly $270 million. Next year it will exceed $300 million, and even at that we are in some cases not going as far as we should. The $150 million simply cannot be reduced if we are going to meet the bare requirements of what we have to do in this province, living as we do in this atomic age.

The cry is to economize but, I add, does the Opposition want school grants decreased, which would bring with it of course an automatic increase in real estate taxation at the local level? Have we to cut allowances for old age pensioners and senior citizens? And what about mothers' allowances for our widowed mothers? Are we to reduce these?

When one talks of economizing, these are the only alternatives which this House or the people of the province have to consider. Our problem is, and has to be, how are we going to raise the revenue we need in a fair and equitable manner? And, of course, once having raised it how are we going to distribute it?

This House can increase the exemptions in the manner proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in this bill and, as I have said, we would need then a nine per cent sales tax on the remaining items that would be taxed. This, I claim, is a bare minimum.

I can say to the House that the present three per cent sales tax will produce an estimated $150 million, after allowing for all the exemptions which are presently allowed and are presently in the Act itself and which are the widest exemptions of any jurisdiction in North America that imposes a sales tax—certainly a good deal wider than any of the eight other Canadian provinces which are involved in the imposition of a sales tax.

Mr. Thomas: How about the cost of administration?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, the problem at the moment in the cost of administration is that the tax has only been in effect since September 1; but we can project and we think that it will work out at something less than two per cent. But let me make it very clear—so that the hon. members will not come back and say that we could do this for less than two per cent—that this is based on the figures we presently have, and we have very incomplete reports. I have heard reports in various parts of the province that the cost of collection was high—in one place I was in recently I was asked if the cost of collection was 40 per cent, which is so ridiculous. But the figure of 15 per cent is bandied around. We estimate at the present time it will cost somewhere in their neighbourhood of two per cent, which hon. members must admit is not very high.

What are the alternatives that face us in the matter of raising this revenue in any other way than the method we are doing?

If we were to impose a two per cent sales tax without any exemptions at all, and that is just simply tax everything, it would produce the amount of money that we require. It would reduce the difficulties of collection which arise the moment we introduce exemptions. The larger the exemptions, the more the collection difficulties increase. The larger the exemptions, the greater the economic distortions in buying habits and business procedures.

Sizeable exemptions mean that more efforts are made to buy piecemeal in order to avoid the payment of tax, and this practice is magnified because of the higher rate of tax that has to be imposed upon those items that are in turn taxed. If the tax could be kept at three per cent there would not be the same incentive to evasion as there would be if the tax were raised to nine per cent, as required if we were to carry out the recommendations of this bill.

The argument, of course, against a two per cent sales tax levied against all goods, is that such a tax would then apply on food and other necessities and would press particularly heavily on the small income group. It would adversely affect mass-produced articles and supplies which are presently exempt and are the foundation for agriculture and food processing, the construction trades and natural resource industries.

If the difference between the $150 million needed, and the $52 million which would be realized under the proposal of the hon. leader of the Opposition, namely, $98 million, is not to be raised—

An hon. member: Does the hon. Prime Minister believe that?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I certainly do, and I am prepared, as I have said already, to have an examination made of the figures just to find out really what we are talking about. This is a very, very serious matter, particularly when one considers the necessity for revenue that we have, and where we are presently putting the revenue that is coming from this tax.

In any event, if the $98 million is not to be raised by an increase in the sales tax to nine per cent on taxable items, or is not to be raised by a two per cent tax on all goods and just eliminate all exemptions and remove all of these difficulties about which the hon. member speaks, then how would we raise it? Well, if he read the statement that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) gave in this House last March, and I will summarize them a little bit, he will get the answer to that.

To raise $98 million by way of personal income tax would involve increasing the rates of personal income tax across the board by at least ten percentage points of federal tax. This would be, I think hon. members would all admit, quite a staggering increase. And I will ask all hon. members if it would be conducive to development in this province to raise our personal income tax by 10 or 11 percentage points at this time.

If the revenue were to be raised by increased corporation tax, I would ask all hon. members to remember that the combined federal-provincial corporation tax in Ontario is now 52 per cent, and this is two per cent above that in several other provinces of Canada. To raise the deficiency of $98 million, which would result from what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has proposed, would mean increasing corporation taxes by an additional seven per cent, bringing the rate to 59 per cent in Ontario.

As anybody knows, and this has been mentioned by several hon. members of the Opposition at one time or another since the House opened, this would curb expansion in our province. It would be a complete impediment to development, and would be a barrier to employment for which we must strive in this province if we are going to succeed in the objectives we have set ourselves. In other words, such a proposal is completely absurd and is not to be considered.

Some people have talked about increasing the charges and the taxes for liquor. Last year we realized about $80 million from the sale of alcoholic beverages, and I ask once again what the imposition of an additional $98 million would mean to liquor prices. It would be completely out of the question to obtain more than a fraction of what the province needs in revenue from liquor sales, for the reason that such sales are very sensitive to price change and the consumption habits of people can be very easily altered. A few cents a bottle extra can bring into play the law of diminishing returns; and if we ever attempted to increase our revenue in that field by any sizeable amount of the $98 million it would be once again completely ridiculous.

Another suggestion that we hear is that we increase our tax on natural resources. I am sure that this would not appeal to the Opposition, who have asserted time and time again that the taxes on natural resources in the province are already too high. Today we are deriving $36 million from natural resources by way of special taxes. It is only sufficient for me to ask what would happen if we were to levy taxes of an additional $98 million or any considerable portion thereof in this area, and this will demonstrate of course how absurd this suggestion is.

There is another alternative which the Opposition, when in power, used to resort to, namely, that of letting real estate and the municipalities shoulder the burdens. We can reduce school grants and we can forego the increases I have outlined earlier this afternoon. It would be simple to cast another $98 million on the home and farm owner but, I ask, is there any hon. member of this assembly who would consider this expedient with any degree of seriousness at all?

Mr. Whicher: This is the biggest, dreamiest speech I have ever heard.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member has not listened to much of it then.

I think I have very briefly outlined the problems to be met and the methods available to us to meet them. It is all very well to make irresponsible assertions but I would point out that money does not come out of a pump.

We are faced with certain essential requirements on education from the primary to the university level. In the matter of health, we have certain demands made upon us and the sum of $150 million which I mention has to be obtained from some source if we are going to do our job in this province. There is no point in calling this a magic figure and hoping that we can do it with 98 or 105 or any other figure.,

No tax is popular but the sales tax which was introduced in this House this year places Ontario, as I have stated, as one of eight Canadian provinces and one of 40 American states that have this tax.

Our rate of tax, three per cent, is now the lowest in Canada. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland all have a tax which exceeds this. Exemptions in Ontario are now the widest and most generous not only in Canada but in North America. These exemptions—and we realize this—these exemptions increase the difficulties of collection because if hon. members remove the exemptions they remove all the difficulties with collection. But the headaches of the retailer are nothing now as compared with what they would be with the increase of the exemptions as proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Now I would like to say something somewhat personal as leader of the government. This is a new job as far as I am concerned but I am prepared, with an open mind, to consider any proposal for providing the money to finance this province—that is any proposal I believe to be consistent with common sense and will provide the money to assist in the development and expansion of Ontario's human and material resources.

An examination of this proposal leads me to only one conclusion—that it is completely impracticable. For the Opposition which has pointed to increasing debt in Ontario, which has called loudly for further expenditures, which has advocated a sales tax for whatever reason in the past, it would simply mean that the hon. Provincial Treasurer would have nearly $100 million less money than he needs as a bare minimum.

The only alternatives would be either to resort to a much higher and more unpleasant income tax, or increase our combined federal-provincial corporation tax in Ontario, which is now 52 per cent, or the alternative is to cut grants to the public, separate and secondary schools in the province, reduce our health services, reduce our welfare services or our highway services. Now these are the alternatives and they are indeed relatively simple.

Actually what we need in Canada is a thorough investigation and review of our whole Canadian tax structure and the adoption in concert between the provinces and the federal government of some measures aimed at removing discrimination and unfairness which can dwarf our country's competitive position.

For myself and the government which I lead, I am prepared as a Canadian to confer with the federal government and the governments of the other Canadian provinces in arriving at fair and equitable solutions of these taxation problems which not only can impair our competitive position but, as well, dwarf the development of our country. This is a big job for us all and one to which this government is prepared to devote its utmost energies. I make this statement at this time as indicating our willingness to co-operate with all of Canada and all other governments in providing the unity of action needed by our country in this period of great competition and at the same time this period of great opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I protest this is a violation of the rules of this House. My hon. colleague was up before the hon. Prime Minister rose. Now I did not object when you called the hon. Prime Minister to speak, because he is the leader of this House and therefore if you would choose him over another hon. member, fine. But that he should move the adjournment of the debate and we should not have an opportunity to express our views, I say is a gross violation of the rights of a group in this House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, since I am personally involved, I would call your attention to the fact that I was on my feet well before the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) after the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) sat down, that under the rules of the House all hon. members are equal as far as their right to participate in debate is concerned. The rules apply equally to all.

I was quite happy to defer to the government leader, the hon. Prime Minister, when he indicated a desire to speak, but it is in my opinion, sir, a shabby trick for him to take advantage of my courtesy in the matter to gag me so that this group cannot say anything in this important debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there was no intent on my part to gag the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), but as I said in the beginning, this is a private member's public bill. We had certain recommendations made last year that these should be called. I said last night that I would call the bill but I did not call it for a full debate. There is nothing that has been discussed this afternoon in reference to this bill that cannot be discussed completely in the budget debate, this whole matter can—

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the hon. Prime Minister bring it up this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I brought it up this afternoon because I am following a procedure. If the hon. member wants to hear why I did it, I will tell him. If he wants to interrupt me, I will sit down, and not tell him. But I called it because it is a private member's public bill and it will be my intention to call several of these. I said this before the hon. leader of the Opposition started to speak. These bills can be called and can be debated and then they can be recalled—they go back on the order paper—but they are not going to be put in here and forced eventually to a vote as a government bill is done. This is usual procedure in any parliament. And I told the House this is what I was going to do before I started.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister should rise and say that the usual procedure in any parliament is to deny one group in the House the opportunity to express its views is just utterly ludicrous. This is a closure. Mr. Speaker, if we could have spoken on another occasion so could everybody else on another occasion and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that since the hon. member (Mr. Bryden) was on his feet ahead of the hon. Prime Minister, he has the right to speak. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it is your obligation to protect his right to speak.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker has noted all the remarks from the hon. members, the booing and everything, and keeping in mind, of course, that this motion does not necessarily close off the debate. Since I have a motion before the House at this point I have nothing to do but put the motion.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister moves the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have no alternative but to call for a division on this and I hope that in protection of the rights of the Opposition that I can get the Liberal Opposition to support me because this is a basic issue that has nothing to do with the merits of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Will those members in favour of the motion please say "aye." As many as are opposed please say "nay." The "ayes" have it

I declare the motion carried.

THE MILK INDUSTRY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 48, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

On section 1:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, before you carry that section, I understand that the Verner and Sudbury people are not too happy with the differential. They want it to remain as it is; but, as in everything, the majority rules and they just wanted me to put that on record.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that section 18 of The Milk Industry Act as contained in section 2 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Where one of the objects of a co-operative corporation to which part 5 of The Corporations Act applies is to engage in the transportation of milk and the board issues a certificate to the Minister of Transport that more than three-quarters of the shareholders or members of the corporation are producers supplying milk to one or more plants in a municipality, no operating licence under The Public Commercial Vehicles Act is required by the corporation for the purpose of transporting such milk.

Subsection 2: The board may after a hearing revoke the certificate issued under subsection 1, and shall give notice of the revocation to the Minister of Transport.

Subsection 3: Every certificate heretofore issued by the board or by any predecessor thereof under the authority of this section or any predecessor thereof expires 90 days after this Act comes into force.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill No. 48, reported.

NOTICES OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 1, by hon. W. K. Warrender,

Resolved, that the members of the Ontario Safety Council may be paid remuneration and expenses at such rates as are determined by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and the amounts thereof shall, until the 31st day of March, 1962, be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided by Bill No. 39, An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

And notice of motion No. 2,

Resolved, that an income tax shall be paid for each of the 1962 to 1966 taxation years, inclusive, by every individual who was resident in or had income earned in Ontario, being the percentage of the tax payable under The Income Tax Act (Canada) as follows:

- (a) 16 per cent in respect of the 1962 taxation year;
- (b) 17 per cent in respect of the 1963 taxation year;
- (c) 18 per cent in respect of the 1964 taxation year;
- (d) 19 per cent in respect of the 1965 taxation year; and
- (e) 20 per cent in respect of the 1966 taxation year;

as provided by Bill No. 43, The Income Tax Act, 1961-62.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I beg to inform the House that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor having been informed of the subject matter of the proposed resolutions, recommends them to the consideration of the House.

Resolutions concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of the whole House rise, and report that it has come to certain resolutions, certain bills without amendment, certain bills with certain amendments and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain resolutions, certain bills without amendment, certain bills with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, last night when I was interrupted by the hour of six o'clock, I was about to go into the discussion of what has been well discussed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) here this afternoon—the Wintermeyer plan for exempting all purchases of $25 and under, insofar as they are affected by the Ontario retail sales tax.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that while the hon. Prime Minister very sincerely said this afternoon that he had not had the opportunity of seeing this plan, and the estimate of the Ontario sales tax revenue under the Liberal plan, until this afternoon, nevertheless I have had the opportunity of examining this document; and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that, after spending many hours of consideration on these figures, as far as I am concerned they are completely, absolutely and 100 per cent correct, and that if he brings his experts in to discuss these matters with our experts he will find that the premise on which he gave his speech this afternoon was completely wrong, and factually completely irresponsible.

This afternoon the hon. Prime Minister said, for example, that if he exempted sales of under $25 people who were buying a television set might go in and buy tubes and then they might buy the casing separately, etc. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this is completely nonsensical and has no semblance of factuality at all.

It is just common sense to know that when one is going to buy an automobile, one is not going to buy one wheel today and one wheel tomorrow. The automobile is bought as a whole. It is with this simple approach that we in the Liberal party, under the leadership of our hon. leader, have devised this plan which we believe would eliminate a great deal of the time and effort it is taking many of our small business men in the province of Ontario today.

For example, Mr. Speaker, while the hon. Prime Minister was unwilling to talk about this plan as we presented it, I bring to your attention the fact that the majority of taxes collected under the Conservative plan for collecting sales tax comes from the construction and housing industry, the machinery and equipment industry, the liquor tax, the cigarette tax, the meals and the telephone tax.

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) after being away for several days, no doubt busy with public affairs, said this afternoon that we objected to the tax on telephones last year. That is absolutely correct; we did object to the three per cent sales tax on telephones. But we said that instead of having it on ordinary expenditure it should have been put on long-distance calls.

However, our experts, in discussing this matter with them, say there would be a considerable amount of work in doing this. For this reason we have left in our plan the three per cent tax on telephones, as on page 1 of the estimate that is on every hon. member's desk at the present time.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question about that?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, I would.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am a little confused by the list as to whether this is telephone calls, or whether it is on the service charge of the telephone company for the rental of the equipment during the month.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members will see, at the present time under the Conservative plan the government is collecting $4.5 million in sales tax. We will collect exactly the same amount. I am sure that will answer the question. There will be no change; it will be exactly the same.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Let us be fair about it. I am just trying to clarify your position. I do not know whether this is telephone calls. The hon. member is talking about telephone calls but I do not think the Act does provide a tax on telephone calls, but simply on the service charge. That is my first point. Is this not correct?

The second point is that most telephone service charges are under $25, and I do not think you can compare these.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. Minister has said is quite correct; but we are saying that we will exempt everything under $25, with the exception of telephone calls, with the exception of the tax on cigarettes, with the exception of the tax on liquor and on meals for $1.50 and more. I am sure that will answer the question.

As far as we are concerned, and I say this to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in absolute sincerity, and with factuality, we will not be changing the amount of tax that we collect from telephones by one single copper. We will take exactly, as his experts tell him, $4.5 million on telephones in the year when we get in next.

The housing and construction industry. Mr. Speaker, the facts are this: under the Conservative plan at the present time there will be—and these are government figures—there will be taxable amounts of $900 million in the construction industry for the next 12 months. At three per cent on $900 million, you will collect $27 million in taxes. Mr. Speaker, we will collect exactly $27 million too because all this construction and housing amounts are amounts of $25 and over and therefore we will collect $27 million.

In machinery and equipment, according to government figures, there will $450 million spent which will be taxable in the next 12 months. We will collect exactly the same amount, which according to the government's own figures are $13.5 million, which together with the extension of liquor, meals, telephone and tobacco, brings in a total of $94 million in taxes under a sales tax with figures that are identical to the government's.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. Prime Minister, I say to him how could he sincerely stand up in the House this afternoon and not only attempt to lead the hon. members of this House astray, but the newspapers and the people of this province, when he says that we would only collect $52 million, while in reality we are collecting—from those amounts themselves which are identical to the Conservative plan—$94 million. If these are not misstatements then I do not know what misstatements are. Not only did he attempt to mislead the public, but as the leader of the government in this province, he showed complete irresponsibility in bringing forth figures like he did this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, we are collecting $40 million in the construction and machinery and equipment industry. We are collecting $40 million from that, $28 million from the automobile, furniture and appliance industries.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If the hon. member would look at Bill No. 47—let us straighten this out. Bill No. 47 says that he is not going to tax anything under $25. Then he talks about meals at $1.50, liquor, bottled beer and tobacco and tobacco products. Now, he does not exempt, therefore, telephone calls, does he?

Mr. Whicher: No.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Therefore, they are taxable. But all of them are under $25, so how can you tax them?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The bill was drawn with great care.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker: the point is that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), whom all of us respect in this House for his natural ability, has not been in this House for the last three days and has lost contact, and for the first time in my life I must say in a kindly way that he is slightly confused. Not as confused, I must say, as the hon. Prime Minister was this afternoon, because he was very much confused.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, but the hon. member has not answered the question.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): No, he has not answered it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if he is not confused, let him answer it.

Mr. Whicher: Well, as a matter of fact, I am not the least bit confused. I have not got the Act in front of me, I have our own statement, which is absolutely correct.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Here, give the hon. member a copy of the Act.

Mr. Whicher: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to carry on a little bit further. Inasmuch as it is definitely proven by figures that are compiled by, I assure the hon. Prime Minister, by experts we are collecting $94 million without changing the situation whatsoever, is it not reasonable to presume that we can collect another $21 million from the many other things that will be taxed that are not under the construction industry, the housing industry, the automobile, furniture and appliance industries?

First, I put jewellery, we have not even mentioned that. We say, on page 1 of our submission, that in clothing and jewellery under your plan you will collect $11.7 million, and under our plan we will collect $4.8 million.

Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that when a person goes in a jewellery store and buys a $1 item he makes a lot of work for the jeweller in collecting this tax and an inconvenience for the man paying the tax? Is it not true that if a person goes in and buys a $2,500 ring that the jeweller collects just as much tax under our plan as he would in 2,500 different entries of $1 apiece under the government's plan?

Mr. Speaker, is it not true that such things as diamond rings are all over $25, such things as watches—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, no. Not all of them.

Mr. Whicher: A great many of them. I might say that all those people who ran for the leadership campaign, according to what they spent, have watches worth far more than $25. And I might say that all their wives did the same with diamonds—a girl's best friend.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister was sincere—I give him credit for this much anyway—he said that he would let his experts talk to us. We will certainly welcome that and we say that by bringing in this sensible plan that we will be bringing a little bit of order to the small business people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister said that if you had exemptions you would increase cost. Well, now, under our plan 75 per cent of those businessmen in the province of Ontario who are affected by the retail sales tax would have nothing whatsoever to do with it any more. To me it is a ridiculous situation when the leader of a province stands up and gives such an irresponsible address as he did this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege, the hon. member says in one breath that I am prepared to let our experts get together on these figures to find out who is right, and in the other breath he says I am irresponsible. Now, the two things do not jibe. I am quite prepared to submit computations on these figures to examination. I have made this offer. As a matter of personal privilege I do not see where any irresponsibility comes in. I could say the same thing about the hon. member's speech.

An hon. member: The hon. Prime Minister did.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: If I did, I apologize.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, what I did say to the hon. members of this House was that the hon. Prime Minister was half responsible, he was half right this afternoon, sincere in one place.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that there will be other things said about this tax, and as far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to take the word of the hon. Prime Minister that he will allow his experts to sit down with ours and examine this situation. I assure him that the small businessmen who are compiling this tax every month to send in a few cents or a few dollars to the hon. Treasurer will be frankly relieved if he does allow this to proceed to its proper conclusion.

Yesterday, I said that in spite of the fact that we have a sales tax of $150 million this year, the province of Ontario, according to the hon. Treasurer's own figures, is going into an additional deficit of $180 million this year. To us on this side of the House this is a startling revelation that was given to us in the budget speech last year.

We remind you, Mr. Speaker, that this year out of the revenues of the province of Ontario $45 million are going for the payment of interest on the public debt alone. We remind the hon. members of this House, Mr. Speaker, that in the time of a former Prime Minister of this House, that great leader the hon. Mitchell Hepburn, that the budget of this province was only twice what the interest now costs you.

We are worried because of the fact that with your deficit budgeting this year there is going to be a further $9 million increase in the interest paid this year. In other words, if you are paying $45 million this year for interest, next year you will be paying $54 million.

Our question, Mr. Speaker, is simply this. Where is this going to end? When are you going to bring in to us a sensible plan that is used by successful businesses in the province of Ontario and indeed throughout the world? You cannot go on continually spending without knowing some time when you are going to be able to reduce this great debt that is around our necks and will be a great mortgage on our children and on our grandchildren in years to come.

We are very, very sincere in this observation. For example, the other day in the committee on energy which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) did not have the opportunity of attending, we pointed out that while we appreciated the fact that over the last 50 years Hydro has done a great job in providing lights and electricity to the people of the province of Ontario, nevertheless when you consider the fact that at the present time they owe $1.75 billion to the people of this province and to bond holders scattered all over this continent, that they only have perhaps $2 billion plus in assets, we appreciate that great burden and a great tax to the people of this province when they have to pay the interest on this debt.

And so great is this interest and so much of the expenses of this government and of Hydro have gone up, that we are gradually pricing ourselves out of the market.

The other day in the energy committee my hon. colleague from Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) told the story that at least two industries in this province have moved out and did not establish themselves here because of the fact that Ontario Hydro was not able to give a comparable rate to the hydro cost offered by our sister province of Quebec.

An hon. member: Was that the only reason?

Mr. Whicher: That was the reason that was given to us. To us, Mr. Speaker, this is a startling revelation and while appreciating the fact that there are many things that come into the development of such a great organization as the province of Ontario or as Ontario Hydro, nevertheless we are worried that these costs have gradually got out of hand and that the government opposite has done nothing about it whatsoever.

I might compare, for example, the debt of Ontario Hydro, comparing it to its assets, to something like this. They have approximate assets of $2 billion and approximate gross debts of $1.75 billion. I might compare it to a small business man, or this would be a medium sized business man, I think, who had a business worth $100,000 and who owed $87,500 as opposed to the $100,000. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that no businessman could go to the banks or to the bonding organizations and get this amount of money when he only had assets of $100,000. I suggest that this has gone too far and that this government should show leadership and do something about these things.

I am not going to take much longer but I just want to mention this point. Very shortly in this province, we are going to have five by-elections. In these by-elections I have an idea what the hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues are going to say. They are going to go into these constituencies and they are going to make what is known as "election promises". There is no question about it whatsoever. They have been making election promises for the last 16 or 17 years.

An hon. member: 20 years!

Mr. A. Johnson (Parry Sound): And we are going to make them good.

Mr. Whicher: Inasmuch as they are the government in power, people have a tendency to believe that perhaps they might be able to put up some big building if their member was elected—or perhaps they might be able to build a road through this certain constituency. But I want, Mr. Speaker, the people who are affected in these by-elections to remember some of the past records—remember that they promised, as far as roads are concerned, that highway 401 was going to be completed in a certain number of years, and it has not been finished yet.

I want to remind the people in areas like Owen Sound that the government promised a hospital there 10 years ago and only now have they started to build it. These things take a great deal of time, but I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, one thing that we will promise the people in these constituencies if they elect a Tory government. We promise them this much—that inasmuch as they have gotten this country into such a financial mess—inasmuch as at the present time they owe over one billion dollars in net debt in this province—we can promise that under a Tory regime the people will get nothing but higher taxes.

Mr. Speaker, two years ago in the budget debate I prophesied to this House that the Conservative government would bring in a sales tax last year—which they did. I now prophesy, Mr. Speaker, that if a Conservative government is still in power in the next year or two years, and certainly five years, that the sales tax will be increased from 3 to 5 per cent—and if they are honest, they will admit it.

I further prophesy that inasmuch as financial houses are going to force this government to bring their financial affairs into a state of order—that inasmuch as in spite of a sales tax, they are going in debt this year to the tune of $180 million—they will bring in a provincial income tax. Because unless the government brings some economy and efficiency into the departments, the government is going to be forced to do it because the banking houses are not going to keep up loaning the money forever.

Our highway system in this province is at least five years behind the times—here, for example, they built highway 401 to go around the city of Toronto and today—where is it? It is right through the city.

Your highways are at least five years behind the times! Therefore, I prophesy that the gasoline tax will be increased very shortly if this government remains in power.

These are the things that I can actually promise the people who are affected by these by-elections if the Conservative government remains in power.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Let the hon. member promise them what he will do.

Mr. Whicher: I will tell the hon. member what we will do, Mr. Speaker. All you have to do is look what happened in Ottawa. The difference between a Tory and a Liberal government is this: we promised to give responsible government and to balance the budget. Perhaps I might be taking words out of my federal colleagues' mouths now—we promise that we are not going to allow people to continually draw money from the unemployment insurance fund just for the sake of getting votes—for example, ladies who happen to be pregnant drawing money out of this fund for months and months and months, when they are unable to work. It is not a pension fund.

We promise that we are not going to allow people to draw hundreds of millions of dollars out of this fund. When our Liberal colleagues in Ottawa left there was $900 million in the fund. Now in spite of increased amounts that the employee and the employer have put into the fund, you have only $150 million left.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we promise responsible actions. Not only, I would say, from we who are privileged at the present time to sit in the Opposition, but once again when the Liberal government is returned to Ottawa, a responsible government there—that will bring this country from the lackadaisical manner in which we are doing business today to once again bringing it to one of the forward countries of the world.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, once again it is my privilege to compliment you on the fair and able manner in which you conduct your very responsible position.

Many times the exuberance, or whatever you may call it, of quite a few hon. members of this House, would try the patience of Job. Therefore, it is quite apparent you have more patience than that historical figure. Because very quickly you put out the fires of over-enthusiasm and restore order once again to this august body.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): When did Job take part in this debate?

Mr. Lewis: Oh, we have everybody on our side of the House.

An hon. member: He thinks the Tories are divine now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just over a year ago I had the honour to be appointed by the administration as a member of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

In the intervening months I have been able to observe and to take some part in the operation of this huge enterprise and more especially to participate with other members of the commission in deciding matters of policy.

Needless to say, I was impressed with the work accomplished by the commission and with the immensity of the day-to-day duties which it is carrying on.

The commission has two basic responsibilities: (a) to ensure the development throughout Ontario of a balanced and integrated system of hospitals and related health facilities, and (b) to operate the Ontario hospital insurance plan which now serves over 95 per cent of the people of Ontario.

It is a matter of pride to me to be associated with a government body which is conducted with such high standards and businesslike efficiency.

One cannot help but observe the fund of information presented to the commission by the management concerned with any hospital building project. Indeed, this occurs with respect to any other item brought up for approval. Each item is discussed with care by the members of the commission before decision is made.

There is often criticism of governments and of government commissions as to the conduct of their affairs but I can assure the Legislature and the people of Ontario, that they may be confident as to the job which is being done for them by the commission and by its very substantial body of employees.

As so many members of this House are aware, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is currently conducting a business handling over $200 million a year. Most of us here are of limited means, and figures of this size make little impact. However, I might mention that this sum is twice the cost of running the affairs of the entire province a couple of decades ago.

Our estimate is that well over one million hospital patients will have their bills paid under the insurance plan, the total cost of which will be about $224.5 million.

For 1962 our estimate is that the cost will reach $263.8 million.

These accounts do not include cost of the province for patient care in tuberculosis sanatoria and mental hospitals. These services are also available without cost to insured persons but they are not included in the figures I quoted, because they are paid for out of a separate fund.

The true value of the work being accomplished by the commission goes far beyond the actual dollars paid out for hospital care. I refer, of course, to the tremendous peace of mind which is given to every insured person and family.

The elimination of the staggering and catastrophic hospital expenses, which otherwise could be a burden on the backs of so many of our citizens who require prolonged hospital care and treatment, cannot be measured as to peace of mind.

Every month more than 90,000 people of this province have their hospital bills paid under the Ontario hospital insurance plan. These figures represent twice the population of a good many middle-sized cities in the Dominion of Canada. Some of the bills run into thousands of dollars but that is one of the reasons why we have the plan.

The commission is not content to permit the scope of the hospital insurance plan to remain static. For instance, in an effort to see what value there may be in discharging certain patients earlier and completing their treatment at home, the commission is participating in a pilot plan of post-hospital home care. This is being carried on in Metropolitan Toronto. When this two-year experiment is completed, the results will point the direction towards which the commission should go regarding insurance benefits for such home care.

As another step toward making the best possible use of our in-patient hospital beds, the commission has applied for legislation to allow it to provide hospital insurance benefits to cover the hospital charges for certain conditions which can be treated on a short stay basis, and when such treatment would make it unnecessary for the patient to be admitted to hospital and remain overnight. Other such improvements will undoubtedly be made from time to time.

Hospital insurance is but one of the responsibilities of the commission. A very thorough job of analyzing the province's needs for hospital beds is under way. The commission studies not only how many beds but what kind and where.

I scarcely need add that this involves a continuing and detailed programme of research and consultation so that an educated approach may be taken to the various problems.

Thus, we are trying to determine that the right bed will be in the right place and that the right patient will be in the right bed.

The commission is conscious of the need to have our hospital beds properly distributed. Our aim is to ensure that active treatment beds are occupied by patients requiring active treatment. They should not be occupied by patients who should be in hospitals for the chronically ill.

Again, active treatment beds should not be a form of accommodation which is equally well supplied in homes for the aged. Hospital construction is not a mere matter of providing more beds. The hospital bed must have behind it all the scientific facilities along with a highly trained personnel required to make it an effective instrument of healing.

I might interject my opinion that if the province had an adequate supply of what we term domiciliary accommodation such as is found in homes for the aged, the commission's job would be made much easier and there would be a saving of millions of dollars of the people's money.

Perhaps here I should say that there has been during the life of this government an immense improvement in the quantity and the quality of accommodation in our homes for the aged. This has been made possible by the generous scale of grants provided federally and provincially.

At the end of 1960, Ontario had a rated hospital bed capacity of 37,835 or 6.2 per 1,000 of population. My information is that 6.25 to 6.5 beds per thousand of population is an adequate standard on the average throughout the community. Our problems arise in the distribution of beds mainly in large centres such as Metropolitan Toronto. In this huge Metropolitan area we have experienced a tremendous local population explosion resulting in a local shortage of hospital beds.

Over the past 12 or 13 months I have learned with emphasis what I already knew, namely, that health care is costly. The commission has numerous specialized consulting services. It has a rate board which is very cost conscious. It is, I can assure you, doing everything possible to control the cost of hospital care in Ontario. Yet there are certain increases which are inevitable. These are not new nor are they confined to Ontario. They have been in evidence for over a decade and a half throughout Canada, the United States and elsewhere.

I shall not weary you with detail, but I would say that hospitals, like industries, and perhaps in greater degree, have been paying more and more throughout the years for nearly everything they buy. It may be supplies, drugs or labour, but the cost trend has been steadily upward.

It must be remembered that close to 70 per cent of the cost of operating hospitals is in salaries and wages. For many years the hospital industry, if I may term it that, was very much behind general industry in the wages it paid. Now, however, hospitals are catching up and the rates of pay have almost reached parity with the wages of other similar employers in the community.

It is natural enough that everyone would like to see the day that the cost of all types of health care could be paid out of some huge gold-filled bottomless barrel. This would indeed usher in a Utopia of health care for the people of this province.

However, I must join in the cautioning remarks of our esteemed former Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) when he officially opened the Ontario Hospital Services Commission headquarters building. On this occasion he said in profound truth—"Money does not grow on trees."

There are definite limits to what we can afford in the field of public welfare. No province, I think, has done more than Ontario to see that state assistance is made available in whatsoever form to those who temporarily or permanently need state assistance. We pay for or participate in paying for old age assistance, pensions for the blind, allowances for dependent mothers and children, allowances for unemployables, and we also give on an unprecedented scale for the operation of homes for the aged.

There are limits to what the economy will stand in this direction and there are limits to what the people are willing to pay.

In the past decade or two, we have launched and we are paying for generous welfare measures and we must be careful about rushing too far and too fast into new fields of state assistance however worthy they may be.

We have, I think, a wonderful thing going for the people of Ontario in the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. We must keep an open mind toward the idea of greater health protection for the people of this province. Yet we must take careful thought, as I see it, before we commit the people to greater protection. However desirable it may be, we must not impose upon the tax-paying public a burden beyond their limit to bear.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say "30" to this rather short address, and through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. members for their attention.

One more item, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of the festive season, fast approaching, I would suggest to all my hon. friends in the Opposition that they remove from their hearts that satanic reprobate, "Old Nick" and replace him with that "Friendly old soul, Saint Nick"—so that they may enjoy a very merry Christmas and come back to this House in the new year, refreshed, and more able to do battle with this great group, the Tory government of the province of Ontario, Canada's banner province.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make some remarks in the speech from the Throne debate, I would indeed be remiss in my duty if I did not offer my congratulations to you in the way that you have performed the duties of your office. I know, of course, from past experiences, that it is trying at times to be impartial, but we on this side of the House feel, sir, that you have made every effort to be impartial and for that we congratulate you and are willing, of course, to bow to your ruling, whatever that ruling may be, because we know that from you will not come any unjust rulings.

In commencing my remarks this afternoon I should, of course, pay some attention to the happenings of recent months that have changed the landscape on the other side of the House. These events seem to cry out for some comment, perhaps some satire, perhaps just comment unvarnished.

I was thinking as I listened to some of the government speakers that sometimes change is not for the better; one cannot always count on it. So far as the government is concerned, I am reminded very much of the man who vacated the chair of the Prime Minister of the province. It had to be vacated before this event took place.

He was a very shrewd leader of government in this province for a great many years. One thing that he always seemed to have on his side, and working for him, was time. Many of his great moves were almost timed to the second, one would think.

Sometimes we thought he was lucky, other times of course that he was deliberate in guessing the correct time. But whatever be the reason, he had the faculty of picking the best time possible for the major events of his political career. So far as elections were concerned, and by-elections, he was a master of timing. That much we have to say for him, even though begrudgingly, we have to say he was a master at timing right up to the last.

I think his last great exhibition of proper timing was when he resigned as leader of the government. That just goes to show what a master timer he was. He had gone along as long as he could, and he had reached the place where the clouds were gathering on the horizon—visible signs of disunity that even he could no longer control. So in the true spirit of the laird of Lindsay, he once more timed it accurately and resigned.

I often wonder about a certain statement that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) made when he was being pressed to call two by-elections in the city of Toronto, two seats that had become vacant by the deaths of members. He made what I thought was the most astonishing excuse for not calling these by-elections. He said that he would not call the by-elections until a redistribution of the metropolitan seats had taken place. That was not like the hon. member for Victoria; and one, at that time, could read of the intentions he had in mind. The reason he made that statement, of course, was that he knew he was going to resign and he knew that it would take him over the time when he would have to call a by-election.

The timing of this last great political act was so accurate that he who runs may read. It is not difficult to qualify that as a great act of good timing.

I am reminded—and I had the opportunity to look back in the pages of history and find other examples of good timing, particularly on the part of Tory prime ministers. I remember back in the early 1930's another example of good timing, when the Tory prime minister of the day faced with obstacles that he could not overcome or control, relinquished the reins of leadership to Mr. Henry and allowed Mr. Henry to be the scapegoat and to be the filler-in until the avalanche would come—as the avalanche did come, of course, in 1934. History has a habit of repeating itself, and an exact replica of what happened in 1934 is about to happen in this government.

The “laird from Lindsay”, a great politician if ever there was one, resigned when he knew that the going was getting tough; and he put in his place, or there was put in his place—let us be fair about that—a young inexperienced man to carry the brunt of battle over the most difficult of times. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is serving in exactly the same position and for exactly the same purposes and to exactly the same end as Mr. Henry served prior to 1934.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): They have not got a Hepburn.

Mr. Oliver: Our excitable doctor from the hinterlands of Ontario county is going to have the opportunity of speaking in a few moments and he can make his speech then.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, but the Opposition has not got a Mitch.

Mr. Oliver: If the government had a Mitch here now I would not feel so certain of its doom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Oliver: This is an opportunity to make some comments on this situation, and I want to be as charitable as ever I can be.

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): For a long time, eh?

Mr. Oliver: Yes, more charitable perhaps than I have been for a long time. But I want to say—and this is a considered judgment, it is an opinion that has been weighed and then weighed again—that when one looks at the picture across the way, there is not any sign of improvement.

I remember one time when we had an implement of production on the farm and it was almost worn out, and so the hired man said, “We will get a new piece to put on this machine.” He thought it would be the economical thing to do. Well, we found out in our experience that the new piece would not fit at all on the old machine and it was just a complete wastage of money. And it will be a complete wastage of whatever talents my hon. friend possesses to try to mix them in with the lack of talent that is so apparent on the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk for a while this afternoon on the subject of agriculture. It is not a strange subject for me to talk on and I think we are at a time when some plain talking needs to be done about the industry of agriculture. I say quite frankly that I think agriculture today stands at the crossroads, and it depends on whether the government appreciates that position, whether they will go on to their proper destiny or whether they will go backwards in this province.

There is the thought in the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) this afternoon, and I enjoyed the remarks that he made, perfectly timed as they were, not earth-shaking by any sense or any stretch of the imagination but timed to meet a particular situation. The only trouble was that the ingredients of that speech were not such as would meet any situation. It was merely a recital of normal and ordinary change within the departmental set-up itself.

He told us this afternoon that Dr. Graham had retired. All of us in this House, irrespective of which side of the House we sit on, are, I think, indeed grateful to Dr. Graham for the contribution that he made over the years in the cause of agriculture. We regret that he is being retired and we hope that the one who takes his place, Mr. Biggs, will live up to the fine example, fine standard of service, that was rendered by Dr. Graham.

But what I wanted to point out to the hon. Minister was that in his remarks this afternoon he simply gave notice of a shake-up within the department itself, a change in the departmental structure, a reshuffling of departmental personnel. That is not what the farmers want in this province from this government; that is not what they have a right to expect, even from this Tory administration. They are not going to be satisfied with a shuffling of administrative posts. What they are demanding, and what they have a right to expect, is the emanation of new policies coming out of The Department of Agriculture that will meet the needs of Ontario farmers.

In my hon. friend's statement this afternoon there was no evidence of new policy, none whatever. It was simply a reshuffling of what had gone on and a re-arranging of the personnel within the department. No indication fell from the lips of my hon. friend as to what he was going to do to meet the perplexing problems that the farmers have—no intimation at all, just as there has never been any intimation from his predecessor as how to meet the crucial farm problems in Ontario.

I am going to elaborate, perhaps at some length, this afternoon to show what, in my judgment, are some of the main problems facing agriculture; and I hope to be able to show that the government has been lax, very lax indeed, in coming to grips with these problems and in presenting a solution thereto.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister would allow me, to adjourn the debate at this time, if he does not mind. I wanted to start on the main part of my remarks now, but it is almost 5.50 o'clock.

Mr. Oliver moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, I do now leave the chair and will resume at 8 p.m.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, when you recognized the time of six o'clock, I was trying to bring my thoughts together to embark on the body of my speech. I want to say to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that it was very courteous on his part to recognize that a quarter to six was really six; it helped me a lot because I did not know that I was coming on so soon and I did not have my speech ready. The dinner recess has provided me with the opportunity of preparing in detail a consolidated attack upon the government, particularly in relation to their agricultural policy—or their lack of agricultural policy.

Mr. Speaker, I have no apology for devoting the major part—in fact all of my remarks—toward the plight of the agricultural industry, because all of us have seen in the papers these last few weeks that the net income of the man who toils on the farm is less now than it has ever been. It is perhaps no more than a coincidence that the time when these figures are true, is the one and same time when there is a Tory government in Ontario, and another one at Ottawa. I am not suggesting at the moment that there is more than mere coincidence to the fact. But it so happens that it is true. If the Tory government here and at Ottawa want to regain a measure of farm support in this province—and in the Dominion as a whole—they will have to revamp, revitalize and rearrange their agricultural policy so that it becomes more in harmony with the needs of the people who live on the farms.

In my argument tonight I want to list a number of factors which, I think, provide the answer to what is the trouble with the agricultural industry. It is true that the people who live on the farms are less by far in numbers than they were 10, 15 or 20 years ago. It is true the economists say that, as the years weld into one another, the numbers of these people will become even less. But it is nevertheless true, in spite of that assertion, that those who toil the good acres of this province still produce as much, or more of agricultural wealth—and consequently of provincial wealth—than when their numbers were twice as many as they are now. The position of the farmer—though he be less in number than in years gone by—in relation to the provincial economy and the contribution that he makes to provincial revenues, is greater now than it ever was. We want to be sure that, in dealing with the farm problem, we have those important factors in mind. Sometimes I think we are prone to think that because the number of farmers are growing less, therefore his influence in the provincial sphere or in the national sphere, decreases with the decrease in numbers of farmers. That, of course, is quite untrue. With technological advances the farmer is able to produce many times more than he did in the years gone by, so that fewer farmers are making a greater contribution to provincial economy and to provincial revenues.

Bearing that in mind, I want to trace—I do not know how long it will take me to trace it, but however long it takes, I want to employ that time to say to the House that, in my judgment we as provincial legislators, and the government in particular, are missing the main problem of agricultural people—and have failed miserably, I suggest—and I will reiterate that time and again as I go along—have failed miserably to meet, head on, the problems of the industry as such.

I want to start, Mr. Speaker, by reading the report of a meeting held in the Royal York hotel on Saturday, December 9. The heading of that report says: "Predicts Mass Failure of Broiler Producers". Hon. members who live in city ridings may not be immediately aware of what a broiler producer is, but when you go to the restaurants and see a special on the menu "Chicken at a very reasonable price," it is the result of the chaos that presently exists in the broiler industry.

This article is by Eldon Stonehouse and it says:

The president of the Ontario Egg Producers' Association predicted yesterday that 96 per cent of the province's broiler producers would go out of business during the coming year.

Not 10 or 20 per cent, but 96 per cent of the broiler producers would go out of business during the coming year.

Thomas Robson of Leamington, speaking at a members' meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture at the Royal York hotel, warned that this might be the last winter for a majority of the 1,000 broiler producers in this province. He predicted that, within a year, three or four per cent of the operators would be left to carry on.

Further, he warned, the invasion of the egg production field by vertical integrators was likely to bring similar dangers to farmers in this field.

He goes on to explain what he means by vertical integration, and I think, for the information of hon. members of the House who are other than farmers, it might be well if I read this chapter, which says:

Vertical integration refers to farm operations in which a firm or an individual provides livestock, feed and other material and pays the farmer a fee or a percentage of profits for his labour. It can also apply to vegetables and other production.

Mr. Robson, the president of the egg producers, went on to say that, in one case, a hatchery had provided hens, feed, veterinary care and everything but buildings and day-to-day labour. The farmer had cost of the flock and other items charged against his account, but the cheques for eggs went to the hatchery. "Yet," Mr. Robson said, "farmers have been convinced they could pay for their buildings in three years." He added, "That is absolute nonsense." And he further added:

If we get five or six of these operations going, we'll be out of business.

I want to pause there to make one or two observations in regard to the broiler industry, and draw one or two conclusions from the predicament in which these people find themselves. You hear it said—indeed, I think, perhaps some from The Department of Agriculture have said—that what we need in this province are larger operations with greater efficiency. Then the farmer will come out on top. Now surely, Mr. Speaker, in the broiler industry there were large operations and the greatest possible efficiency. There was a combination that, we sometimes say, leads to successful farming operation; a big operation and efficiency attendant on that operation.

Of course, these two ingredients have meant ruin to the broiler industry. I do not think anyone could argue that the size of the operation, plus the efficiency attached thereto, guarantees success to the agricultural people of this province. It really has very little to do with it.

The other thing I want to draw from reading that pamphlet is this: in one instance the hatchery supplied everything to the farmer, the farmer was simply a servant—a man who was doing labour for an outside large organization—in this instance the hatchery supplied everything. In other instances, the feed companies supply everything to the farmer. Now, this is a tendency that is growing up in our agricultural areas throughout this province.

Gradually—but as surely as we stand in this House tonight—the farmer is being shoved out of his legitimate field of production and into that field comes the sinister hand of the processor—the large operator.

I want hon. members to remember that as I move from this phase of my argument to another one.

That has to do with the canning industry in this province. I remember my hon. friend from Prince Edward county (Mr. Whitney) last year giving hon. members some idea of what is going on in the canning industry.

Not only is it going on in Prince Edward county and adjacent counties, it is going on in the Leamington and the Windsor area.

This is what is happening: for generations farmers in the Leamington, Windsor and Prince Edward county area have contracted with the canneries to supply the raw material for the product that they produce. They supply tomatoes by the ten-acre field and perhaps more. They contracted with the cannery to take those tomatoes and make them into canned tomatoes—put them in cans to serve on the consumer's table. They contracted with the processor for peas and for corn and for other vegetables.

Into this field today is coming what I consider to be a sinister influence. The canner himself is moving into the field of production and is buying the land which once was owned by men who supplied him with raw material. He is buying this farm and that one; after a plan, mind you, not in a haphazard way at all, but after a well defined pattern.

He is buying these fields from men and women who had tilled them for generations and in the place of those who had provided the product in days gone by the cannery now provides the product on land that they own or rent.

Gradually but surely, and more speedily than any of us, I think, would want, the canneries are moving into the field of production in a well organized plan to eventually take over production as well as processing of vegetable products in this province.

That, of course, is true of the canning industry. It also has been true of the hog industry, as my hon. friend, the former hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow), will know.

A few years ago, we had big operators producing hogs by the thousands in buildings sitting on an acre or so of land. Producing more hogs on that acre of land than 25 of my farmers who pay four or five hundred dollars taxes to the township each year. More than they would produce in the aggregate—in this one building sitting on an acre of land and paying very little municipal or other taxes—many more hogs than 25 farmers would produce.

Of course, into that picture come these influences; the packing house company unquestionably has been a factor in this procedure. The canning company, the hatchery, the feed company; all of them have moved into the production field, out of their legitimate field of processing.

I would like to argue with the House—as rationally as I can—that the day has come in this province when we should use whatever power we possess in a legislative capacity to say kindly to these processors, in the first place: “You have a field that you occupied for many years. Go back to that field and stay there.” If that kindly reminder is not sufficient, then the powers of this Legislature should be used in the field of licence or permits or subsidy—or one of the many other ways in which this Legislature could assert its influence—to bring back to the farmer his inherent right to produce products on his own farm in this province.

I want to make this argument, and I want to say before I make it, that I have—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How do you equate that—

Mr. Oliver: The hon. member should be quiet. The hon. member has had his say today and that is plenty.

I want to make this argument and to make it as quietly as I can. I have an appreciation, perhaps a keen one, of the job that the processor has done in this province, whether that processor be a meat packer or a canning house owner or a hatchery owner or a feed owner. The milling companies have contributed much to the economy of this province, but when they go out of their field—as they are going out of their field now, and invading the field of production—I suggest to this House that the time has come—indeed it is right here now—for government, if they have the interest of the farmer at heart, to take measures of a drastic character.

This government has no notion of doing that, of course. I want to carry my argument on and say this: I would say to processors that they are occupying their present position on sufferance. They are sitting there using squatters’ rights—if you want to use that term—

Mr. H. M. Allen (Middlesex South): That is the way they do it in Russia.

Mr. Oliver: The hon. member can say that if he likes. I do not think there is any connection with Russia at all. That is a not very intelligent remark from a not very intelligent person.

I want this to be heard: The producers of agricultural products in my judgment—and I think in the judgment of most men here—have the right, and I think that right is inherent in the farming industry, to follow their product if they should choose to, right from the farmer to the consumer’s table.

That right may not be written in the constitution. It may be difficult to find any legal backing for that statement, but surely the man who grows hogs on his farm, who grows tomatoes, who grows other things—surely, if that man, either alone or collectively, wants to follow his products through to the consumer’s table he has an inherent right to do so.

Because of that, Mr. Speaker, I think what I said before follows automatically—that processors as such are there on sufferance. They are there as the service arm of agriculture. They are there, I say again, to render service in a limited field—the field of processing. When they step outside the boundaries of that field, they are going into a field in which they have no right, and in which—if we allow them to proceed—they will ruin the agricultural industry of this province, without giving any benefit to the consumers of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear my farmer friends speaking up for the farmer over in this corner. I am sure they will be glad to know, down in that part of the country.

Mr. MacDonald: We want the hon. member to equate it with his concept of free enterprise, that is all.

Mr. Oliver: I do not care whether the hon. member calls it free enterprise at all. It just happens to be a conviction that I have and he can put any label on it he likes; I do not give two hoots.

I want to speak for a moment on what is known as the family farm. There has been a big argument going on as to whether the family farm is an efficient form of operation. There are those who say that we have got to have a large acreage now, in order to make a living on the farm. I am one of those who believe that a large acreage does not necessarily mean an efficient operation. I do not think it has ever been proven, so far as farmers are concerned, that a very large operation is necessarily an efficient operation. It may be an efficient operation, but not necessarily because of its size.

I think it can be proven by those who care to argue the thing out to its ultimate conclusion that a family farm—mind you, I am not talking necessarily of the 50- or the 100-acre farm; I am talking about that unit of operation, Mr. Speaker, that the family can control, whether it be an adjacent farm or what—I think the family unit farm of 200 and 300 acres in this province, not only is an efficient entity today but will stand the test of time for years and years to come. I deplore any suggestion that the farmers of this province, in order to be prosperous, have got to have a 1,000-acre unit. It has never been proven; never been proven. I think there is more proof on the side of those who say that an operation of 200 or 300 acres of family farm can be a successful operation.

I would like to hear the government say—in fact I would like to hear them say anything about the agricultural industry—but I would like to hear them say, to allay the fears that are in the minds of farm people today, that it is not necessary to go into a huge operation in order to be successful. I discount completely the idea that a large operation is necessary in order to be efficient. This government has never taken the position that this is so. They simply go drifting along with the times hoping that something will happen so that they will not have to take a stand on these particular matters.

Another thing, I think, should be said. We had in Ontario, years ago, the provincial loans for farmers. I think it is unfortunate that those loans were done away with. There are those who say, of course, that the federal loan takes its place. It really does not take its place.

Anyone who has had anything to do with the federal farm loan will appreciate the fact that the federal government is seized with the concept that a farm operation, to be successful, must be a large operation. I think, in order to destroy what is an illusion in this respect, it is necessary for Ontario once again to come into the picture by making loans to the farmers of this province; and I say there is no reason why this could not be done.

There have not been any great losses in connection with farm loans, and hon. members know that. Quebec is carrying on a magnificent scheme of loaning to farmers, and of course the federal scheme applies down there as it does here. But they do not feel that the federal loan is sufficient to meet the credit requirements of the Quebec farmers; and so the provincial loan in Quebec applies and gives added service to those who want loans on the farms of Quebec.

It is just as true in Ontario as it is in Quebec. There is a great need in this province for a government that is really interested in agriculture to re-establish once more the loaning system, to give loans to agricultural people. I am sure that a Liberal government—and make no mistake about it, it is not very far away—I am sure that a Liberal government will immediately set up loans.

I wanted to say something, Mr. Speaker, about co-operatives, and about the loans that this government makes to co-operatives and to co-operative farm organizations. The kernel of this situation, Mr. Speaker, is very easily defined and is quite discernible to the naked eye. I say quite deliberately that The Department of Agriculture of this government has either failed to appreciate the problems of agriculture or, if they have knowledge of what those problems are, they have moved not at all to do away with them.

I think that is it in a nutshell. I think co-operatives and what they can do, will be a mighty factor in preserving the farm economy.

I often think that the farm policy of this government is wrapped up in a statement made one time by the laird of Lindsay. I remember him saying quite distinctly when the discussion was held in this House respecting FAME—that is, the decision of farmers to erect meat packing plants. Someone asked the then Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) what he thought about it. Do hon. members know what his answer was? I am sure they do. He said, "I think it is the silliest thing I have ever heard tell of. I think it is the silliest thing I have ever heard tell of."

Well, then, it is no wonder that one cannot get remedial legislation from the government, especially when the Prime Minister has said that when farmers want to help themselves it is the silliest thing he ever heard tell of. I say one cannot expect that; that just permeates the whole government over there, and that is the way they feel about it. When the Prime Minister feels that about it, that is what the government feels.

But I want to say through you tonight, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members of the House, that I have enough faith in the farmers of this province. If they were given the opportunity, and if they were given the leadership, by this government, they would go out and solve most of the problems themselves; but the trouble has been with this government that they were always coming when they were going, and one never knew when they were coming or going.

We did not know in this House. How can the government expect the ordinary farmer to know whether it was for him or against him? It was on both sides of the question at the one time. The government's lack of leadership was monumental, and it is reflected, I suggest, in the thinking of farm people today who have not had the benefit of leadership that they have a right to expect from government.

Through the medium of co-operatives, and I have complete confidence—

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. The hon. member, the former leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), now sitting on the side benches the same as I am, says he represents all the farmers—from what he says. Well, records do not prove that. He fought the hog producers, he fought everything else—collective agreements and everything else—for the farmers in my riding.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the point of privilege is but—

Mr. Oliver: I always like to give an intelligent answer to an intelligent question, but when I fail to recognize intelligence in the question it is beyond me. I just cannot give an intelligent answer to it.

I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, when I was so rudely interrupted by a man who is usually my bosom friend—you know, when we talk quietly he is on my side. I do not know what happened to him. Really.

I want to nail this point home, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers have not used co-operative marketing and all it means to its fullest possibility. And I believe that the government is doing less than it should if it does not give the farmer every opportunity to work out his own problem through the use of co-operative enterprise. Co-operatives, I think, are the answer to many of the farm problems and they have not been given the support by this government that I think they were entitled to.

There is only one other point that I want to mention and that has to do with price spreads. There is quite a spread between what the farmer gets for his product and what the consumer pays. Farmers look at the labour man these days and they think: now he gets a raise, and he is striking for more money all the time, and we are getting less for our product. It is not a situation that makes for harmony between the two groups. But I want to say, and I want to hurry to say, that I have never been one to deny labour the best price they can get for the product that they have to sell—their own labour of their own hands.

I think the job of farmers is not to criticize labour for what they have done or what they are doing, but rather it is to take a page out of labour's book and go out and do for themselves what labour has done for their members in their organization.

There is the tendency to look at this point and say: the farmer gets a few cents for his potatoes, and they cost a dollar when they get to the market. I think that is something worth looking into, because the spread between what the farmer gets and what the consumer pays is growing wider all the time. That just should not be.

There are those, of course, who say the way in which it is presented to the consumer, the wrappings that are put on it, these are what make the cost; but I think there is room for a searching examination into the spread that exists between what the farmer is paid and the consumer pays for the very same product.

There was a time in the House when the old Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Kennedy, used to hold up a cabbage and say: I get so much for this cabbage and the consumer pays so much more; there is something wrong. Of course for 18 years the Tories have known there was something wrong with this spread but they did nothing about it. I think there is an opportunity, and one which would reflect good on the whole question, to really assess the picture with respect to the spread between the product of the farm and what the consumer pays for that same product.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government has been lackadaisical—that is a pretty mild word to use—in their approach to farm problems. I think they have spoken out of both sides of their mouth at the same time. I think they have said yes and no when they were not sure which one they should use. I think they have failed to meet big problems because there were big interests involved.

I say to this House tonight that the time has passed for pussyfooting in respect to the farm problems. We have got to the place in our economic life when, if the farmer is going to be saved in order that he might make his full contribution, then government must give leadership. There must be an appraisal of the problems of the farmer, there must be an appreciation of those problems, and there must be a determination to meet them head on.

I would not want to be, nor would I long remain a member of any government that failed to recognize these things that I have enunciated as grave and fundamental problems affecting the agricultural industry. I would not want to be, nor would I long be, a member of any government which did not move with dispatch and use all the sinews at their command to remedy this situation. This government has not done that and because they have not done it they are going to find themselves on the short end of the stick. They have had warnings enough through the years, they have not heeded the warning; and because they have not heeded the warning they will have to pay the costs involved.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, may I add my faint words of praise and adulation to the great paean that has already flowed towards your throne since this session began. I need not gild the lily, sir, by repeating my gratitude for the many kindnesses you have shown me, for the very capable and fair-minded way you have accomplished or tried to do your job, by the dignity and grace with which you have occupied this honoured seat. With my colleagues, I say you have had a difficult task from time to time; but no doubt you will have difficult tasks yet in the days that are to come, since I feel you are going to sit there for some time yet—as we are going to sit here. But to you, sir, I know that these little problems are but challenges which spur you on to even higher endeavours.

It has been, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say my good fortune and really I do mean that and yet ironically enough or in an Irish sort of a way it has been my misfortune, to follow the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) on previous occasions in this House. I say my misfortune because his oratory is such that the one following him is rather set in the shade.

It is very interesting to listen to him, sir, although I must admit there are times when even I feel he becomes loquaciously garrulous or garrulously loquacious—put it whichever way you will—and yet tonight, sir, I was particularly impressed by the very gloomy picture he painted about farm conditions and the conditions of the farmers in our province. I do not mean to suggest by that that we are entirely pleased about the situation of the farmers. We are not. Many of us, indeed nobody can be completely—Let the farmer from York South (Mr. MacDonald) just keep quiet for a while now and listen—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was not even speaking! I rise on a question of privilege.

The hon. Minister has really caught himself out. He just automatically brow-beats me for everything, when I was sitting here completely silent. It was from elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister was revealed in his miscorrect fire once again. I won't disappoint him from this point on.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I thought I caught an accent that sounded very familiar to me, but I have to say, sir—and I hope my hon. friend will forgive me—I have to ask our hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) if the hog-farmer he was talking about, who had the huge piggery on an acre of land, is situated in York South. But having listened to this gloomy picture, Mr. Speaker, we have to point out that there is another side to the farm picture; and, strangely enough, there came to my hand these figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and surely they are unimpeachable:

The cash incomes of Ontario farms, as calculated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, have risen from $442,625,000 in 1945 to $877,069,000 in 1960.

Mr. MacDonald: What about the rise in costs?

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Gross! Gross! Give us the net.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just wait. Do not become impatient. 1961 will be still higher.

While costs of goods and services have risen in this period substantially the Ontario farms' net income, as calculated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, has also risen over $100 million in this same period. In 1945, Ontario was just about even with the next high province—which incidentally, and strangely enough, was Saskatchewan—in cash farm income. In 1960, or in the average of the last three years, Ontario farm cash sales have soared to over $300 million more than that of the closest province.

Mr. Speaker, having read that, I have to be in complete disagreement with the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) when he says that this government is the cause of the problems of the farmers. I say it is because of the work of this government, because of the forward-looking programmes of this government in the interest of the farmers of this province, that the situation is as good as it is today. This government—and mark you, Mr. Speaker, these years are between 1945 and 1960, just two years after this government came into power—this government has given the farmer of Ontario every opportunity and every support to help him run his business in a businesslike manner.

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense! What about the former hon. Prime Minister's attitude towards FAME?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe in letting every man speak for himself and when the day comes when the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) cannot speak for himself, he will not need the member for Ontario to speak for him.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a foregone conclusion that no government in Canada—nor here in Ontario—no government in Canada has done more to help the farmers to improve production, to improve farm management, to improve his methods and to improve marketing.

Mr. Speaker, I did not stand up here to talk about farming, because I would be most presumptuous indeed to try to argue on agricultural questions with the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver). But I do want to talk to the House for a short time this evening, sir, on a matter that is of very great interest to many people in this province. Indeed, it is a matter of great interest to many people in every country of the world today. It is a subject which occupies a great deal of my time personally in my departmental responsibilities and is responsible for the spending of more than half my annual budget. It occupies over 10,000 of the nearly 12,000 employees in The Department of Health. I would take it that the hon. members will understand that I want to talk about mental health and mental diseases.

About three years ago, sir, it was my privilege and honour to propose to this House and to the people of the province of Ontario an entirely new concept, a new philosophy, in the care and treatment of the mentally disordered. One of the things I pointed out would be very much necessary at that time to bring this to the attention of the public was an educational programme. We set about that as one of the first steps in the programme, sir. The material to do so was immediately at hand and it was one of the things that could be immediately undertaken, where other things had to wait for preparation, or accommodation facilities, staff, et cetera.

This programme has become increasingly effective. We have been able to make rather notable strides, and yet very much remains to be done. More attention than ever, I think I can say, is being paid to mental health, not only by the professional people and the social sciences involved in the care and treatment of the mentally disordered, but by every facet of society.

Some of the things I shall say tonight I have no doubt I have said in this House and no doubt I have said them many times outside of this House. But they will bear repeating because I find it is only by constant repetition that we are able to sell our story, as it were, to the people whom we want to hear it and to bring into clearer focus than ever before the problems and the challenges attendant upon this matter of mental health.

It bears repeating also because it is very difficult to wipe out overnight the superstitions, the notions and the misinformation of generations. The things that people have believed, the strange and peculiar ideas that they have held and to which they have held very tenaciously, not over generations but indeed over centuries, are very difficult to eradicate. I think, sir, it is worthwhile to review some of the salient features of this problem, this problem which I have called on many occasions the number one health problem of our province. Indeed it is the number one health problem of our whole nation and indeed of many nations in this world today.

We often hear of cancer and heart disease spoken of as the number one killing disease and this may be quite true. But there is a very vast difference between being the number one killer and the number one health problem. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why mental disorder has not been brought into clearer focus than it has, because it is not a disease that kills; it is a disease that cripples, but it does not kill. Indeed, many of our patients live out long, long lives.

Mental disorder can be considered the number one health problem on many bases, but there are three factors in particular which I should like once again to draw to the attention of this House.

First of all, there is the vast enormity of the problem. I say to hon. members that almost half of the hospital beds occupied in this province of Ontario are occupied by people suffering from mental disorders. From that I am sure every hon. member will catch some idea why this should be looked upon as the number one health problem of our province. Not only so, sir, but we know by statistical experience that one out of 10 of us can expect that at some time in a normal life span to suffer from some type of mental breakdown or other; perhaps to the extent where we may need hospitalization, at least to the extent where we shall need professional care and attention.

I remind the hon. members that three out of every 100 babies born in this province are born mentally retarded in some degree or another. That 1.5 out of each 1,000 babies, that is 1.5 out of each 1,000 babies, will need hospitalization, probably for life. Again, this will help give hon. members some idea of the vast enormity of the problem.

Even worse than that, this health problem, mental disorder, accounts for at least two-thirds of all the chronically disabled people in our province.

Then one may look at it from the cold standpoint of economics. In The Department of Health, more than half of the annual budget is spent on the maintenance of the patients in our hospitals and our hospital schools. About $20 million a year at the present time is being spent on capital construction, providing new accommodation, new equipment, replacing obsolete accommodation and obsolete equipment.

Then there is a factor that is even more important, sir, and one which I think many of us lose sight of as we look at the problem, even after we have become keenly interested in it and deeply involved in it. That is the personal factor. I think a great many of us fail to look upon this as something that can hit us. We say: "Oh, yes, somebody in the next street" or "Somebody on the next concession" or "Someone with whom we came in contact has experienced it, but it cannot happen to us". I think one of the surest ways to bring this problem into clear focus for all of society is for everyone of us to realize that this can hit any one of us, that it has no respect for persons any more than any other disease, that it cuts across every stratum, be it social, cultural or economic. I think that when we have realized that, this matter will be brought into clearer focus than ever before.

Now the care and treatment of the mentally disordered has long been the responsibility of government, not only here but in many lands. How this came about it is almost impossible to ascertain. One can only conclude that many people in many lands looked to their government to undertake and look after this very pressing problem. An essentially bleak and hopeless picture has from time to time been shot through with occasional shafts of light; shafts of light, however, which while they brighten the horizon for a little while, never seem to last very long, for then the whole problem lapses back into the bleak and hopeless situation from which it came. One might with profit reflect upon the reasons for this, but actually such reflection would yield little of value at this time.

We hear in this province of ours, particularly over recent times—and actually while it may sound critical it is a sign of hopefulness—we hear a great deal of talk about the lack of a programme. But one is bound to ask whether this lack is real or only apparent. As one looks at the history of general medicine, one is bound to recognize that the lack of progress is more apparent than real.

After all, when we think of anesthesia, it is only a little over 100 years ago since the first anesthetic agent was discovered, and anesthesia is only today coming into its right as anything approaching an exact science.

When one thinks of modern surgery, one has only to go back to the early years of this century to find that very little surgery was done, at least successfully, prior to that time. Indeed the common operation, which many of look on as common, the appendectomy, was not really very popular at all until one of the kings of Great Britain had to have his appendix out.

The wonder drugs, the magic pellets about which we read today and in which so many of us have come to place such great faith, are only developments of the last 25 years. Tuberculosis, for instance, a scourge of the first quarter of this century—at least a scourge which came into sharp focus in our country and in our province in the first quarter of this century—was the causal organism isolated only in 1882; and the only effective medical treatment of tuberculosis was found and put into general use in the year 1948.

Diphtheria, typhoid, poliomyelitis, all of these have been brought under control within this century and only after intensive and extensive research. The same can be said of diabetes, for which this city and the medical and university people in this city, did so much; this work only dates back to the early 1920's. The same, too, can be said of pernicious anemia.

One may wonder, Mr. Speaker, why research in these cases was so vigorously undertaken and has lagged on mental disorder. Perhaps it was the reason I have already mentioned, because these were killer diseases and mental illness or mental retardation per se is not a killing disease. It has been said that because one president of a great nation was stricken with polio and another was stricken with heart disease, research into these was greatly stimulated. Yet history records many instances where the heads of state, leaders in almost every field of human endeavour or their families or those closely related with them, have either been stricken or associated with those stricken with mental disorders, so that this theory would not apply.

All this aside, the hopeful fact is that research is now being undertaken in increasing measure. Out of it all is coming useful knowledge and the hope for new and more effective methods of treatment.

It should be noted here, I think, that the first real breakthrough in this problem came about only within the past ten years and this has in large degree made possible many of the changes now evident in the hospitals and other institutions where the mentally disordered are cared for. This in large part has made possible the conversion of these institutions to their true purpose and function, namely, hospitals in the best sense and highest tradition.

Mr. Speaker, it would be misleading to leave the impression that this conversion has been complete. It has not and it cannot be until there has been brought about a greater appreciation by society of its responsibility to the patients in our institutions. Many of them have been in hospital so long that they have become, to all intents and purposes, lost to society.

There are over 7,000 patients in the Ontario hospitals today who have, to the best of our knowledge, no relatives, no family, no home, no one to take any interest in them except the government of Ontario and those people who now come to visit our hospitals, public-spirited folk interested in the welfare of these people, come to bring a little comfort and pleasure into their lives. I have frequently referred to these as orphans, and indeed many of them are just that, except that we rarely think of adults as being orphaned. Yet many of our patients have no family, relatives or friends; others have been forgotten, and in many cases even the original home community appears to have forgotten they once belonged.

A very brief review of what has been accomplished in the less than three years past will show that much has been done, that an ambitious, progressive programme is actively underway, and in planning for the future the problem assumes ever greater importance.

Completed since 1958 have been new units at four of our hospitals: Penetanguishene, 150 beds; Whitby, 74 beds; Hamilton, 600 beds; Cedar Springs Hospital School, 1,200 beds.

The government acquired by purchase the Byron Sanatorium and this is being used as the children's psychiatric research institute. It is very interesting to note that only a very short time ago this institution, which has only been operating for a little over one year, was given the bronze award by the American Psychiatric Association for outstanding work in its field. I am getting reprints of the notice of the award and will have one placed on each member's desk tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. It is very interesting to note that this institution has been recognized in this way.

In addition to the Byron Sanatorium, of course, the government also acquired by purchase the Gravenhurst Sanatorium, the first institution of its kind in Ontario where tubercular patients were treated, but which because of the breakthrough in the care and treatment of tubercular patients outlived its usefulness.

Being built at the present time, and which we hope will come into operation within the next year, are two small hospitals of 300 beds each; one at Goderich and one at Owen Sound. These two new hospitals, Mr. Speaker, are a drastic and progressive forward step towards providing regional services in the modern concept.

These hospitals, as I stated, will be of 300 beds each. The active treatment part of each will consist of 100 beds and will be capable of looking after the mentally ill people in the area served. The remaining two-thirds of the hospital will be used to house chronically ill patients, those I mentioned earlier who are to all intents and purposes orphaned.

Also coming into service in 1962 will be the clinical services building at the Ontario Hospital in Port Arthur providing a further 300 beds.

The rebuilding of the first unit at the Ontario Hospital School in Orillia is now underway, and will also provide a further 300 beds. This, of course, is the first stage of the rebuilding of the old part of the hospital school at Orillia.

Tenders have been called and the contract is expected to be let in a very short time for a new nurses' residence and training school at the Ontario Hospital in Whitby.

The Palmerston School will be called for tenders in a very short time. The rebuilding of the Ontario Hospital at London is in the hands of the architects now, and the rebuilding of the old part of the Ontario Hospital at 999 Queen Street West in Toronto is also in the hands of the architects at the present time.

The province just a little less than a year ago, about eight months ago, Mr. Speaker, sponsored a completely new psychiatric service in the city of Ottawa. The Royal Ottawa Sanatorium was in the same position as many similar institutions in the province; having done such a good job of the treatment of tubercular patients they found themselves with many available beds. Ottawa needed a psychiatric service and we made arrangements with the board of the Royal Ottawa Sanatorium and as a result of our negotiations with them they became very deeply interested in psychiatric patients. They have already opened and had in operation for some months an out-patient and day-care centre and within a very few more months, as soon as the alterations to the building have been completed, they will be able to establish a short-term in-patient care centre, too. This is an entirely new departure for our province, the operation of such a hospital by a private board. It is an experiment being closely watched by a very great many in this field.

Carrying on our programme of giving recognition or approval to psychiatric units in general hospitals, such units have been opened within the last three years at Ottawa

Civic Hospital, Kingston General Hospital, Hamilton General Hospital, Peterborough Civic Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital in Toronto. Approval has been given for further units at Windsor, Sarnia, North York, Sault Ste. Marie and St. Joseph's Hospital in London.

Three years ago we stated that, in our opinion, the best and most satisfactory psychiatric service should begin at the community level. In keeping with this philosophy we established, with all speed, out-patient services at every Ontario Hospital where it was possible. In the past three years we have been able to start such services in North Bay, Whitby, New Toronto, Toronto, Windsor, Port Arthur, Sarnia and in Woodstock. We have also opened three new day-care centres at the Ontario Hospital, Brockville, New Toronto and also in Woodstock.

Further in keeping with modern philosophy—and considering the mentally ill patient as a sick person in need of care—we have sought to establish units where patients who are acutely ill may be admitted informally. The first of those units has been opened at the Ontario Hospital, New Toronto and is already proving its worth.

Such a programme calls for an increase in staff, particularly in the nursing field, and we have found through experience that the nurses best equipped to look after our patients are the nurses trained in our own schools. Three years ago we had three training schools for nursing operating in the Ontario hospitals—one at Whitby, one at Kingston and one at Brockville. The average graduating class of the three schools totalled about 20. We revitalized the entire undergraduate nurse training curriculum. We cut the course of training from three years to two years; we encouraged recruitment by various methods with the result that the enrolment has increased 200 per cent, and for the September class of this present year we had to turn applicants away.

There have been other rather interesting developments which have brought more attention to bear upon the plight of the mentally ill. One of the great problems in the minds of many patients—many patients' families as well—as one of the great problems facing the professions involved in the treatment of the mentally ill, is the cumbersome machinery necessary for the commission of a patient to hospital.

We have been able in the last three years to amend The Mental Hospitals Act, to reduce the red tape involved in admission procedures. This has accompanied the growing practice of allowing patients more freedom and responsibility. The new Children's Mental Hospitals Act governing the Thistletown Hospital and the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute at London, provides for the admission of children under the age of 16, on application of the parent or guardian. The Community Psychiatric Hospitals Act, passed in 1960, governs the establishment of the type of small hospital which, it is hoped, will eventually provide care for persons in all sections of the province.

I spoke about the award given to the Psychiatric Institute at London, an award of which the department is very proud, mainly perhaps because it is evidence that Ontario is not lagging in its efforts to move forward in the care and treatment of the mentally disordered.

The treatment of the mentally disordered patient differs so much from the treatment of the physically ill patient that it becomes very difficult for many of us to appreciate what is involved. Indeed, many people after visiting our hospitals express surprise at the scope and variety of the programmes. In the time available this evening, I can only touch very sketchily upon some of the highlights, but I would assure you, that every patient capable of becoming interested in any activity that may be helpful to him in the outside world is given all assistance we can provide.

Occupational therapy is carried out in some form in all hospitals, although we are handicapped by the extreme shortage of occupational therapists, which is widespread and does not affect our service only. Under this heading we may include occupational therapy proper—that is, the use of occupational therapy specifically as a diagnostic and remedial measure. The limitation of staff, of course, particularly limits this use of occupational therapy. This type of therapy includes music, art, drama—either in a diversional form or as training in hobbies—and training in special activities such as typing. The occupational therapy department may also be responsible for such things as recreation and domestic training.

While recreation is largely diversional, it may contain a considerable therapeutic element, dependent on the competence of the staff who conduct it. It includes sports, swimming classes, physical training, and special events such as camping out, bus trips, and so on, and is carried out to various degrees in various hospitals.

As for industrial activity: A good many patients are employed on various aspects of hospital maintenance, assisting in the laundry, on the farm, in the maintenance shops, and there is an increasing emphasis on transferring patients from one type of job to another as they show increasing ability to handle more complex types of work.

Industrial projects: A number of projects have been undertaken in various hospitals, which involve the manufacture of articles for hospital use or, to a lesser degree, for sale, which are actually in fulfilment of contracts with outside industries—for example, the making of tags, labels, and so on, which can be seen going on at our Queen Street, Toronto Hospital.

Informal training of an apprenticeship type is provided in some of the industrial activities noted above. More formal training, where the emphasis is on the training rather than on the activity, has been developed in various fields.

For example, at our hospital in Kingston, there is a specific course for practical nurse training, and for training of patients in kitchen work. Some hospitals combine a certain amount of training with the reorientation of patients—for example, giving lessons in cooking, and so on, to female patients.

A number of programmes include training in personal care ranging all the way from simple habit training to the sophisticated grooming course which has gained great popularity in the Toronto Hospital, and has been the subject of newspaper and magazine articles in recent months.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that each spring a fashion show is conducted at that hospital and I think that any hon. members, particularly the hon. members from Toronto, might gain a great deal of interest and insight into what is going on if they went to this fashion show. It is conducted almost exclusively by patients under the direction of the staff members. It is a most fascinating experience to see how those patients have taken a completely new interest in life.

It was my privilege to see some whom I had seen in years previously when they were still quite ill. After a year of treatment and training and reorientation, it was a fascinating experience indeed, to see the difference in their appearance, to talk to them and learn the difference in their outlook on life, wearing and modelling the clothes and hats that they themselves had made. While I certainly am no judge of that sort of thing, I can assure you that I do not know how any professional model could have done much better. It is very interesting to know, too, that classes are directed by professional models who have undertaken this project as a service to the community and spend many, many hours every week with our patients, helping them to get a new lease on life.

There are several special projects conducted in all our hospitals, such as hobby fairs and open-house displays, and all of these involve a great deal of effort by both patients and staff. But the full emphasis is on encouraging patients to take responsibility for doing, not watching. This is where the new programme and the new idea differs from the old. At one time we showed the patients what to do and how to do it, but somehow or other never got around to seeing if the patients could do it themselves.

It is very interesting to see that the patients can teach us many things now, as I am sure they could have done in those days. Some of the patients prepare and type their news bulletins at regular periods. These are written, typed and edited in a very large measure by the patients themselves.

All our hospitals have regular religious services, and in several the music is provided by a patients' choir. I need not remind the hon. members of the famous choir which we now have at the Hospital School in Orillia, which has been invited to visit many locations. Indeed it has sung several times on radio, has appeared once or twice on a trans-Canada television hook-up and has cut several records.

Volunteer activities, of course, have become a very, very important weapon in our treatment in Ontario. Volunteers participate and sometimes conduct many aspects of the programme cited above. In many of our hospitals this is a well-organized and important phase of treatment. Almost every patient benefits from the activities of volunteer groups every week. These activities may run all the way from classes in dressmaking and millinery to walks in the hospital grounds, visits to the nearest town, or visits to the homes of the volunteers where they partake of tea, dinner or other meals.

It is interesting to note, too, that many of our volunteers visiting our hospitals have become so attached to many of the patients that they will, on occasion, invite some of their favourite patients for the weekend in their own homes. This helps a very great deal in getting the patient accustomed to the idea of living once again outside the hospital environment.

In our Ontario hospital schools the treatment of the mentally retarded consists largely of education and training. Perhaps the hon. members will get some better idea of the programme if I sketch out what is being done at one of our schools, the oldest of the three, Orillia.

The philosophy of education here is that it is the preparation for a useful, purposeful and happy life in accordance with the child's ability. Basically, it is not a matter of increasing capacity—as most people like to believe—but a matter of developing the child's attributes to their limit. Our programme is not intellectualization, but socialization.

Administratively, the school is organized into a number of departments centring their attention on the individual's emotional and physical needs, in an attempt to make the programme of treatment, care and training an effective one. Utilizing procedures of study, periodic evaluation and programme planning, the school endeavours to promote, whenever possible, the individual's ability to meet the problems of everyday life through improving social adjustments, broadening interests and skills, stabilizing emotions, learning useful tasks and understanding self. The institution is a community striving to provide for each individual a happy home, opportunities for training, health of mind and body and rehabilitation for those with capacity and social adequacy for community life outside.

The training programme is divided into three major divisions: pre-school, academic, occupational and trade training. The pre-school is simple, just like that attempted by any pre-school child, and involves teaching the child to walk and to talk, to control elimination, teaching the child to feed himself, to dress himself and to play with others, which is a very important fact.

The academic training is divided into two subheadings, academic lower and academic upper. These departments are staffed by 13 teachers conducting a formalized programme. The lower academic school is composed of young children with capacity for kindergarten training and ultimate self-care or reabsorption into their own homes. When I speak of young children I speak rather in the mental sense than in the chronological sense, since some of them are quite well advanced chronologically for kindergarten training.

In the lower academic area we start to develop sense training, such as taste, sound, smell, colour, form. It seems that you do not have to teach the normal child formally as a rule; yet this is a very tedious undertaking for our children. One of the great problems in many of our children is teaching them to co-ordinate their muscles. In the kindergarten we teach them stringing beads, cutting, sewing and weaving on cards, pasting, colouring, cutting out paper dolls and so on. Then, as they come to the close of the kindergarten training, we try to teach knitting and such simple occupational tasks as that.

At the end of kindergarten training, and at the upper level of the lower academic scale, we try to train the child in the language. Physical training for this group is, of course, simple but it is a very important phase since we are steadily learning that physical training seems to do rather wonderful things for these children. It largely consists in this age group of training through the use of musical games.

In the upper academic level we try to incorporate all the higher grade children of school age. The course is composed of simple arithmetic, addition, subtraction, multiplication and division—the most simple exercises in those two—how to read a ruler and how to consider fractions related thereto, weights and measures—the common simple weights and measures with which they will come in contact during their lifetime. We try to teach them how to tell time and how to make simple change. All these phases must be taught in an objective fashion and in a play attitude. The success of this course is greatly dependent upon the teacher's ingenuity and attitude of perseverance.

The teaching of reading and literature is attempted but, as you may understand, is not carried to a very high level at all. The majority of the group, however, can develop a certain facility for reading and some even progress to the point where they may read for enjoyment. This is the only aim of the course.

To teach the child to write legibly and to develop a form for letter writing and a measure of self-expression through the written word, a good deal of emphasis is placed upon the teaching of writing and very simple compositions, as is also the teaching of spelling.

We try to teach the child something about geography and history and civics. Geography is a very broad term for the type of teaching, as is also history, although we try to give the child some idea of his relationship to the world as a whole and the influence of climate for instance upon the products and the people of other lands.

In the case of history certain salient phases of Canadian history and historical figures are taught through the use of story and film.

In the matter of civics we start with the structural management idea of the institution itself and develop the concept as related to the town, the township, the county and so on.

Music has come to play a very large part in the training and education of children in our hospital schools. While no individual lessons are available—this is often asked for, but in a school with 2,700 people you can understand how difficult this will be—group singing and rhythm bands are used very extensively. An excellent dancing class is conducted twice weekly for the academic upper group. The school is closed in the early summer with a commencement party in the form of a dance; whatever entertainment is provided is put on by the students themselves. In this way the social amenities can be effectively developed, and this is one of the shining improvements of the last few years in our programme.

As our child passes through education to the point where manual training may be worthwhile, we have a reasonably well-equipped manual training room where boys are taught the use and care of tools. They are taught first of all to undertake simple projects such as making simple toys, bird houses, and things of that sort, for the institution itself. Each year we held a hobby fair at the school, where much of the year's progress is on display and children compete with their fellow students for prizes. In addition to this we have now encouraged the students to compete in the local annual hobby show in Orillia, which is promoted by the Y.M.C.A. This organization has been extremely helpful to us in more ways than one, and extremely co-operative in helping us insofar as making available any special facilities they may have, which are not available at the hospital.

For the girls we have domestic science classes and each afternoon a class of ten girls attend cooking classes conducted by our dietitian. The cookbooks used are prepared at the hospital school, and at the completion of the training period the book which the girl has used becomes her property. It is remarkable how hard they work and how thoroughly they seem to study in the hope of winning this prize.

As well as cooking we try to teach the girls sewing; the girls of the class comparable to the boys attending manual training, attend sewing classes. This is completely handwork to begin with. They are taught how to make or perform the different types of stitches, and then as they progress, of course, they are taught the use of, first of all, the treadle machine, and then they go on to power machines.

Not only for its recreational value, but also for its educational value, and for the value of muscle co-ordination, puppetry has become a very important subject in our therapy programme. This pleasing, creative activity is used with a variety of satisfactory results that come as by-products of what started as an entertainment. Originally "fist" puppets were made by the children in their classes; but now, with a small puppet stage, shy children can, in a play fashion, be encouraged to express themselves with a measure of confidence.

Children with speech problems are encouraged to take part. A tape recording is made and played back to the group. It is not unusual now for a handicapped child to ask for an opportunity to say his part again. It is what we call the positive rather than the negative approach. It enables the forgotten child to find a place in the social sum of things. Such activities, of course, tie in with the Christmas entertainments which have been traditional for years.

The academic programme cares for only 377 children at present. The curriculum carries to about the equivalent of Grade V at its upper limit. We find that it is quite impossible to educate any of our children beyond this stage.

The class personnel participating are arranged in groups according to chronological age, physical handicap, degree of mobility, and physical size. These groups rotate from classroom to classroom on a forty-five minute class period. This makes for better behaviour and increased interest, in light of the retarded child's short attention span. The teaching day is from 9.00 in the morning to 11.45, and 1.00 in the afternoon till 4.00, five days each week.

At the conclusion of the academic school, some children are carried part-time in school, part-time in some occupation or trade. This is referred to as the junior vocational or industrial group. It provides incentive for a student to pursue some of his academic studies further, while giving a sense of confidence towards self-sufficiency and the hope of employment outside the institution. The entire academic programme is co-educational. At the completion of this phase, and the entry into trade training, the sexes separate, boys and girls following different training pursuits.

Present-day unitized operations in industry are naturals for the trained socialized defective. He never tires of a routine job, his vocation is his avocation. This is proven by many of our successful graduates in industrial placements.

The occupational and trade facilities available to the male students include the bake-shop, where we bake approximately 1,000 loaves a day. The boys are taught procedural operation of modern equipment. They are taught cleanliness and something of the industrial setting of production work. Many of our graduates in this are self-sufficient and are placed with commercial firms after this training.

The barber-shop does not aim to prepare boys for such gainful employment, although several have been able to pursue this. Mainly boys going into rural farm placement have won a measure of respect and additional income from the training. Moreover, it has often helped the boy over a lonely adjustment period in the country through the feeling that he is appreciated because of his skill.

We teach some of the building trades: carpentry, painting, plastering. Engineering trades: boiler room, plumbing, electrician. In the farm department: vegetable gardening, landscaping, dairy farming, the horse barn, the teamster—although those are dying trades now—and the poultry department.

Mattress-making and upholstery has been taught to several boys and quite a number of them have found gainful employment at, for instance, General Motors in Oshawa.

The shoe industry is used for the training of twelve to twenty boys, and they benefit from production-line training and something about factory relationship.

This department manufactures between five and eight hundred pairs of shoes every month when in production. These shoes are used only by other provincial institutions in Ontario.

Then we teach some boys the butcher business.

Some are taught to be office messengers. All training in the occupational department for the boys is operated on a rotation basis—six to eight months in each placement and then returning for specialization in the department most suited to the individual's attributes. In this way, interest and aptitude are given a chance to flourish.

When socially mature, placement is procured outside for the boy and he is followed in this placement and encouraged to look to his placement officer for help and support if the going gets a little bit rough. If the boy finds it just a little too much for him he is welcomed back to the hospital school for a sort of holiday, in order that he may be able to go back to his job once more.

For girls we teach hairdressing, kitchen work, maid service, mending room, sewing room and power equipment, and the dining room. Many of these girls have been placed in very good occupations, and indeed we could place a great many more if we had those capable of undertaking the duties.

As in the case of the boys, all of the above are handled on a rotation basis, with domestic employment as the outlet.

Mr. Speaker, there are 2,700 patients in hospital today, of whom only about 800 are capable of any sort of education and training; 883 cannot be trained in any way but have to have their simplest needs attended to, while the remaining 1,000 may be capable of training for partial self care only.

In addition to all this, a very full recreation programme is followed, including music, art, concerts, plays, all kinds of sports, physical training, Scouting, Cubbing, Guiding and Brownies. Indeed, it may well be summed up by saying that the staff tries every possible activity and every possible method of training to help develop our children to their fullest capacity, and to try to make and keep them as happy and well adjusted as possible.

A much greater emphasis is being placed upon the rehabilitation of the mentally disordered. Little has been attempted in this field heretofore; and because of many difficulties, we have developed our own division of rehabilitation.

In the case of our patients, much more is necessary as a rule to help them reinstate into normal society. Not only must they be prepared to go out into the community, they need help to re-establish themselves and they also need some continuing support till we feel sure they can carry on alone. To that end, we try to place those capable in jobs, and also help them over any social hurdle during this transition stage from hospital to home. This is proving to be a very worthwhile service indeed, one that promises to be of increasing value to those patients where treatment has been successful. We look for wide extension of this service.

Mr. Speaker, a very great deal may yet be said of the activities of the division of mental health, but I would rather urge, sir, that you and every hon. member and everyone with whom he comes in contact should visit the Ontario hospital and see what is being done. Do not read about it; go and see. I believe everyone will find it a rewarding experience; and from such visits I know hon. members will gain some insight into the many complex problems which challenge us daily, as we try to tackle Ontario's number one health problem.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, as a lesson to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), a man whom I much admire—and I like to think, sir, and I hope that he would not be too insulted by my saying it, a man in which, I think, in many ways I am like—I cannot help but say how great a change has come over the complexion of our society and the ways in which we deal with those afflicted with mental disorders and, for that matter, economic catastrophe; in a nutshell, those who are less fortunate than the great majority in our society.

It is not true to say that what the political scientists used to call pluralism has virtually disappeared from our society. Let me give you an illustration.

It was about ten years ago that the problem of the retarded really descended upon society, and society became alive to the needs of those who had been endowed by merciful providence with less intelligence or less brain power than the norm. Ten years later, and I do not condemn and I do not criticize the fact, the people concerned with helping those out have turned to government. As in most other areas of human welfare, government is looked to as the source of funds, the source of instruction, the source of help.

Now, being a Liberal, I must and I do believe—and I believe fervently—that as our wealth increases in this country and it increases every year, that the real income, or the greater proportion of that wealth, must go to those who create it; that is to say the great mass of working people of this country. If it be the political philosophy of the moment, as it appears to be, that the method of distribution of that wealth to equate the distribution is through government, I cannot help but think with some regret that from the measure the government is asked to interfere or is asked to assist, it must be at the expense of the loss of political freedom.

That is why, when I see private groups continuing to undertake measures of social amelioration, that I, like all other hon. members of this House, sir, accord them the greatest hope for their success because I am sure that we like to see private groups, apart from government, continue to participate, continue to be the authors of measures of bringing help to the needy. Maybe someday a couple of centuries hence when the state has become so powerful and monolithic an organization that the pendulum will begin to swing backwards, perhaps some future generation yet unborn will throw off the shackles of the state.

Those who have preceded me in this debate have beautifully and fulsomely and gladly extended to you their congratulations that providence has spared you for another year to preside in great wisdom over our deliberations. I gladly extend on behalf of myself, a private and lowly member of this House, my thanks to you for the kindness which you and your office staff have shown to me in the past year. May I say to you, and I hope you will not think I mean anything sinister or sardonic by it, that like wine you improve with age.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have gotten away from the practice of extending thanks to the mover and seconder of the address which is the subject matter of this debate and I wish to return to it. I wish to extend my congratulations for their mighty efforts to the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence), and the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton), neither of whom are in their seats, unfortunately, to hear these glowing words of tribute to them. But I wanted to say to them, and perhaps their colleagues who see them in the hallways and the restaurants will say that I said it of them, that to be selected to move and second the address means a mark of a man that is on his way—he is on the way, there is no doubt about it.

When I first came to this House three years ago, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) moved the address and the hon. member for St. Andrew Mr. (Grossman) seconded it, and look where they are now. One cannot say that they have been idling their thumbs and wasting their time, they have made great progress. The one now is second vice-chairman of Hydro, and the other is the chief liquor commissioner of the province and indeed in that capacity he manages what I think is the largest retail business in—I was going to say Ontario—I am sure in the whole of Canada if not in North America. He has a monopoly and he stands as a tower of strength, a pillar of piety at the top of this organization.

Just to show that I have a historical sense, I feel that tradition was broken because we had two by-elections and two new hon.

members came into this House; and traditionally the hon. leader of the government selects them to move and second the address. One would not want to say to them, sir, that because they were not selected that no promotion is in the offing for them; it is for another reason.

Instead we had the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) and the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton); and we have always looked upon the hon. member for St. George—he was here a moment ago, I went to school with him—we have looked upon him as a very dynamic and vigorous young man. Indeed, there may have been some thought in selecting him, some desire to heal the wounds, to pour salves on the river of bitter controversy that had taken place but two months previously up in a certain forum to the north. However, that may be.

One would not want to pass over and forget the hon. member for London South (Mr. White), but I do not speak to him in a spirit of congratulations. I speak to him in a spirit of thanks. I feel I must also speak to him in a spirit of condolence, because he, perhaps you would agree with me privately—I, like the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), speak to people privately—you would agree with me that he committed what was perhaps in the impeccable French of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), the “fox pass” of the session. He tried to be a fox, sir, he tried to out-fox the chief fox over here, but the chief fox out-foxed him.

One is led to wonder about the conception and the birth of this stratagem. Did he—one can ask rhetorically because one would not expect an answer—did he get the idea for that stratagem from his neighbour to the north? It was said, it was rumoured in the halls—and he will forgive me for saying it, I am sure—that he was an heir presumptive to a ministry with or without portfolio himself; and he is contingent and adjacent to a man who has a great deal of power and influence; and did that man, his neighbour to the north, perhaps give him the instruction? And if the neighbour to the north thought up the stratagem, then who had he turned to, who had given him advice to use it? Was it Gabriel on his right or was it Lucifer on his left?

We might deal for a minute with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). He said this afternoon, in what I thought was quite an essay, he said that if we brought in our sales tax, and I do not want to go all through it, the people would start to go out and buy articles of trade, they would take their custom to various houses and department stores by buying a part of an object. You know what it would lead to: "Will you drop in for a beer with me, Harry?" "No, I cannot, I have got to go and buy the other wheel for the baby carriage."

The hon. Prime Minister did, in order to support what was otherwise quite an unsound argument, he did turn to the law and he is an able lawyer. He is a London lawyer—that is London-in-the-bush, sir, not on-the-Thames—it is not the Inns of Court. He is one of Her Majesty's counsel, learned in the law.

He said the law holds that a man can so arrange his affairs that he can escape the payment of tax. I listened with incredulity to this. It is true that the Privy Council said that in 1936, but that was a generation ago. Let me read to you what Viscount Simon had to say, and it is just a brief paragraph, what he had to say in an appeal case in the House of Lords at a later date:

It is said that in revenue cases there is a doctrine that the court may ignore the legal position and regard what is called the substance of the matter.

I have the wrong book. I had the right man but the wrong book, but now I have the right man and the right page, and he says:

My Lords, of recent years much ingenuity has been expended in certain quarters in attempting to devise methods of disposition of income by which those who were prepared to adopt them might enjoy the benefits of residence in this country while receiving the equivalent of such income without sharing in the appropriate burden of British taxation.

Judicial dicta may be cited which points out that however elaborate and artificial such methods may be, those who adopt them are entitled to do so. There is, of course, no doubt that they are within their legal rights, but that is no reason why their efforts or those of the professional gentlemen who assist them in the matter should be regarded as a commendable exercise of ingenuity or as a discharge of the duties of good citizenship.

That is what Viscount Simon had to say about it. I thought it incredible, because I remember when I first started to school, the primary schools, I remember that they used to teach us the incidences of good citizenship, and they used to say that one of the incidences of good citizenship was paying your taxes.

I thought it quite incredible that the man who both leads this House and is hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts), should hold to such a doctrine that a person can live in this country—and I do not presume to lecture him—that he can live in this country and he can enjoy the great benefits of being a Canadian and a resident of this province and then not pay his just share of taxation.

One of the other characteristics of this debate is that it is about the speech from the Throne. I want to turn to that document if I may for a moment. We seem to have gotten away from it.

I can say that I spent a good deal of time in a most careful scrutiny of it. Some of the things that I see in it, to which I wish to refer hon. members for a moment, are as follows:

Among many other measures designed to promote the progress and economic well-being of our province, this programme will include:

—let us just say the programme for this legislative session—

1. New methods to promote co-operation between industry, labour and government, and to increase production and employment.

Now I say to the House that as we in this province face the depths of winter, as we approach the Yuletide season, and at a time when there are 100,000 citizens—100,000 able-bodied people—in this province who are ready to work, and cannot; in such case, sir, if the government, as it has promised in the speech from the Throne to bring forward measures in their words "to increase production and employment," then I say and I ask of the hon. members rhetorically: why have they not done so?

We heard, and I am not going to go into the flowery oratory that we heard in the leadership campaign, but we heard from the seven candidates, we heard from them each in their own and unique, characteristic way, we heard the panaceas which they offered the people of this province. We saw that quite a number of them seem to have discovered northern Ontario for the first time. I thought for a while that some of them had begun to live up there, they descended upon my riding so much. But we heard from them that they had good ideas, if they were given the responsibility of office, on what to do with the economic picture.

I may ask hon. members, why was there not a bringing together of heads, so to speak, before the Christmas recess, before the depths of winter come upon us, in order to bring forward these measures that are designed to increase production and employment.

We see the statistics, and I am not one who likes to dwell with statistics, but we see the statistics show the same increase in unemployment as September moves into October, October to November, November to December. We see that perhaps there are not as many—now I want to keep to the facts—there are not as many gross number unemployed, but we see the same trend and it is safe to say that there are 100,000 in Ontario, men and women, many of them with families, many of them who cannot help but look at the future with stark anxiety.

Having been promised by this government that measures will be forthcoming, then I say why do they not bring forward these measures and have us pass them as we will gladly do, to assist these peoples? We will do anything on this side of the House in the spirit of unanimity and co-operation to better the lot of those who through the fortunes of economy, through no fault of their own, must face the future with a great deal of anxiety and despair.

Now to go on with this, paragraph 5, and I will just pick them out at random:

An accelerated programme of highways, parks and economic development in northern Ontario.

I imagine that is the contribution of the new hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay)—economics and everything, the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) says—because he was in Sudbury a great many times during that campaign, or several times. He came up there and he had a great deal to say about his programme for northern Ontario and what he would do for us and we gladly welcomed him. I do not think a great many of the delegates from Sudbury trusted him because they all voted for the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), including the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle).

I suppose it means an accelerated programme of highways and I suppose it means that I am finally going to get the road link from Sudbury to Timmins. I welcome it. I am going to get it? Nay, indeed, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, it is in his riding, and he has faithfully supported this government since his first election in 1955 and he has asked for it with me. I presumed to lend my voice to his, to ask for it and I expect when the capital programme of highways is introduced after the new year, that a sort of belated Christmas present will come to him and to me.

Then Sudbury—of which I am not going to say much tonight—then Sudbury really will begin to be the true capital of the north. I have said before that Sudbury now is balanced entirely on an east-west axis, Highway 17. It has more contacts and more commercial intercourse with southern Ontario than it does with that vast hinterland full of riches to the north of it. In the order of things Sudbury ought to expand its influence in an economic way to infiltrate commercially into that great area, as we have been unable to do up to this time.

I turn now to rather a unique sentence and if you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, being a student of literature I want to read you a sentence and then I want you to bear with me while I analyze it, parse it, I think is the word, and I would like any hon. members of the House to get their pencils out and follow this. This will be an interesting experience in the field of literature:

My government is aware that there is no easy solution to our difficulties, or that it can provide some magic formula which, if taken in sufficient doses, would cause them to disappear.

Now, sir, that sentence is made up of two clauses, two subordinate clauses, each with their conjunction and each with their verb. It is fair, sir, in analyzing a sentence to read the sentence as if one of the clauses were not in, in order to understand the meaning of the other one, so let us read this sentence in that way.

I am going to leave one of the clauses out and here is what it says:

My government is aware that it can provide some magic formula which if taken in sufficient doses would cause them to disappear.

That is what it says. Now I would never believe for a moment, sir, having heard His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor on many occasions, that he could have been the author of such a sentence as that. But I must presume—and I have been told, I did not see him write it—but I must presume that the leader of the government wrote this speech and he was so imbued with the success of October 24, at Varsity Arena that he said: "I won that, now I have got it and I will tell the people of Ontario about it." Or it could be, it might be, that the magic formula is the hon. gentleman who sits to his right.

We cannot help but welcome that such a characteristic now attends the legislative halls of this province. They will begin to produce it, we move toward the Utopia. I suppose even in the by-elections of January 18 we might expect to meet some of this magic. We have not seen it yet but no doubt it is being kept for that occasion.

Now I want to turn and say a word to the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), the Chief Commissioner of the Liquor Control Board. I am not asking any questions of which he can take notice at all—like my hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. Troy). I am going to give him the facts on two transactions, and nothing but the facts.

I think it is safe to say that the great fountain of patronage in this government is in the Liquor Control Commission.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I never said any such thing and I have not time to stop and argue with you tonight, though I would be delighted to do so.

One of the methods of granting patronage in the Liquor Control Commission—a method of which, for reasons which will become apparent, I heartily disapprove and which I condemn, and I would want to be part of no government which carries on this racket—is granting a right to the individual to build a liquor store and then rent the property back to the Liquor Control Board.

In order to get that right you cannot be just an ordinary Tory, you have got to be one of the brass—you have got to demonstrate your devotion to the Conservative Party above and beyond the call of duty of ordinary mortals.

In the town of Capreol, a little community 20 miles north of Sudbury, the liquor store was built in 1957 by a person—I am not going to name him, I like the man, I do not condemn him—a well-known Tory in the Sudbury district. I said that you had to go above and beyond the call of duty. Well, sir, you do. During the last election campaign this man used his private aircraft to fly the hon. member for Nickle Belt (Mr. Belisle) into the hinterland, in the back concessions, in the lumber camps. He flew him around during the election campaign—at his own expense, I presume. The results—I must say, to our great chagrin—of his devotion and his efforts made on behalf of the Tory Party were very effective. The hon. member for Nickle Belt won by some 453 votes only, but we have got our eye on him. Maybe next time—maybe, you never know—we will have an aircraft, too.

This man, sir, who comes from a community to the west of Sudbury—he is not in my riding, he cannot vote against me—was granted the right to build the liquor store in Capreol. He purchased the land in 1956 for $2,500. He entered a lease with the Liquor Control Board for 10 years on July 31, 1957. The rent payable by the Liquor Control Board is $4,380, payable at $365 a month, there is a five-year renewal at a rent to be determined, and if it is not determined between the parties, then by arbitration. $4,380 a year.

I have had my contracting friends take a look at the building and tell me what they think it would cost to build it. The estimates range from $25,000 to $30,000 to build the building. He paid $2,500 for the land, sir. Let us take the maximum figure; if he spent $30,000 to build the building, his investment is somewhere around $35,000. He is getting $4,300 back a year. The building will be paid for in the ten years of the lease. He will own the building, and then, presumably, the liquor store—they do not often move—will continue to operate in those premises. From then on—if I may lapse into the vernacular—he is in clover.

To you, sir, and to the hon. members, I must confess my own part because I would not want to mislead the hon. members in any way. I was approached by a group last year in Sudbury asking me if it would be possible to make representations to the Liquor Control Board to get them the right to put up a store, or rent them premises in a shopping plaza that they were building in the section of Sudbury known as New Sudbury—the rapidly expanding residential area to the north. On their behalf I made some inquiries and introduced them to the late chairman of the Liquor Control Board. He told me the type of material he wanted to have from them. I never at any time appeared before the board on their behalf. I never prepared any brief or made any presentation. My services were confined entirely to arranging an interview with the late chairman. Certainly they had my best wishes. May I add, sir, that I was not paid one cent for any of those services.

Until shortly before the death of the late chairman the group was still negotiating with him. I am positive in my own mind that no conclusion had been given to the disposition or the placement of a store in that area at the time of the chairman's death.

About a month following his death, the chamber of commerce invited the hon. member for Nickel Belt and myself over to a luncheon, to give a report on the affairs of the legislative session just ended. Lo and behold, to my utter amazement, during his address to the chamber of commerce the hon. member for Nickel Belt—having eaten their food as I did—announced to them that a liquor store would be located on LaSalle Boulevard and Ojay Street, about a mile to the east of the location being negotiated by this other group.

I may say, sir, there would be many in Sudbury who would be inclined to agree with me that great argument could be made—I am not going to make it now—that the location of the store in the unsuccessful people's place would have served a larger number of people more readily, with greater facility, than the present location. However, those are the fortunes of war.

I was particularly interested because, in the case of Capreol, I did not see why the Liquor Control Board should go outside the town of Capreol and allow a faithful Tory henchman—one of the brass—to come in there and build the store. I thought they should at least inquire in that small community of some 2,500 souls whether there was someone who had the lands and finances to reap the benefit of the largesse of that important government department. I thought that was wrong. But, after all, we live in one province.

After they started building the store at LaSalle Boulevard and Ojay Street I was curious about who these people were. I discovered that the owner of the land and the lessor to the Liquor Control Board is Sanron Developments Limited, incorporated under The Corporations Act by letters patent May 21, 1959. It has not surrendered its charter. The president is Kenenth Laverne McCormick, 1204 Sherwood Trail, Sarnia; the treasurer is his wife, Georgina Maude McCormick; the vice-president is Helen Vera Rankin of Sarnia; the secretary is Daniel William Rankin, the husband of the vice-president, also of Sarnia. The four of them are from as far away as Sarnia.

Apparently these people—and I have nothing to say about them at all, are a group of young people engaged in the building business—were invited to participate in the magnanimity of the Liquor Control Board by a well-known Conservative of Sudbury by the name of Short—Lloyd Short.

Lloyd Short had been away from our fair city, carrying on the business of realtor in Sarnia or Point Edward where he was president of the local Tory organization for a period of time. I do not know how many years. Shortly before he got this agreement from the Liquor Control Board he had moved back to Sudbury and opened the business of realtor there. One of the interesting things about this transaction—and I just lay the facts before the House—was that they paid $24,000 for the land. Now, those who are more familiar with these things than I, tell me that the value of that land on that specific site ought to be something between $4,000 and $7,000. It is interesting to know why they paid what seems to be an inflated value for the land. They paid $24,000 for the land. They purchased it from Robert Blais.

Then they took out a mortgage with the Lambton Loan and Investment in Sarnia for $80,000. That mortgage is payable at $638.90 per month. The lease is dated September 26, 1961, for 15 years and the rent payable from the Liquor Control Board is $11,895 a year, payable at $991.25 a month. Also included in this is an option to renew for five years.

A little bit of mathematics—and the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay) is more facile in economics than I am—will show that in 15 years they will get back about $165,000. They will have that land and building paid for and then they too—like the flyer from Waters who took a flyer with the Liquor Control Board in Capreol—they too will be in clover.

I merely set that out to show the type of thing that goes on, and how this government—as of one of the devices to sustain itself in power—farms out this largesse and this patronage, with your money and mine, sir, from the public treasury. Those are the facts. Perhaps the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) when looking up the answers to the questions asked by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) might give us a word of explanation with respect to these matters.

One of the things that has occurred in the House that is of great moment—perhaps of greatest moment and importance—during this session, was the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) delivered on November 29. I am not going to refer to that. But a very curious thing, in my view, a very significant thing—I shall try to develop the significance of it—occurred afterwards. One or two days after he had made his speech, a fellow who might aptly be named “Million-dollar Joe Ryan” made certain statements in the press; the hon. leader of the Opposition had named him in his speech together with a gentleman by the name of Cradock.

Ryan became very voluble when the reporters phoned him and he made certain statements. The reporters also phoned the chairman of the Securities Commission, an agency directly responsible to the chief author of all of this misfortune, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). They asked Mr. Lennox, the chairman of the Securities Commission, "What about this statement that Mr. Wintermeyer has made about Cradock and Ryan?"

The hon. leader of the Opposition had said nothing more, I think, than that Cradock and Ryan had very bad records with the Securities Commission—rather an innocuous and unimportant statement in itself; it does not attach anything in the way of criminality, opprobrium or censure to the gentlemen. Mr. Lennox said, "Never heard of them—never heard of Cradock or Ryan". Lo and behold, two or three days later, Mr. Ryan—"Million-dollar Joe Ryan," who has a penchant for the press and reporters, and they are all engaging young men—began to tell them that he and Cradock were expelled from three stock exchanges in this country, for some misconduct, some failure, some neglect, some misdemeanor. I think there are only three stock exchanges, at least in eastern Canada. Three had expelled them.

It makes one wonder, sir; who knows more about the running of the stock exchanges or the Securities Commission—Ryan or Mr. Lennox? Perhaps Ryan knows more about it; perhaps Ryan ought to be the chairman of the Securities Commission. He is more alive to developments. That leads me back to certain remarks that I made two years ago in this House—unlike the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) I do not read old speeches to the hon. members; the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) has a flair for that, too.

I said at that time, that the stockateers—those who thought they had letters of mark, so to speak, the pirates on Bay Street—did more to give this country a bad reputation in foreign lands, and particularly the United States of America, than any other single group in the country. They were our worst advertisement. Defrauding and mulcting innocents abroad, as they do, they carry their wiles and their fraud into the far corners of the United States—selling their fraudulent paper on moose pasture in Ontario, Quebec, the Northwest Territory, Baffin or Ellesmere.

It has a serious vein to it, and I complained, and I complain again to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario Securities Commission is not an effective instrument; it is anything but. It is not an instrument of government to control these people. If, sir, you will glance through The Securities Act itself, you will see, as far as the affairs and stock exchanges are concerned—and that is where the activities take place—I never owned a share of stock in my life, sir. The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) would condemn me for that because I will not take a risk like a great many other Canadians. But then, I am an hon. member of this House. If you look, as I do every day, you will see Lake Dufault fluctuating at $1.30, $1.50, either way, every day.

I remember when I was a boy; you see, I grew up in Cobalt, in a mining town that suffered a great deal from the operations of these privateers, and as early as my mind will take me back, I remember these people coming into Cobalt, and remember my father at the supper table talking about these Bay Street promoters: They are coming in and they are going to develop the Coniagas property, or they are going to do something with the Nipissing property, or there is something going to happen on the O'Brien property; all of these closed down.

I could picture in my mind's eye, these people from the south—as a boy, like most other northern boys, I could always picture somebody from Toronto; they were different, a different breed of people. They would come up in their new canvas khaki coats and their high-top leather boots, and their breeks, and you could tell by looking at them (a) that they were mining promoters, and (b) they were from Toronto. And I always got the impression that they drank a better grade of whiskey than my father did.

They would come into town, go around looking at the property, decide they were going to do this, they were going to do that; there would be a flurry on the market, the Toronto Stock Exchange, but nothing would ever happen. Now that is a generation ago. The same thing goes on and we could name the stocks in the previous years.

Do you remember Beaulieu—and any number like it—went up in terms of dollars and then plummeted, and people lost a fortune? Indeed it is only some three months ago, when the flurry started with Lake Dufault, that a man from Sudbury started to sell it short at 70 cents—I hope I do not offend his widow, when I mention this; it is a terrible thing. He sold some 14,000 shares short on the market, it went up to $5 or $6, and he did not have the money to cover and that poor wretched individual who thought he was going to make a quick killing went down one day into his basement and took a rifle and destroyed himself. Living in the north I have seen other people like that, I have seen people with nervous breakdowns as the result of getting into the stock market. The reason is that there are people in the stock market on Bay Street who do not care if they ever bring a mine into production. They do not care if they ever bring a mill. They do not care if they ever sink a shaft. All they want to do is to rally the market; to boil it down. Those who go to horse races are condemned—like the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Hanna) and myself who go two or three times a season.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): That is why the hon. member has no money left for bonds.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister condemns those. The gambling on Bay Street is much the same as that and one need look no further to see the difficulty than in the Toronto Globe and Mail of a couple of days ago, where General Graham complained about these very types of individual. He said that they are ruining the honest operation of the Toronto Stock Exchange and he said that they are giving Canada an exceedingly bad name abroad.

I say that the only answer is that this government—or when we come to power we will do it, at least I will attempt to persuade the leader of the government to arm the securities commission with sufficient power to deal with these people, to give the securities commission power to go into the Exchange and control it. Because this body, this little club, this club that operates down there under the name of Toronto Stock Exchange, a bastion of free enterprise, wants no interference from government.

Government interferes in lots of less important areas of the economy, and controls and directs; and the Toronto Stock Exchange, I say to you, sir, or any other stock exchange operating in this province is no sacred institution if the people can perpetrate their machinations to the expense of both the economy and the good name of our country.

Just to mention another one to draw a comparison—no, I will not, I do not want to extend my remarks too long.

Hon. members: Thank you.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. members are welcome.

I wanted to say a word about labour, sir. We on this side of the House indeed welcome the decision of the Chief Justice of the High Court made today. I take it it has not yet been appealed, sir, so the matter is not sub judice and is not a matter awaiting a judicial decision. I studied and scanned the press tonight to see whether the notice of appeal had been filed and Sir Erskine May says, sir, that until a notice of appeal is filed the matter may be properly commented upon in the legislative hall.

I, among many others, sir, thought that Magistrate Elmore was wrong in his decision, though I could understand as a lawyer how he could arrive at that decision.

This matter of the Royal York strike, commented on earlier by the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) in somewhat flamboyant and excessive language, is not far removed from what is wrong at the present time with all of the labour picture in this country. And one reads, sir—I pick up an editorial from a newspaper that does not ordinarily say nice things about unions, The Financial Post—and they say, and I do not know whether they have tongue in cheek or whether they are being smug or patronizing, but they reflect on the fact that there has been a steady decline in the number of trade unionists in Canada: 401,447 at the beginning of 1961, and 401,459 in 1960. It is only a drop of some 12,000 but it is significant of the decline that has been going on for a number of years.

I am one who will say, sir, and I do not hold myself out to be any authority whatsoever on why there should be a decline, but I give it as a matter of opinion that one of the reasons for the decline and one of the reasons for the loss of prestige of trade unions is that trade union leaders, sir, are not content to act solely in that capacity, but in this day and age they prefer to be politicians. It seems they are more concerned with wresting control of the state, getting themselves elected to public office, than they are in promoting the welfare of the rank and welfare of the trade union. I think that is a fair statement.

Somebody reflected in this House last year how the British trade union congress was thinking of divorcing itself entirely from the British Labour party, and what a pitiable thing it is. May I say, in parentheses, sir, in order to lay a proper foundation for my remarks, that I am a union lawyer. I act for Local 598 of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers—at least I have up to now, they have not taken away my letters patent yet—but I have acted for them and I have been very pleased to do so.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is short lived.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, the hon. member says it is short lived. I am afraid it will be if David Lewis comes in there; he will not want to share his $50,000 a year with me. But I am content; there is always another case.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): How does the hon. member know what he gets?

Mr. Sopha: There is always another case. I have been very pleased, I say, sir, to act on the side of a union. It is the type of work I like to do; it is a fascinating field of the law.

Who can help but believe, sir, who can help but believe that when the trade union executive goes into a government office, goes into the chambers where government policy is decided, and asks the government to do something for him, that the man in control, the man who has the responsibility of power, the man who has been elected to public office, who is himself a politician, striving to be a statesman, but who sits on one side of the desk, asks this trade union executive on the other side in what capacity, in which one of his roles, has he come? Has he come to visit as the voice and agent, the steward of the trade union who elected him, or has he come as a politician?

It is difficult to discern in the minds of those responsible for government just what capacity he is in; because he knows that if he accedes to the requests on behalf of the labour movement or on behalf of the trade union then it will not be long until that trade union executive is out of his office on a public platform, on the hustings, and he is abusing and vilifying the person charged with political responsibility.

Down at Ottawa, the Prime Minister of this country laid it down, sir, as one of the planks of his programme, that he would in all government wards and commissions give labour a fair opportunity, give them their share of the seats, that he would appoint them to such councils; and we have seen what Mr. Diefenbaker has done in recent months and recent years. When the vacancies occurred he passed over the trade unionist nominee. Take the case of the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Bryden: And it was certainly cheap politics when he did it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, he did it, and I suggest to the hon. member that Mr. Diefenbaker is thinking in terms that these people are not really representatives of the trade union movement.

Mr. Bryden: They have been elected to that. Who is he to say?

Mr. Sopha: One of the politicians, and I am not sure that I accord with this, one of the politicians sits on the labour relations board in Ontario, in the person of Mr. Archer. We in this party say, what kind of a board is that getting to be? My friends to the left here, they talk about their right to be heard.

Mr. Bryden: Are there no politics on that board? What is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Sopha: What about our rights? That labour relations board right now is made up of Conservative appointees and New Democratic appointees.

Mr. Bryden: We appointed no one. They got there on their merits.

Mr. Sopha: Why do they not have Liberals on it, we might ask?

Mr. MacDonald: There are no good Liberals.

Mr. Sopha: And I fear, sir, and let me sum up with this—my hon. friends can stand anything but the truth—there will be a continuing decline in trade union membership, and loss of strength of the trade union movement, until such time as trade union executives get back to a realization that they were elected to promote the welfare of the rank and file of the union movement.

That is all I am going to say, sir, that may be found to be provocative to my hon. friends to the left. I am not going to do any such thing. Let them run for public office, sir, let them run. But I say to them, if they want to run for public office, lay down the duties and the responsibilities of leaders of the trade union movement.

Mr. Bryden: Nonsense. They run for office in the union if they get elected.

Mr. Sopha: Let us not be schizophrenic. A man can do only one job well—be a politician or be a steward of the union. Let these people come to Sudbury and try to change the voting habits. I challenge them to a contest if they come; take it at the drop of a hat.

The House has been very indulgent with me to this time—generally speaking, the House has been very indulgent with me. There are some exceptions. However, I am going to embark on the final part of my remarks and I am going to say something which is very serious—very serious indeed.

Mr. Bryden: Well, nothing up to now has been serious.

Mr. Sopha: Would the hon. member kindly shut up.

I want to lay the proper background, sir. I am going to make some observations of fact about an hon. member of this House. I want it clearly understood that I am not making any charges. I am going to lay the facts before this House, sir, and I am going to let the facts speak for themselves. And I think those statements of facts, documented as they are—and I have the documents before me—will call for an inquiry by the government of the conduct of this hon. member and an explanation and a disclosure whether one of the important statutes of this province has been broken.

I will in fact call for an inquiry as to whether that hon. member has a continuing right to sit in this House. As I say, I am not making any charges. I do not know the answer, but I think as a result of what I show to this House, that it will be incumbent upon the government to investigate the matter fully and, if he has a right to sit in this House, that they assure all hon. members of this House, and in fact the people of this province the basis for that right.

I take you back, sir, some 13 years ago, to the Mississagi fire which occurred in the summer of 1948 and burnt a large area, several hundred thousand, if not millions, of acres of very fertile forest area in the district of Algoma. That district, though I do not claim to have a great familiarity with it, the district in that area contained a large growth of timber saw-logs which had reached a very advanced stage and were ready for logging operations. The then hon. Minister of Lands and Forests, when he described that fire to the House during the session of 1949—as I say that fire occurred in 1948—said this:

At the present time we have approximately 60 million feet of logs in the water and before the break-up comes we are hoping to have it up to about 70 million feet. This portion is that which was most seriously hit. [He is speaking of hit by fire]. We will carry on these operations in areas wherein the trees were slightly scarred but not damaged, and then we will have left small isolated patches of green timber, which was not hurt at all but still cannot justify an operator going in later and setting up camps. We anticipate we will have between 150 million and 200 million feet before we are finished.

Now I take it that he is referring there to salvage, to the amount of timber that could be salvaged from that operation.

I do not pretend to know what the policy of the government was. I have studied the journal and I have studied the debate to ascertain what the policy of the government was at that time, in getting this timber out, salvaging it, but apparently they were content for private persons to go in there and do this work and they—apparently, I say, I do not know for sure—but apparently the government found a market for these saw-logs or at least someone had been to the government and had made representations to the government wherein they would purchase the saw-logs.

I do not know how many different operators were given the right by the government to carry on this salvage operation. That is among the questions that remain unanswered. I do know the identity of one company that carried on that operation and was paid a vast sum of money by the government for that. And indeed, not only paid a vast sum of money by the government for the delivery of saw-logs but was paid advances from the government. The government of this province advanced money to this outfit for the purpose of taking pulpwood out, and I think that is very unusual, that they should say to a group: "We'll give you the money to carry on your operation".

I think, even in the face of the economy at that time, that if it were profitable people would come forward, experienced in the branch of forest industry, and be able to put up their own capital. That is one of the things that needs explanation.

Against that background, I want to place the facts before the House. As I say again, sir, I make no charges at all. No man can get up and say that I am insinuating anything. I feel it is my duty to put these things before the House. I do it with a non-contrite heart and I do it with the assurance that it is the exercise of duty because I remember only too well—and let me give this added bit of background—there are those who sit here with me who were here before me and remember the aspersions, the slander, the innuendo, the defamation, of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) when he was alleged to have done something wrong; and what he did was peanuts, nothing. They took it out on him. Against that background and knowing what will happen in this House I am absolutely unashamed to put these facts before the House.

I have before me a photostat of a true copy of Instrument No. 1724—and you will forgive me, sir, if I read these in detail—registered in the registry office for the district of Algoma on the 8th day of June, 1949; photostated on the 26th day of July, 1961, at the hour of 9.30 a.m., as witness my hand and seal of office (sgd) Viola Filipcic, Deputy Registrar of Deeds:

DECLARATION OF PARTNERSHIP
DISTRICT OF ALGOMA

We, Gerard Joncas, of the town of Thessalon, in the district of Algoma, contractor,

and

Luc Cote, of the same place, contractor,

and

John A. Fullerton, of the same place, merchant, hereby certify

1. That we have carried on and intend to carry on trade and business as timber contractors at the said town of Thessalon and at Rocky Island Lake to the north thereof in partnership under the name of Mantane Contracting company.

2. That the said partnership has subsisted since the 10th day of May, 1949.

3. That we are and have been since the said day the only members of the said partnership.

4. That we are each of the full age of 21 years.

Witness our hands and seals at Sault Ste. Marie, this 21st day of May, 1949.

Attached to that is an affidavit of execution of Elsie Bjorklund, the normal affidavit of execution, sworn on the 21st day of May, 1949, in which she says she knows all the subscribing parties, saw them sign, seal and execute the document.

Later the only other instrument registered in the registry office in Algoma in relation to this partnership is Declaration No. 1894, filed on the 31st of October, 1950, and it is a declaration of a change in partnership by Gerard Joncas and John A. Fullerton of their intention to carry on business as timber contractors at Thessalon and Rocky Island Lake as Mantane Contracting Company.

The said partnership is a continuation of the present one in relation to which a declaration was filed in Book P for partnerships for the district of Algoma on the 8th day of June, 1949, as No. 1724. The only change is that Luc Cote named therein has withdrawn from the partnership which has purchased the interest of the said Luc Cote. This change has been effective since September 1st, 1950.

The government of the province of Ontario paid to Mantane Contracting Company for salvage operations as a result of the Missisquoi fire the following amounts. I can prove these amounts, I can prove that these payments were made, sir. I want to read them all.

September 19, 1949	$ 2,013.52
October 11, 1949	6,565.44
November 21, 1949	10,249.34
November 24, 1949	2,850.22
December 9, 1949	6,335.34
January 6, 1950	31,913.77
January 10, 1950	7,455.37
January 16, 1950	6,939.54
January 21, 1950	21,712.65
February 10, 1950	44,091.06
March 2, 1950	54,273.75
March 14, 1950	13,561.53
April 19, 1950	15,220.57
June 1, 1950	9,000.00
June 14, 1950	4,363.87
August 25, 1950	1,409.76

The total, sir, paid by the government to Mantane Contracting Company during the time for which this agreement was in operation and in which the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) was an hon. member of this Legislature, and a partner in Mantane Contracting Company was $237,955.73.

In addition, sir, the government advanced to Mantane Contracting Company, the following amounts to be recovered from the sale of salvage pulpwood. This is the operation that I referred to earlier.

December 16, 1949	$42,135.66
January 27, 1950	35,223.23
February 24, 1950	38,370.01
September 6, 1950	45,000.00

—for a total of $160,728.90.

Contracts with Mantane Contracting Company were completed June 14, 1950 and August 25, 1950. Advances were refunded on October 20, 1951. Apparently the company sold this pulpwood that it had for salvage and repaid the government. As I say, I do not know why the government had to advance the money in the first place. It is one of the things that I think needs an explanation.

There is another interesting part to it. This man Joncas, his name is J. Gerard Joncas, comes from a place in Quebec by the name of Mantane. He, of course, is a partner with the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin in this company. There was a company named Mantane Logging Registered. That company is not registered in the registry office for the district of Algoma. I do not know if it is registered anywhere else in Ontario. I am informed that a partnership in the province of Quebec customarily has that form of title, the name of the company and the word "registered" after it. I have not searched in the province of Quebec to see if there is a registration as to who operates this company, Mantane Logging Registered. However, I draw this to your attention, the similarity of the names, the fact that this company was carrying on a similar operation in the same place, the fact that Joncas is a partner in Mantane Contracting Company. An additional fact is that the contracts were completed with Mantane Logging Registered August 25, 1950, the same day as the contracts were completed with Mantane Contracting Company. Therefore, there is a suggestion I say on those facts, and an inference to be drawn, that these companies, these two companies, are connected. I say that is a matter which should be the subject of an inquiry.

I am not going to go into the amounts that were paid, the specific amounts. I have them, sir, here. I am prepared to prove that they were paid. Between December 13, 1948 and August 25, 1950—and you will note sir, the similarity in the dates—the last payment to Mantane Contracting Company is August 25, 1950—the last payment to Mantane Logging Registered is August 25, 1950. The total amount between those two dates, December 13, 1948 and August 25, 1950, paid by the government of this province to Mantane Logging Registered, $1,039,293.40. So, in toto, sir, these two companies were paid a total of something approaching $1½ million.

Subsequently, sir, by letter dated November 28, 1950 from Messrs. McGuire, Boles & Worrall, barristers and solicitors of Toronto, addressed to R. J. Cudney, Companies Branch, Department of Provincial Secretary, Queen's Park, Toronto:

DEAR MR. CUDNEY:

Re Mantane Contracting Company Limited

I enclose Petition for Incorporation as Mantane Contracting Company Limited.

The owners of this Company at present are J. A. Fullerton, M.P.P., and J. G. Joncas, his partner.

We also enclose their cheque payable to the Provincial Treasurer for $210.52 to cover incorporation fee plus exchange. As their bank is at Thessalon we are unable to have the cheque marked by the bank before forwarding it to you.

I would be glad to discuss this Petition with you if there is anything which requires to be explained. The objects in this Petition are the same as in another company for which I obtained a charter a few years ago, and is required because of the several different lines of business this firm is now carrying on.

Yours sincerely,

(signed)

W. H. MCGUIRE.

Sent the next day, I believe, there was a document commonly known as a consent to use a name. In the matter of a pending application for incorporation, under The Ontario Companies Act, of the Mantane Contracting Company Limited:

We, John Arthur Fullerton, and Joseph Gerard Joncas, both of the village of Thessalon, in the district of Algoma and Province of Ontario, carrying on business at Thessalon, under the firm, name and style of Mantane Contracting Company, hereby consent to the name Mantane Contracting Company Limited being granted to the company, incorporation of which is being applied for by William Henry McGuire and others and to the use of the said name by said company.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 28th day of November, 1950.

JOHN ARTHUR FULLERTON, J. GERARD JONCAS.

Attached to that is an affidavit of Mary McHugh saying that she was personally present and saw John Arthur Fullerton and Joseph Gerard Joncas sign it, and she then said that she knows them, that she subscribed her hand as witness.

Then there is a letter of December 4, 1950, addressed to J. F. Sharpe, Esq., Timber Management Chief, Deputy Provincial Secretary, Department of Lands and Forests, Buildings:

DEAR FRANK,

Re: Mantane Contracting Company, Limited

This will confirm our telephone conversation of today relative to an application for incorporation of a company under the above name submitted through the office of Messrs. McGuire, Boles & Worrall, Barristers, Toronto.

The applicants for incorporation are: William Henry McGuire, James Arthur Boles and James Worrall, Barristers-at-Law; and Mary McHugh, Secretary; and Jessie Hunter, Stenographer; all of the city of Toronto.

The purposes and objects of the Company are, in brief,

(a) to carry on the business of lumbering and the lumber trade in all its branches, and all other business incidental thereto, including buying, selling and dealing in all kinds of sawed, squared and hewed lumber and timber, etc.;

(b) To carry on the business of general contractors and to enter into contracts for, construct, execute, own and carry on all description of works and to carry on for the purpose aforesaid the business of a general construction company, etc.;

(c) To act as carriers, truckmen, cartage agents, etc.; and (d) to (l) inclusive. The head office is to be in the village of Thessalon, in the province of Ontario.

I understand that you have no objection to the granting of letters patent herein.

Yours very truly,
(signed)
R. J. CUDNEY.

Then there is a letter of December 4, same day as that letter to Mr. Sharpe:

Toronto 2.
December 4.

DEAR SENATOR MCGUIRE,

Re: Mantane Contracting Company, Limited

This will confirm our telephone conversation of today relative to the above application for incorporation.

The material is in order and we are proceeding in the matter. The letters patent is being engrossed as of November 29, 1950.

Enclosed, please find receipt for cheque in the sum of $210.52 covering the department fee herein.

Yours very truly,
(signed)
R. J. CUDNEY,
Deputy Provincial Secretary.

Then there is a letter of March 21, 1951, addressed to McGuire, Boles and Worrall, Barristers, etc., 1315-20 Montreal Trust Building, 67 Yonge Street, Toronto.

DEAR SIR,

*Re: Mantane Contracting Company
Limited C-63102*

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 16, 1951, enclosing return of change of directors for the above company and the sum of $2.00 to cover fee for filing, receipt for which is enclosed.

Please be advised that such return has been filed in this office as of March 19, 1951.

The directors at the time of that notice of change of directors were the following: E. A. Charlton of Muskegan, Michigan; R. D. Terrien of the same place; J. A. Fullerton of Thessalon; J. G. Joncas of Thessalon; James Worrall of Toronto.

I wish to make two observations. First is that the application, the petition for incorporation, went from the offices of McGuire, Boles and Worrall, on November 28, 1950. Everything had been done, complete, in the Provincial Secretary's office by December 4, six days later, including an inquiry which had been made of the district forester at Thessalon. This is very unusual. Unusual indeed.

The engrossing date of that company was given as November 29, a day after, the day after the original petition. It took only six days to get this company through.

Normally, today, it takes about something like six or eight weeks, two months to get it through. Maybe ten years ago it took a lesser amount of time, but I doubt whether ten years ago, when I was not in the practice of law, that it could be done in six days. However, this company was formed in that time.

The second observation that I wish to make, was that when the government was first asked—inquiry was directed to the government at that time—whether any contracts had been entered into with Mantane Contracting Company, and any amounts paid under any contract of any description, the reply of the government was "No." There was none.

Then, sometime later, a month later, the government suddenly discovered that contracts had been entered into to the extent as I pointed out, of $237,955.73 that had been paid to the company; plus an advance of $160,728.90.

The government made two answers; and I am prepared to prove this. They had first denied that any contracts had been entered into, and any amounts had been paid. Then a month later, I am not sure that it is a month, but it is some appreciable time later, they suddenly discovered—and the Minister of Lands and Forests at that time divulged that, as I have pointed out—monies had been paid.

The government was also asked whether any contracts had been entered into with Mantane Contracting Company Limited, and the answer was "No." And I merely cite this, bring forth this material, to show the incorporation of this company.

I am prepared to demand, sir, that investigation be made to determine whether any contracts were, in fact, entered into with the limited company of the same people, the same people as in the company registered under The Partnerships Registration Act. It gives the full picture.

Then I go on to say, sir, that the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin—who unfortunately is not in his seat, he was here earlier tonight—resigned from the company according to a return sent to The Department of the Provincial Secretary, of April 30, 1952, and it was said in that that he resigned from the company on October 16, 1951—J. Gerard Joncas, as well.

Just to complete the story, on March 12, 1958, the company was wound up, the letters patent were cancelled, and it was dissolved as of April 7, 1958.

However, sir, this registration in the registry office of Algoma, of June 8, 1949, still stands. There has been no declaration filed other than the one I cited that Luc Cote had withdrawn from the partnership.

What is the effect of all this? I must confess that I do not know. There is section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act. Any hon. member can read it at his leisure. There are certain exceptions and exemptions following section 9. In my opinion, if I were to give an opinion as a lawyer, none of the exemptions from the operation of section 9 operates. I just want to give an illustration, finally, of the operation of section 9; and fortuitously, very fortuitously—I hope you, Mr. Speaker, at least, will believe that it was fortuitous—I happen to have an opinion of the law officers of the Crown.

On June 22, 1961, sir, a young solicitor, I think he had graduated from law school either that year or the year previous, was employed in the office of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), and I do not care to give his name. Of course, we will give his name if it is demanded. I do not think his name is relevant. He is still working, so far as I know, in The Department of the Attorney-General. He telephoned my firm and I was not there. He spoke to one of my associates and he asked my associate to appear on a trial the next day, that was taking place in the district court of the district of Sudbury.

The name of the case was Lew against Casey. Casey was a defaulting defendant and he was defended by E. H. Silk, Q.C., solicitor to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree), representing the Unsatisfied Judgment Fund. This young solicitor asked my associate to appear on behalf of the hon. Minister of Transport at the trial of the case on June 23. He confirmed that to my associate by letter of June 26, 1961. On July 5 my associate reported to him the outcome of the trial in a lengthy letter.

Then I returned to the office and my associate drew to my attention, that he had received those instructions from The Department of the Attorney-General and he was aware, of course, of my position, and we had discussed my position so far as the strictures of The Legislative Assembly Act are concerned and he asked me about the account. I gave him certain instructions and as a result of those instructions he wrote this letter to The Department of the Attorney-General, July 25, 1961, re Casey ats Lew:

Thank you for your letter of July 18, 1961, and for the kind sentiments expressed therein, and we do appreciate the opportunity of having been of some service. By the terms of section 9, The Legislative Assembly Act it is my impression that we cannot bill any fee in the matter of assistance which we may be to the Attorney-General and therefore there will of course be no account for our fees. We are wondering about the point of disbursements which are very minor in this matter and I was hoping you might speak to one of the law officers of the Crown who might advise whether or not he feels the matters of disbursements infringes section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act.

Again with thanks for your kind sentiments,

Yours very truly,

(signed)

EDWARD JAMES CONROY.

For those hon. members of the House who are not familiar with legal terminology I might say that the word "disbursements," as most hon. members will know and I do not intend to be presumptuous, means the amount of money that a lawyer spends on the prosecution of litigation.

On September 13, 1961, my associate Edward James Conroy received this letter from The Department of the Attorney-General:

DEAR SIR,

Re: Lew against Casey

On my return from holidays I find your letter of July 25, 1961, and answer. I have looked at section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act and you were quite right in raising the point of your fee in this matter with respect to this section, and I wish to say at this time that on June 22 when I instructed you to appear as our agents in the defence of this action in Sudbury I was unaware of this section of The Legislative Assembly Act and I failed at that time to realize the possible implications which you seem to have fully realized. I wish to assure you of my good faith on June 22 and of my continuing good faith.

With respect to your disbursements, I was speaking to the legislative counsel and it is his feeling that the section was never intended to rob you or your firm of monies advanced on behalf of the Crown which it would appear could be properly reimbursed to your firm without violating the provisions of section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act, but on the other hand legislative counsel will not and cannot give any assurance that a question would not be raised in the future which would certainly have an answer but which would certainly embarrass Mr. Sopha.

I regret this unfortunate turn of events and leave the decision up to you as to whether you will submit an account for your disbursements in this action.

Yours sincerely,

Then on October 24, 1961, having discussed it—just to complete the story—with my associate, he wrote this letter to The Department of the Attorney-General, re Casey ats Lew:

We have also gone over The Legislative Assembly Act and it seems to us that disbursements are not considered in the section of that Act applicable so we enclose to you at this time a list of our disbursements herein.

Yours very truly,

The disbursements of our firm in that letter were the following:

Paid for subpoena	$ 2.00
Paid service of subpoena	10.50
Total disbursements	12.50

That was a case where we had spent—and this may amuse the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), but I am showing by way of analogy the difficulty that legislative counsel have in interpreting that section—here we had spent our money, $12.50, a very minor amount; I do not care if I ever get it back. We probably will.

Legislative counsel, sir, were unwilling to say, they were unwilling to say that paying me back the money I had spent on behalf of the Crown did not infringe the section. Then what of the half a million dollars that the Crown has paid out—not money advanced by the person at all—the Crown has paid out to the account of a member of this assembly?

Now, how comes this to me? I am not going to give any names, but it comes to me from people who reside in the area, who have been aware of this for ten years; aware that a member of this assembly was connected with a company which did business with the Crown, and did a large amount of business and got a large amount of money. Is there anything more calculated to shake public confidence in the elected representatives of this assembly than that a member of this assembly enters into a contract with the Crown with such vast sums of money?

If there be—and I am not saying there is, sir, I am not making any allegations of fact—I say if there be a connection between Mantane Logging Registered and Mantane Contracting Company, if there be, and there is some similarity and some grounds for suspicion, then the sum is $1.5 million that is involved.

I do not know how much of that is profit, I do not know how fortuitously the business was carried on by these people. We are entitled to presume that they are economic men guided by good business principles, and $1.5 million is a vast amount of money. I venture to say and I give it as my opinion as a solicitor of the Supreme Court and in safety I give it, I will venture as my opinion that there has been an infraction of section 9.

I certainly venture it as my opinion that a member of this assembly has benefited while a member of it, and the amount of money is so vast that I submit, sir, and I submit with assurance, and I submit on behalf of those in that district who are aware of it and have been aware of it for ten years—and now the whole of the people of the province will be aware of it—that it calls for an explanation. It calls for an inquiry by the government to show whether there is just cause and whether there is a reasonable explanation why such vast sums of money should be paid by the government to a firm which contains a member of this assembly.

We on this side are concerned—we are entitled to be concerned—that the honour of this assembly be upheld; and if I advert to the facts again, the hon. members on the other side of the House, at one time in yesteryear, were concerned about the honour of the members of the assembly, and did not hesitate to say so in no uncertain terms, about a matter that pales into insignificance compared to this.

I leave it at that. Let me say in finality, in case there be those who have not heard me straight the first time: I make no charges, I make no charges at all. There are the facts. It is incumbent upon those who lead the province to give an explanation of them. I rest my case upon that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member answer a question? My question is: I am sure the hon. member's knowledge of parliamentary law and rules is far more than my own, but is he aware that out of courtesy to this House and courtesy to the hon. members thereof—for a matter such as he has just referred to, to be referred to the committee of privileges and elections of this House—that the hon. member should not make such statements unless he can come out with something other than innuendoes and insinuations?

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn, is the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) going to refer this to the committee on elections and privileges?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will investigate these matters. I have not heard of them before this evening. I had no idea that any of these matters had occurred. They occurred before my time in this Legislature. I will examine these matters very carefully and decide what course of action the government will take.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I might say that tomorrow morning we will have some third readings and I will ask the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to wait upon us and give Royal assent to certain bills that have been passed during the session.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.03 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1961

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from York Memorial Secondary School, Toronto.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Roberts moves, seconded by Hon. A. K. Roberts, that when this House adjourns the present day's sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until a day to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have two questions I would like to ask. The first one I gave notice of a short time ago, I do not know whether the liquor commissioner has received it or not. It is in the nature of a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy). To make the question intelligible I want to read briefly from the November 23 issue of the Smiths Falls Record News.

In it is a story of a recent meeting of the Smiths Falls Progressive-Conservative Association and the election of D. M. Code as the president of it. The story contains the following two paragraphs:

D. M. Code announced that there were 13 applications received to fill a vacancy at the local L.C.B.O. outlet. However, Mr. Gomme said that he has never been officially notified of the vacancy, but had learned unofficially that it would not be filled until after the first of the year.

A committee comprising G. B. Swayne, J. C. Clark and W. E. Bennett was set up to interview the applicants when the vacancy is officially announced. This committee will report its selection to Mr. Gomme who in turn will make the necessary recommendation to the board in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to ask the liquor commissioner, the hon. Minister without portfolio (Mr. Grossman). The first one: is the procedure outlined in that quotation from the Smiths Falls Record News the authorized procedure for hirings in the L.C.B.O.? Second: if it is not the authorized procedure, can the liquor commissioner give the House the assurance that this procedure of a committee of the local Conservative association, acting in the capacity of an employment agency for the L.C.B.O., will forthwith come to an end so that recruiting for the L.C.B.O. will be done through the authorized channels of the civil service commission?
